Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as I understand, the senior Senator from Colorado has consented to have the unfinished business laid aside temporarily. I, therefore, from the Committee on Appropriations report the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1458) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the motion of the Senator from Colorado to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3398, relating to an Air Corps technical school.

Mr. KING. Another parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Has the measure which the senior Senator from Colorado desires to present been made the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote has not been taken on the motion. That is the pending motion.

The junior Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may that be done with the understanding that I have been recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; but the Chair will recognize the Senator if he continues to stand. Is there objection to the request of the junior Senator from Colorado?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General appropriations—Legislative", on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SENATE

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, fiscal year 1936, $100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for services, personal, professional, or otherwise, in excess of the rate of $3,600 per annum: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

FISCAL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 23, and I was about to ask the Senator from Colorado if he would not yield to me to report this resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if that is to be done, I wish to make a very brief statement before action is taken upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was unable to hear the request of the Senator from Oklahoma, there is so much noise and confusion among Senators who persist in carrying on conversations to the interruption of the business of the Senate. The Senator will state his request again.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, this morning the Senate Finance Committee authorized a favorable report on Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 23. In regular course, it would have to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I was authorized to report the resolution, which I therefore now ask unanimous consent to do, with the further request that it be immediately referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall not interpose objection to the reference of the resolution, but I wish to say to the Senate, in all frankness, that I think the time has passed when we can give deliberate consideration to the purposes of the concurrent resolution. It really involves one of the most significant investigations which could be made by the Congress. It involves the question of whether or not it is possible under existing economic conditions to bring the Budget of the United States into balance. It carries an authorization for an appropriation of $50,000 to the committee to be created.

In my opinion that will not be sufficient properly to carry out the purposes of the resolution.

In the second place, in view of the long session of Congress, I very much doubt the ability of the members of the committee to meet and consider during the adjournment, between now and the meeting of Congress in January, all the important questions which are involved. However, let it be said that I am not opposed to the resolution going to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate for consideration by that committee. I desire to say that in my opinion, even if the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate should report the resolution, it would be impossible for the committee to be created under the resolution to submit a report within the time designated by the resolution itself. Therefore, as an individual Member of the Senate, I believe that the whole question should be laid over until the next session of the Congress.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken as to the date when the contemplated report is to be made. This resolution does not call for a report until February 28, 1937. For the RECORD, I should like to have the resolution reported. It will take only a moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to say, Mr. President, that all of my remarks concerning this resolution are predicated upon the assumption that it will be impossible to secure the active participation of the various members of the standing committees of the House and Senate in this very important investigation between the time of the adjournment of the present session of Congress and the meeting of the next session of Congress, and therefore, in my opinion, the adoption of the resolution at this late stage in the proceedings of the Congress is a futile gesture. Furthermore, the requirement contained in the resolution that the report must be made in February is futile, because, assuming the premise of my contention that it would be impossible for the committee to report between the adjournment of this Congress and the commencement of the next, my contention is that 1 month's time is too short for the committee to report back.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the resolution calls for a report February 1937, a year and a half from now, and if the Senator does not object I should like to have the resolution stated in view of the discussion. It will take but a moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall not object to the request of the Senator to report the resolution and to refer it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I wish to insist that in my view it is perfectly futile for the Congress or the Senate to adopt this resolution at this late date in its proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the resolution will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. I should like to have the resolution read in view of the discussion which has taken place. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that the resolution be read. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Con. Res. 23), as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of 10 Senators and 10 Members of the House of Representatives. Such committee shall consist of the Chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses, the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, the Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, and four members of each such standing committees, to be appointed by the respective chairmen of such standing committees. The committee is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study of the present fiscal system of the United States and to submit a report to the two Houses of Congress on or before February 28, 1937, recommending (1) such legislation as it may deem necessary or advisable to place such fiscal system on a sounder and more scientific basis, and (2) such changes in the revenue laws as will effectuate a more equitable distribution of the burdens of taxation and such increases in taxation based primarily on ability to pay, together with such decreases and retrenchments in public expenditure as will ultimately and at the earliest practicable date bring revenues and expenditures into balance.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to referring Senate Resolution No. 23 to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission", on page 4, line 23, after the word "fiscal", to strike out "year 1936" and insert "years 1936 and 1937", so as to read:

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

For carrying out the provisions of the act approved August 15, 1935, entitled "An act to amend the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928", fiscal years 1936 and 1937, $40,000: Provided, That no part of such sum shall be available until the land to be improved therewith has been acquired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "District of Columbia", on page 8, after line 4, to insert:

Salaries and expenses, United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia: For five law clerks (one for each justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia) at $2,500 per annum each, from October 1, 1935, to June 30, 1936, $9,375.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 9, to insert:

Smoke regulation and control: For personal services, equipment, instruments, supplies, transportation, and other contingent expenses, necessary for the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to prevent the fouling of the atmosphere in the District of Columbia by smoke and other foreign substances, and for other purposes", approved August 15, 1935, fiscal year 1936, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 16, to insert:

Assistance against old-age want, District of Columbia: To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia in relation to providing assistance against old-age want", approved August —, 1935, including not to exceed $10,000 for personal services and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1936, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert:

Pensions for needy blind persons, District of Columbia: To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide pensions for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia and authorizing appropriations therefor", approved August —, 1935, fiscal year 1936, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert:

Maintaining public order, etc., August 16–31, 1935: For carrying out the provisions of Public Resolution No. 48, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 13, 1935, within the limitations and for the several purposes therein expressed, fiscal year 1936, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture", on page 10, after line 3, to insert:

FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

To carry out the act to amend section 10A of the Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended, approved August —, 1935, fiscal year 1936, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 7, to insert the following:

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

Tobacco Inspection Act: For carrying into effect the provisions of the Tobacco Inspection Act, approved August 23, 1935, $153,065 of the funds available for carrying into effect the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, are hereby made available for the fiscal year 1936; and in addition thereto $52,670 of the funds appropriated for "Market inspection of farm products" under the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in the Agricultural Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936 may be used for the purposes of said Tobacco Inspection Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 4, to insert:

Agricultural Adjustment Administration Potato Act of 1935:

For carrying into effect the Potato Act of 1935, being title II of an act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, approved August —, 1935, the proceeds derived from taxes imposed by title II thereof are hereby appropriated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the provisions of said act; and in addition thereto there is hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000,000, to be available until expended, for carrying out the provisions of said title, pursuant to the authorization contained in section 216 (d) thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Commerce", on page 11, after line 5, to insert:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION AND STEAMBOAT INSPECTION

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for departmental salaries, and for salaries and general expenses, Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, including the same objects specified under these respective heads in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1936, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after the amendment last agreed to, to insert the following:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES

That not to exceed $10,000 of the appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, for the purchase of equipment or supplies shall be available for the purchase of letters patent no. 1531065, or licenses under said letters patent that pertain to equipment, supplies, or business which the said Department of Commerce is authorized to purchase, use, or transact when the Secretary of Commerce shall personally certify that such purchase is necessary in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point as part of my remarks a letter from the Comptroller General to the Secretary of Commerce, which will explain the purpose of the amendment which has just been adopted.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 23, 1935.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

SIR: There has been received your letter of July 15, 1935, as follows:

"As evidenced in the enclosed correspondence the Department of Commerce is considering an offer to purchase from those owning and controlling the Boyer patent rights, the right to manufacture a machine embodying the features of the patent. This machine would be used for the purpose of folding aeronautical charts printed by the Coast and Geodetic, and offered to the public for sale at cost, as prescribed by law. The Department is interested in the offers made by the attorneys of the patentee dated June 10, 1935, a copy of which you will find herewith attached, giving the Bureau of Air Commerce the right, of a period of 2 years at $5,000, to build a machine and fold the new series of air charts about to be brought out by the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the near future in a manner described under the patentee's patent claim and an unrestricted right to use the machine for $8,000.

"The difficulty involved herein was raised by the Attorney General in his letter to me dated January 25, 1935, a copy of which you will find attached hereto, wherein he advised me that the Department not purchase a license under the Boyer patent. At the time this advice was given me by the Attorney General's Office the patentee had offered to sell outright his patent to this Department for a consideration of $50,000. The Attorney General advised, 'If, without such license, you adopt and use in your Department the method described in this patent the patentee is authorized to file a suit against the United States for "unauthorized use." Of course, I cannot predict with certainty that such a proceeding would result favorable to the United States, but reasonable defenses are available, and it appears improbable that the damages awarded, if we should not prevail, would exceed the cost of a license.'

"In view of the above, would the Department of Commerce be within its rights to make purchase of a restricted or unrestricted use by purchasing permission from the patentee to manufacture a machine that will fold the maps in a manner prescribed under the patent? This proposition has been presented to me by the attorneys of the patentee as the attached copy of letter dated June 10, 1935, explains. I would, therefore, appreciate any advice you may give me in the matter."

The procedure in advertising and contracting for supplies whose manufacture may involve the infringement of patents has been stated in decisions to you published in 13 Comp. Gen. 173; 14 id. 298, id. 340. If the public needs are such as to require the building of a machine for use of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in folding aeronautical charts and the facilities of the Government are not available for constructing the machine, there should be an advertisement for bids in conformity with the cited decisions therefor. In view of the report of the Attorney General that reasonable defenses are available to any claimed infringement of the Boyer patent, there should be no attempt to charge appropriated moneys with an amount sufficient to purchase a license for use of the patent and the owners thereof may be relegated to the procedure established by the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 861) as amended by the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat. 705) to establish both the validity of the patent and that the machine, if constructed, infringes it.

Specifically, you are advised that apropriated moneys may not be charged with $5,000 for a license to use the alleged patent for a period of 2 years or with $8,000 for an unrestricted license to use the alleged patent as proposed in letter of June 10, 1935, from the attorneys for the patentee, or any part thereof, in connection with the construction of the contemplated folding machine.

Respectfully,

(Signed) J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of the Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs", on page 13, after line 3, to insert:

Acquisition of the property of the Haskell Students' Activities Association: For meeting indebtedness of the Haskell Students' Activities Association and acquiring title to the property of this association for use of the Government Indian school, known as "Haskell Institute", located at Lawrence, Kans., as authorized by the act of August 13, 1935 (Public, No. 266, 74th Cong.), fiscal year 1936, $30,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Justice", on page 14, after line 10, to insert:

PENAL INSTITUTIONS

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 11, to insert:

Buildings and equipment: For the purchase of cites, constructing, remodeling, and equipping necessary buildings, purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, for establishment of six new Federal jails, altering and adapting other Government property for prison purposes, and construction of dwellings for prison officers, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to reorganize the administration of Federal prisons; to authorize the Attorney General to contract for the care of United States prisoners; to establish Federal jails, and for other purposes, approved May 14, 1930, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, by contract or purchase of material and hire of labor and services and utilization of labor of United States prisoners, as the Attorney General may direct, to remain available until expended, $1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of State", on page 19, line 7, before the word "of", to strike out "and/or" and insert "and", so as to read:

United States contributions to international commissions, congresses, and bureaus: For an additional amount for United States contributions to international commissions, congresses, and bureaus, including the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and of the commissions established by that committee, including traveling expenses; personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; purchase of necessary books and documents; printing and binding; official cards; entertainment; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, and including reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments have been made for any of the purposes herein specified; fiscal year 1936, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Treasury Department", on page 21, after line 21, to insert:

OFFICE OF TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES

Refund to H. T. Tate: For refund to H. T. Tate of the amount of an unavailable item in his accounts as former Treasurer of the United States, plus interest, paid by him, which unavailable item the Comptroller General of the United States was subsequently directed to allow in his accounts by section 2 of Private Act No. 190, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 7, 1935, $128.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 4, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Salaries: For an additional amount for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency as provided by section 209 of the Banking Act of 1935, fiscal year 1936, $8,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Procurement Division—Public Works Branch", on page 22, after line 9, to strike out:

Acquisition of premises designated as "1724 F Street NW., Washington, D. C.": For purchase of the premises designated as "1724 F Street NW., Washington, D. C.", and described as lot 28 in square 170 on the records of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, comprising a 6-story and basement brick office building and approximately 13,200 square feet of land, to provide necessary office space for permanent Government organizations, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Judgments and authorized claims—Damage claims", on page 24, line 7, after the word "House", to strike out "Document No. 299" and insert "Documents Nos. 299 and —,"; in line 13, after the name "Department of the Interior", to strike out "$725.45" and insert "$839.20"; in line 18, after the name "Treasury Department", to strike out "$295.58" and insert "$303.59"; and in line 20, after the words "In all", to strike out "$7,861.44" and insert "$7,983.19", so as to make the section read:

DAMAGE CLAIMS

SECTION 1. (a) For the payment of claims for damages to or losses of privately owned property adjusted and determined by the following respective departments and independent establishments under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case", approved December 28, 1922 (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 215–217), as fully set forth in House Documents Nos. 299 and —, Seventy-fourth Congress, as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I also offer another amendment, which I will ask to have stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 10, after line 7, to insert after the amendment heretofore agreed to:

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FORMATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

To carry out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the preparation and completion of plans for a comprehensive observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution of the United States", approved August 23, 1935, fiscal year 1936, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I send to the desk another amendment which is submitted on behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] in his absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

For continuation of construction of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there are some committee amendments which I suggest may be offered on the floor by individual Senators.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to farmers at the rate of 12 cents per pound on cotton, when such loans are secured by cotton stored in warehouses approved by said Corporation, upon such terms and conditions as similar loans have been made by said Corporation during the crop year ending July 31, 1935, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am familiar with the amendment, and I wish to make the point of order against it on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine makes a point of order against the amendment. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to be heard?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I concede that the amendment is subject to a point of order. In a meeting of the committee this morning the Appropriations Committee authorized me to present the amendment. The Senator from Maine was present and did not announce his intention to make the point of order. Of course he has the right to make it. I have filed with the clerks at the desk notice of a motion to suspend the rules in order to submit the amendment.

Because of the fact that the point of order is made I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether or not he intends to ask for a vote upon the bill tonight. I frankly say in relation to the amendment there will be a vote on the motion to suspend the rules. If it be necessary for me to talk from now until tomorrow I shall endeavor to do so, and I have the assurance of considerable assistance on the floor of the Senate. I certainly do not wish to do that. It would be an undesirable thing to be compelled to do it, but I want to vote upon the merits of the amendment.

The Senator from Maine is making a point of order which I concede. I ask the Senator from Colorado whether he wants to ask for a vote tonight or whether he would be willing to have a vote upon the bill tomorrow? In the latter case I shall withdraw the amendment until tomorrow; let other amendments be offered and complete consideration of the bill, except for my amendment. Then tomorrow I shall offer the amendment because, under the rule, I can then move to suspend the rules and the amendment would be in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will say for myself that I am willing to forego the opportunity of hearing the Senator from South Carolina talk until tomorrow. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to have the amendment go over.

Mr. BYRNES. Very well. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I offer another committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 2, after line 3, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, to insert:

For payment to attorneys of record for the contestant and the memorialists, to wit: Grant T. Hall, George H. Williams, and Thomas H. Barnett, for services rendered and expenses incurred in the contested-election case resulting from the election of a United States Senator from West Virginia on November 6, 1934, fiscal year 1936, $600 each; in all, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer an additional committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 13, after line 21, to insert the following:

ADMINISTRATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1935

For all authorized and necessary expenditures in the administration of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, travel expenses, supplies and equipment, services, law books, books of reference, newspapers and periodicals, and printing and binding, fiscal year 1936, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer another committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 20, after line 8, to insert the following:

Prohibition of export of arms and war munitions: For the expenses of administering Public Resolution No. —, approved August —, 1935, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; traveling expenses; purchase of necessary books, documents, and periodicals; stationery; communication service; printing and binding; equipment; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1936, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 8, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, to insert:

Third World Power Conference: For the expenses of organizing and holding the Third World Power Conference in the United States in 1936 or 1937, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, communication services, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); travel expenses, local transportation, hire of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, entertainment, official cards, purchase of newspapers and periodicals, necessary books and documents, stationery, membership badges, and such other expenses as may be actually and necessarily incurred by the Government of the United States by reason of observance of appropriate courtesies in connection therewith, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments have been made for any purposes herein specified, fiscal year 1936, to remain available until June 30, 1937, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 8, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, to insert the following:

Commission to study the subject of Hernando De Soto's expedition: For the expenses of a commission consisting of not fewer than five nor more than seven members, to make a thorough study of the subject of Hernando De Soto's expedition and to report back to the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress its recommendations for a suitable and appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Hernando De Soto in Tampa Bay, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; official cards; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the President, including reimbursement of other appropriations from which expenditures may be made for any of the purposes herein specified, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I submit another committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 22, line 23, after the numerals " 1903 ", to insert the words " or any other act ", so as to make the paragraph read:

Government Printing Office Buildings: The last proviso in the first paragraph of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a Union Railroad Station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1903, or any other act, shall not be applicable to the transportation of freight and express cars to and from railroad sidings from the warehouse of the Government Printing Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the language of the paragraph just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 22, at the end of line 25, to strike out the period, insert a colon, and insert the following proviso:

Provided, That, subject to the approval of plans by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, there may be constructed an overpass for railroad tracks for the Government Printing Office above First Street NW., between G Street and H Street, in Washington, D. C.: Provided further, That any structure erected for the Government Printing Office fronting on First Street NW. shall be so located as to permit the widening of said First Street to a width of 60 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

For payment to Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, for expenses incurred, including counsel fees, in the contest resulting from the election held November 6, 1934, fiscal year 1936, $7,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this is offered by direction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and relates to the payment of expenses in a contest case.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with what is being done by the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but it is not done with the consent or connivance or desire of one member of the committee. I desire to have the RECORD show that fact.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, may we have the amendment reported again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The Chief Clerk again stated the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 13, after line 21, to insert the following:

ADMINISTRATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1935

For all authorized and necessary expenditures in the administration of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, travel expenses, supplies and equipment, services, law books, books of reference, newspapers and periodicals, and printing and binding, fiscal year 1936, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 4, after line 18, to insert:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for the Federal Trade Commission, including the same objects specified under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1936, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the amendment which was offered by the Senator from South Carolina, and the Senate being in a generous mood and disposed to grant large appropriations, I offer an amendment, which, if I may be permitted to read it, is as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, add the following:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to domestic producers of wool at the rate of 40 cents per pound, secured by wool stored in warehouses or other places to be approved by said Corporation, upon such terms and conditions as shall fully protect the interests of said Corporation and the United States.

And I have another amendment, which I beg also to present for the consideration of the Senate. At the proper place in the bill, insert:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to the producers of copper which is mined in the United States at the rate of 15 cents per pound, secured by copper stored in warehouses or other places to be approved by said Corporation, upon such terms and conditions as shall fully protect the interests of said Corporation and the United States.

And I have given notice of a motion to suspend the rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COMMERCE IN MUNITIONS, ETC., IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war; which were, on page 3, after line 8, to insert "Except with respect to prosecutions committed or forfeitures incurred prior to March 1, 1936, this section and all proclamations issued thereunder shall not be effective after February 29, 1936"; on page 3, line 15, after "Navy" to insert "and"; on the same page, line 16, to strike out all after "Commerce", down to and including "designate", in line 20; on page 5, after line 9, to insert "All persons required to register under this section shall maintain, subject to the inspection of the Board, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Board shall prescribe"; on page 6, after line 10, to insert "The President is hereby authorized to proclaim upon recommendation of the Board from time to time a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section.

"This section shall take effect on the 90th day after the date of its enactment"; and on page 10, line 15, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I intend to move to concur in the House amendments. There is only one material change in them, and that is limiting the life and effect of the provision carrying an embargo against the shipment of arms to belligerent countries. The other amendments are immaterial.

In one case the appropriation is changed from $20,000 to $25,000. In the case of the registration of export and import companies, they are directly required to keep books of account which shall be open to inspection. I felt in the first place that the general regulation carried that, but I see no objection whatever to the House amendment. Another amendment which is immaterial is with regard to providing for the second proclamation, in section 2, with regard to registration.

Those are the only changes in the joint resolution.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. When the Senate acted upon the neutrality joint resolution it was generally asserted in the press of the country that we were in violent difference with the State Department upon the entire matter. I ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that the State Department was in agreement with the Committee on Foreign Relations in respect to the joint resolution which was reported from the Foreign Relations Committee and passed by the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. I may state that either the Secretary of State, the Under Secretary of State, or the Assistant Secretary of State was in conference with the Senate subcommittee for 5 or 6 weeks. There was general agreement with regard to all the matters that are here included. As to section 1, the State Department had a section drawn which gave to the President of the United States a discretion as to whether or not he would put in force an embargo upon the shipment of arms and ammunition and implements of war. The majority of the subcommittee desired that it should be unlawful, upon the finding of the fact of war, to ship arms or ammunition or implements of war to any of the belligerent countries. The State Department stated that they preferred their discretionary section, but that they would not oppose the section proposed by the subcommittee, and would consent, so far as they could, to the joint resolution as finally adopted by the full committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I certainly do not desire to delay the passage of the amended joint resolution which has been received from the House; but I think we should be in error if we permitted final passage and acceptance of the House amendments without a statement concerning the present position of the measure.

The joint resolution has been amended by the House so as to limit to the 29th day of February 1936, the restrictions proposed by the joint resolution. Just why the date should have been fixed at February 29, no one can undertake to say. Under ordinary circumstances, if the Congress were not in this eager frame of mind to be away from Washington, and if world conditions were other than they are, I should most certainly interpose objections to acceptance of the House amendment in this respect tonight; but, conditions being what they are, I am sure we should be in error if we should lose a single moment in accomplishing the passage of this, which I believe to be the most important bit of legislation with which this session of Congress has dealt.

I wish to say in passing, and not leaving the chance to object, that when Congress convenes next January I am confident that there will be a large army in both the Senate and the House of Representatives striving with all their might to accomplish that manner of remedy which will find the legislation made permanent, rather than confined and limited to run only until February 29; more than that, an army which will be striving diligently to include in its neutrality programs those items involving contraband, those items involving the issue of loans and credits, which we have had to countenance being ignored at this time, but which I hope and sincerely believe will find Congress ready and willing to accept next January.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a suggestion?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to suggest in view of what has just been said concerning the joint resolution, and inasmuch as it is an important enactment, if it be of any value at all, that it go over until tomorrow morning. We have agreed to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow, and the conference report on the joint resolution can be taken up at that hour, or at the very earliest opportunity, and discussed.

I say this, not with a desire or design of delaying action upon the joint resolution for more than a very brief period, for the expression of some personal views upon something which has just been said tonight, and much that has been printed concerning this joint resolution.

I do not want it to go out to the world that these people, with their high aspirations to prevent war, are going to prevent it by any such measure as that here before us; and I desire to explain exactly why, though a step which might be taken advantageously and with benefit to us, it cannot and it will not prevent any wars in the future, and within it there are not the possibilities of that sort of prevention.

I ask, therefore, Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me, that the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Nevada go over until tomorrow.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I do not wish to delay action on his request; but I join in that which will allow an expression, a complete expression, from Senators, touching the pending measure, both as to its propriety, its application, and its profit.

Mr. President, for myself, I may say that it is known that I oppose the joint resolution. The present Presiding Officer of the Senate [Mr. ROBINSON in the chair], the leader of the majority, has stated on the floor that in a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate I opposed the resolution. I was in the minority when the matter was before the committee.

I tendered a resolution, and I think I can quote it literally. I presented a resolution as a substitute for the one adopted, that no legislation whatever upon the subject seeking to define neutrality, or the matter of an embargo, or the matter of forbidding the shipment of arms, be passed by this body in the present session, stating that I felt that the whole matter should be left to the President, to be composed by certain orders as the same should be necessary, if it should become necessary at all from time to time between now and the next session as the occasion demanded.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I stand on my proposed resolution. I concur with the Senator from California. I feel that the measure which these honorable Senators, for whom we have great esteem, and to whose patriotism I subscribe, seeing it expressed both by words and in their splendid actions—I feel that the joint resolution announces to the world that we put ourselves in the strait-jacket, and limit ourselves the privileges, between now and the time named, to trade in the world freely, as is the right of a neutral nation, but an independent one, while we allow all the competing nations of the world to compete as against us, and who, beholding now the limitations we put upon ourselves, will take advantage of the qualifications in which we leave ourselves open, and will so surround us with limitations of their own, and by forms of orders in council and legislation of their parliamentary bodies as will remove us literally from any trade or competition of trade and the preservation of our life, commercial and industrial, between now and any time the Congress will be called upon to meet.

Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from California, who has wisely alluded to a very serious subject, and the subject is not only serious, but the hour is very serious. If we are contemplating a situation wherein we think we observe the prospect of war, it should be dealt with by us in such a serious state as would indicate that we know whereof we speak, and we speak knowingly what we feel.

Therefore, I join the Senator from California in the suggestion that, many Senators here desiring to express themselves should have the freedom to do so in order that they may qualify their votes "yea" or "nay" upon the conference report presented. I join in the request, because I feel that it is better that the whole matter go over until tomorrow in order that the world may see that this was not a mad rush in a sentiment that lacked practical thought and lacked judgment of contemplative men, in a great deliberative body like this, an act which involves, as soon as we pass it, the whole world.

We should express our view as concerns the world, and I take the liberty to invite the attention of my honorable colleagues, with whom I had the honor to serve just preceding the World War, and until I returned, that it was a preliminary action on our part, ill considered, and hastily arrived at, and shot through in sentiment, that involved us in trouble, from which we never escaped, and under which today we are suffering.

I join in the request of the Senator from California, and I ask the able Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if he will not find it agreeable to have this matter go over, so that on tomorrow we may all have opportunity to express ourselves in the calmness after reflection which I feel this great question and great subject now deserves.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent if this conference report be the unfinished business, that it be laid aside to be taken up at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the unfinished business is the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3398. That has been temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill which is now before the Senate.

The Chair does not think that it is competent to make a new and additional measure the unfinished business.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, perhaps, in a parliamentary fashion I may reach it otherwise. I ask that the consideration of the conference report be made the special order for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, just one word. As chairman of the committee, who presented the joint resolution on behalf of the committee, it is my duty, of course, to see that it comes to a vote, if possible. I was rather disturbed by the remarks of the Senator from Illinois. He made a very beautiful and able speech just now, and he indicates that he would like to make another tomorrow.

If there are to be many speeches tomorrow, we will either not finish tomorrow, or some other business will be cut out, or this joint resolution will not be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator permit a suggestion from the Chair?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message from the House before us is privileged. If the matter is not to be disposed of tonight, the measure will lie on the table, but, of course, it would have to be taken up at the convenience of the Senate tomorrow.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to add to the unanimous-consent request that the conference report be made the special order for tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, a further request that the motion be voted on at not later than 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair, exercising his right as a Member of the Senate, will feel constrained to interpose an objection to the preempting of 2 hours of tomorrow for the consideration of this conference report, which it is anticipated will be acted upon substantially unanimously by the Senate. The present occupant of the chair raises an objection to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is probably no Senator who desires to speak on this question who is in favor of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Senator that he change his request for unanimous consent so that instead of asking that the question shall be voted on at 12 o'clock, he fix the hour at 11.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there objection on the part of the Senator from Arkansas to the request being modified to vote at 11 o'clock?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire what will be the status of the motion I made this afternoon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will still remain the unfinished business, and in all probability will continue to remain the unfinished business for a considerable time. The present occupant of the chair will not object to the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. PITTMAN. Then I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada submits a unanimous-consent request that at 10 o'clock tomorrow all other business be temporarily suspended, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate Joint Resolution 173, and that at not later than 11 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote upon the amendments of the House.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, again reserving the right to object, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If I understand the situation, the report from the House to which the Presiding Officer has just referred will have right-of-way in the morning under any circumstances unless disposed of tonight?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. If unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, 1 hour, commencing at 10 o'clock, will be devoted to consideration of this resolution. The vote will then be taken. But if no unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, the question remains for the disposition of the Senate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But, Mr. President, no objection, I assume, would exclude the right-of-way of the report presented by the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], if I understand the parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He would be privileged to make a motion to take it up in the morning.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under those circumstances I do not object.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the request of the Senator from Nevada is that the vote shall be taken not later than 11 o'clock tomorrow morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; without objection, the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill to be inserted immediately after the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. I have talked with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and submitted my amendment to him, and he has no objection to it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 4, after line 18, to insert the following:

PRINTING AND BINDING

For the printing of 1,000 additional copies of each of those numbers of Senate Document 92, Seventieth Congress, first session, which are out of print or the supply of which is about to be exhausted, $50,000; and for the purpose of printing of 10,000 additional copies of No. 71–A of Senate Document 92, Seventieth Congress, first session, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 12, after line 12, to insert the following:

BUREAU OF FISHERIES

Fish-cultural station in the State of Nevada: For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Nevada in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for a 5-year construction and maintenance program for the United States Bureau of Fisheries", approved May 21, 1930, fiscal year 1936, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think that concludes the amendments which are available at this time to the deficiency bill. It is understood that we shall take up the consideration of amendments in the morning following the disposition of the conference report.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield for the purpose of an inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have here the omnibus flood-control bill. This bill by reason of the fact that a number of amendments have been made in the Senate will have to go to conference. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not object to my asking that his bill be temporarily laid aside in order that this may be given consideration.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, for several hours now I have been as patiently as possible awaiting an opportunity to have my motion submitted to a vote. If it is possible to have my motion adopted at this time, I shall be willing to have it temporarily laid aside to consider the motion of the Senator from New York. Otherwise I shall feel constrained to object.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I just wanted to state to my good friend from Colorado that his motion to take up the bill to which he refers will provoke considerable discussion.

Mr. LEWIS. A great deal of it.

Mr. KING. A great deal of it, my friend from Illinois states.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should not wish to be so disagreeable as to move to take up this bill. The matter will be pending in the morning, but I will stay here if the Senator likes until midnight to take care of his bill.

Mr. President, I could make the report and have it lie on the table and be printed and take it up tomorrow, but if there is any hope of adjournment tomorrow, we must have a conference on this bill, because there are differences between the two Houses. I will now report the bill from the Committee on Commerce, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate give immediate consideration to the bill.

From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] that I have been informed that there will be prolonged debate on the motion to take up his bill. The measure which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has reported is one of very great importance, and it a voluminous bill. If it is to be acted upon, which many Senators hope will be the case, it should be considered as soon as possible. We all know that there is a general desire, almost a universal desire, to close the session of the Congress sometime tomorrow, and I can see now that by maintaining before the Senate motions, which will be debated at great length, it will become impossible to proceed with our work to a point where we may hope to finish tomorrow.

I desire to thank Senators for the very cordial manner in which they have cooperated in the disposition of legislation.

I should be glad to have a vote taken on the motion of the Senator from Colorado with the understanding that if, in my opinion, it is taking so much time to consider the bill that it is endangering the disposition tomorrow of other legislation and the conference reports which must be disposed of, it shall either be finally laid aside or I myself shall be compelled to make a motion to lay it on the table. I do not think a bill of that character ought to be permitted to prevent the progress of the business of the Senate to such a degree as to prolong the session. I hope the Senator from Colorado may see his way clear to submit to the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, under the circumstances apparently there is nothing to do but to submit to the request, which, I understand, is that the motion be temporarily laid aside to take up the bill of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest, however, that it would be in better order if there might be assurances that the motion of the Senator from New York will not delay the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas the possibility of giving the motion of the Senator from Colorado or his bill a position at the next session for a special order, by unanimous consent?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should be very glad to do that if it would be satisfactory to the Senator from Colorado, but I do not understand that it would be satisfactory.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As a friend of the Senator from Colorado and in view of the situation which is impending in the closing hours of the session——

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit, I shall submit a unanimous-consent request in line with his suggestion. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets on the third day of the next session it shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3398) to establish the Air Corps Technical School and to acquire certain land in the State of Colorado for use as a site for said Air Corps Technical School and as an aerial gunnery and bombing range for the Army Air Corps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 191) to amend the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS BY OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a commencement address delivered by Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard at the University of Oregon on June 17, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Everybody's Business, July 1, 1935]

WHAT VILLARD REALLY SAID

Two weeks ago the distinguished Oswald Garrison Villard delivered one of the most notable commencement addresses in the history of the State University of Oregon. It was approximately 10 typed pages long, with stirring passages abundant, yet the excerpts quoted in the daily papers made it appear as merely another denunciation of "isms." The people depending upon the daily press for their information did not obtain a true picture of Mr. Villard's address. It is fitting and appropriate that the salient portions of his militant appeal be set forth here—where there is not shared the university's apparent fear to let the citizenry know that the commencement speaker was a fighting liberal with faith in the masses of the people:

"Let me begin by assuring you that I have come not to condescend, nor to patronize, nor to advise from some height of superiority. Gone is the day for that and gone is the time, as in my youth, when commencement speakers assured the graduating youth before them that the world was theirs to take, that it was but waiting for them with eagerness to climb an easy highroad to success. Life today is nothing of that kind. It is a direct and a menacing challenge to all of us but particularly to you. * * *

"With the noblest example that could possibly be set before them, that of the Nazarene Himself, men have neither learned how to control the industrial juggernauts they have created, nor the huge piles of wealth they have amassed. In brief, men are not masters of their own souls, nor have they learned to rule, or to conquer, themselves. So we are welcoming you to a national life that at the moment knows not which way to turn; that is not even sure that it has a place for you; that in the midst of a most generous and prodigal nature wonders whether it must not terminate men's active lives at 60, or even 55 years, in order to make room for you, to give you the opportunities you crave, to which you are entitled, the right to live your own life with opportunities for sane and adequate family life in one's own habitation; you are not even guaranteed congenial labor in peace without dread of premature death in barbed-wire entanglements or in obscene trenches that spell nothing but the road to national ruin. This is not a pleasing picture to paint; perhaps I shall be rebuked for beclouding by it this memorable hour in which you are to go forth into the sunshine of your young years, your just-matured manhood and womanhood. But I who have here come to serve you, if I can, must above all else tell the truth; you would think ill of me, indeed, were I to portray to you a world of dreams that does not exist. * * *

"Nor have I come to grieve, nor to condole. If it is a grave challenge that confronts you, so much the better. If the fight is a tremendous one and the odds great, why, "the fight's the thing", as a great American once wrote, "the one and only thing"—provided, of course, it is a fight not for selfish aims but for human betterment.

"To you is being given the task of solving problems of government and human relations which we have failed to work out. What an appeal, what an opportunity, what a cause! Not for the social and material security so many of us once had and have lost I would exchange this day for that upon which Harvard University put its diploma in my hands. Behind us lies a selfish, cowardly ease; the vast injustice in the marts of trade; a swinish rush for special privilege at the expense of all else; incredible eagerness to rise upon the backs of others; the unbelievable indifference to the disadvantaged, forgotten man and woman in the race for millions; the wicked squandering of the national heritage of natural and human resources. Before you—before you lies high adventure; the invitation and obligation for you, the grandsons of pioneers through mountain fastnesses and unending plains, to dare again in human relations, in every aspect of economic and national life, in international relations. * * *

"Let these be your words. Never surrender. Never yield. Never make terms if you care for the welfare of your souls, if you care for the hallowed walls about you now; if you cherish anything which has been taught to you here. And if you cling to your ideals, you cannot lose; your spirit will be as unconquerable as light itself.

"I have spoken of government. How great the change as to that since graduation day in 1893! Then government touched us individually not at all, at least not directly. It was as remote from our lives as the lotus-eaters in Papeete and lamas of Tibet. The rugged, sterling President of our time mentioned economics but rarely. * * * Today his successor, until the recent Supreme Court veto, wholly governed production, prices, profits, competition, wages, hours, conditions of labor, and he still has the power to reduce the value of the dollar, to increase the price of everything, to readjust wealth, to inflate our currency so generously as to ruin the great middle class and all who have been saving. It has been a dictatorship pure and simple. Government, you see, has changed; politics have become economics and economics, politics.

"More important than that, government, itself, which the founders of this country and of democracies elsewhere felt must ever be made for the citizen and not the citizen for the state, has become, or threatens to become, not the servant, but the master of us all.

"Abroad the despotisms, which are the ill-begotten children of that war which, so the lies ran, was to end war and to make the world safe for democracy, have crushed out every vestige of democracy, have reduced the individual to the merest and most pitiful pawn of the state, without freedom of speech or thought, or a free press, or free schools, or free universities, or free churches in which to worship.

"The individual, says Stalin in Moscow, and Hitler in Berlin, and Mussolini in Rome, is to exist only for the state, which tells him how to be born, how to live, whom to marry, whom to hate, and whom to cherish; predigests and sterilizes all his mental food according to the state's own formula, reserves the right to imprison or kill him without trial if he opposes any of its plans, and to order him to a horrible death on any battlefield it chooses to create. What would Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin and George Washington say to this? Would they ask you to subscribe to the doctrine that there is no other way out of the economic morass than to deprive the citizen of his every right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? Would they agree that the Frankenstein which is modern capitalism makes impossible intelligent judging of the problems of the state by all its citizens at the ballot boxes in the polls? I think not. * * *

"It has come to most of us as a most disheartening revelation that here in the United States there are plenty among us who would barter every right and liberty that they have for economic safety. We were brought up to believe that Americans were of sterner stuff than that; that in 1776 at least they set freedom above suffering, as at Valley Forge, and death on any battlefield. Yet I have heard a self-appointed Fascist leader say openly in public: 'We shall rule America because we are fit to rule it and the bulk of the people are not'—this in the land of the Declaration of Independence. And the Commissioner of Education of the United States, Dr. John W. Studebaker, has just sorrowfully asserted that unless there is 'further socialization of education and a true conception of its relation to democracy the country will face a dictatorship by default.'

"Otherwise", he said, "the disintegrating forces now at work, which would bring restriction of freedom of the press, freedom of sptech, and free assemblage, will gradually and insidiously creep upon us.' * * *

"No one, I suppose, in all these years has been a severer critic than I of the weaknesses and errors of our administrators; of our courts of justice, too often citadels of horrible injustice; of our police, themselves among the most lawless; of those officials sworn to uphold the law who breach it day by day; of the follies of our Presidents who have plunged us into stupid, utterly needless wars; of the unchecked exploitation of the masses of our people by those entrenched in special privilege fortified by great wealth. Many, many times my pen has quivered with indignation, my voice has been uplifted in rage in the endeavor to right grievous wrongs, to point out weaknesses in the forms of our Government. In good and evil repute I have laid these, my criticisms, upon the altar of patriotism, as my service to my country. But no man, living or dead, has ever heard from me in all those years one word of else than passionate loyalty to democracy itself. * * *

"I bespeak again more democracy—never less—more democracy through a Nation-wide initiative and a referendum as to war, as to foreign policy, as to whether we shall enter the League of Nations; as to whether we shall or shall not, as a Nation, arm to teeth; as to whether the Federal Government shall or shall not exercise those functions which the Supreme Court has just declared it may not—a referendum which at any time a certain number of citizens may invoke.

In this belief all my long experience has fortified me. I will admit that when I left the university I had my doubts. I wondered, in my ignorance of public affairs, how Lincoln could have had his ever-increasing faith in the plain people from whom he sprang. But as I have seen and heard, witnessed and reported, year in, year out, my faith, too, has grown. Obstacles, oh, yes; innumerable—the new propaganda, those deadly weapons, the radio and the movie, which lend themselves so readily to demagogue and dictator. We Americans are too often separated by sectionalism, by local aims, by clashing economic aims, as by climates. We are astoundingly diverse, still young, dangerously spread over too vast a territory. Yet, at bottom the people have an inborn, native wisdom one learns to trust, if only the sources of their information be untainted, their access to truth unbarred. A large "if." Yet here, too, is but a challenge to our faith and our ability to subordinate and safeguard the new means of communication to our needs.

Here we find one of those sources of power which have swollen the modern state. It was Thomas Jefferson who declared, after his Presidency, I believe, that we should have a bloody revolution every 25 years that our masters in Washington might know to whom this Government rightfully belongs. Bloody revolution is no longer possible. The telephone, the radio, the cement road, the tank, the rapid-fire guns, the poison gas, above all the airplane ably to espy from above the clouds the slightest assembly of men with arms, seem to have ended revolt by force. For that we need have no regrets, if the roads to peaceful revolution can but be kept open. Again the challenge for you. It is your duty and your privilege to insist upon the right to change, to fight from the beginning of your careers those who would render all political life static; who would freeze out institutions and methods as they are, and render the existing state unchangeable save in its constant grasping after more and more power * * *.

Yes; in you. Not 10 years hence or 20 years hence, in your middle age, but now. There is no time to lose. The crisis is here; the hour fraught with danger. It is to you we elders turn. I pay you no idle compliment. I state a fact. If there is to be a new birth of faith in this beloved Republic of ours, it must in largest measure come from you * * *.

There is no royal road to political influence, to the making of a sound political opinion. Books have been written upon the subject, but public opinion must still be the thought of the individual citizen, and that citizen is not living up to his obligation until he keeps himself in fullest degree informed, not of what one group believe and wishes him to think, but others, too. Not what his daily newspaper alone tells him, but what other and different pens may have to say * * *.

I used, at your age, to wonder why and how it is and was that some of our truest patriots, the men I have known who were the most devoted upholders and defenders of our institution, were foreign born. The answer is plain. They came out of autocratic states; they sacrificed and suffered to wander over seas and put down their roots in our soil, and their gratitude welled up unceasingly. And what cost them dearly, what they suffered to win, they valued above all else. You and I who were born to this priceless heritage are all too apt to take it as a matter of course, as normal a state of affairs as the air and the sky, the water in the streams. It has cost us nothing. It does not occur to us that the country needs our aid, our devoted service, that it is our most priceless possession, to be safeguarded as we would the lives of the members of our families. As the son of one of these adventurers from overseas, I can give you no better example than theirs. I can ask nothing more of you than that you shall equal their faith, their high concept of our Republic—our country—their unending interest in its future, and readiness to serve it, their readiness to give their lives that liberty and the Republic might survive. If you will but, by day and by night, keep this way of life before you, if you will but serve your country as did they, then will the enemy at the gates fail to enter; then the hurricanes may rage and the seas toss to the skies, but our Republic will survive.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to insert a comma and "as an emergency unemployment relief measure"; and in line 5, after the word "authorized" and the comma, to insert "when approved by the Chief of Engineers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Susquehanna River Basin", on page 3, after line 14, to insert:

Headwater area of Susquehanna and Delaware Rivers and tributaries, Onondaga Creek, and in the region of Keuka and other Finger Lakes, New York State, in accordance with plans prepared by the Chief of Engineers; cost not to exceed $30,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 6, to insert:

YAZOO RIVER BASIN

Yazoo River and tributaries—Mississippi: Flood-control project; 7 detention reservoirs for flood control, described in House Document 198, Seventy-third Congress, second session, according to plans and recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report of February 12, 1935, printed in House Flood Control Committee Document No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, $48,000,000: Provided, That the reservoirs for control of headwater flow of the Yazoo River and tributaries may be located by the Chief of Engineers, who may, in his discretion, substitute levees, floodways, or auxiliary channels, or any or all of them, for any or all of the 7 detention reservoirs recommended in his report of February 12, 1935, for control of floods of the Yazoo River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 19, after the name "Brazos River, Tex." and the colon, to strike out "Flood control survey; House Document No. 181, Seventy-second Congress, first session; cost, $225,000", and insert:

Flood control by not more than 13 reservoirs; data in office of the Chief of Engineers; cost not to exceed $30,000,000, or proportion thereof, according to number of reservoirs approved.

So as to read:

Brazos River, Tex.: Flood control by not more than 13 reservoirs; data in office of the Chief of Engineers; cost not to exceed $30,000,000, or proportion thereof according to number of reservoirs approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 21, to insert:

Atchafalaya Basin floodways and improvement of Atchafalaya River and Basin, including outlet west of Berwick, flood-control project, Louisiana, according to plans and recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report of February 13, 1935, printed in House Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, $27,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 8, after the figures "$1,050,000", to insert a colon and "Provided, That the Chief of Army Engineers be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to substitute reservoirs in the Cow Creek drainage area to give the same flood protection, if the cost thereof is justified", so as to read:

Hutchinson, on Arkansas River in Kansas: Diversion of Cow Creek and levees to protect people and city property; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $1,050,000: Provided, That the Chief of Army Engineers be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to substitute reservoirs in the Cow Creek drainage area to give the same flood protection, if the cost thereof is justified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 4, to insert:

Grand (Neosho) River in Kansas, from Kansas-Oklahoma line to north and west boundaries of Lyon County: Channel clearing for flood relief; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 16, to insert:

Washita River in Oklahoma: Flood-control reservoirs, and other incidental benefits; report to Congress not yet made; survey made and data in office of Chief of Engineers; $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 9, to strike out:

Clarendon to Lambrook, on White River, in Arkansas: Levees to protect 287,600 acres of land; plans in House Document No. 102, Seventy-third Congress, first session; revised cost data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $4,695,300.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

Clarendon to Laconia Circle, on White River, in Arkansas: Levees to protect 347,000 acres of land; plan "M" in House Document No. 102, Seventy-third Congress, first session; revised cost data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $8,960,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 5, to insert:

Table Rock Reservoir, on White River, in Missouri: For flood control, hydroelectric development, soil erosion, and other incidental benefits; plans in House Document No. 102, Seventy-third Congress, first session; revised cost data in office of Chief of Engineers, cost, $14,286,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 15, to insert:

Buckeye Lake and Indian Lake, Ohio: Works necessary to insure the safety of these reservoirs in accordance with plans to be approved by the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 4, to insert:

Franklin, Miami, and Linn Counties, Kans.: For survey, levees, and clearing channel of Marais des Cygnes River, cost $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 18, to insert:

Schuylkill River, Pa., in Montgomery County, for flood-control works in accordance with the plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers as suggested by the survey now being made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 21, to insert:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of controlling floods, improving navigation, regulating the flow of the streams of the United States, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for the reclamation of public lands and Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings, all projects planned or undertaken to accomplish the aforesaid purposes and for which allotments have been made pursuant to the provisions of title II of the act approved June 16, 1933, entitled the "National Industrial Recovery Act", are hereby authorized and adopted, and all contracts and agreements which have heretofore been executed in connection therewith are hereby validated and ratified, and the President, acting through such agents as he may designate, is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain dams, structures, canals, and incidental works necessary to such projects, and in connection therewith to make and enter into any and all necessary contracts, including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified.

The amendment was agreed to.

MEDALS COMMEMORATIVE OF RESCUE WORK, "MORRO CASTLE" DISASTER

Mr. COPELAND. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 1874) to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. HARRY MOORE, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, Capt. John Bogan, Sr., and the members of the crew of the fishing boat Paramount, and I submit a report (No. 1460) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1874) to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. HARRY MOORE, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, Capt. John Bogan, Sr., and the members of the crew of the fishing boat Paramount which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That in recognition of the heroic efforts of the following-named men and others who participated in rescuing and contributing to the rescue of passengers of the ill-fated steamship Morro Castle, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be struck and presented to the men herein mentioned, and others who, in his judgment, are entitled to participate in such a reward, gold medals with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined by said Secretary: Senator A. Harry Moore; Adjt. Gen. William A. Higgins, Lt. John J. Toffee, Jr., Lt. L. V. Rawlins, Master Sergeant Hoffman, First Lt. H. W. Gray, Sergeant Griffith, Sergeant Platt, First Lt. L. D. Hoffman, Maj. Robert L. Copsey, Capt. John A. Carr (deceased), Lt. Thomas B. Mulroy, all of the New Jersey National Guard; Lt. Mathew Saleski; Lt. Col. Eugene H. Valle; Capt. Al Kline and crew of the fishing boat Ridgewise; Capt. Charles Piercey and crew of the fishing boat Doris D.; Capt. Robert Zeigler and crew of the fishing boat Diana; Capt. E. Donald Sternar and crew of the fishing skiff Bud Jack; Capt. John Bogan, Sr., and crew of the fishing boat Paramount; Capt. Ole Kristianse and crew of the sea skiff Dee; Capt. Francis E. Geer and crew of the Seven Stars; Capt. William T. Spencer, Jr., and crew of the cruiser Westward Ho II; Capt. C. N. Cramer and crew of the yacht Agnes; Capt. Henry C. Hillman and crew of the Dolphin; Capt. Jesse Cramer and crew of the Cachelot; Capt. T. E. Hicks and crew of the Repajo II; as well as the following life guards from Sea Girt, N. J.: John Holthusen, Elvin Lake, Richard Tucker, Thomas Black, George Braender, Jack Little; and members of the Bradley Beach First Aid and Ambulance Corps. Also, Robert Simms, Charles K. Gifford, Morris Nelson, David Carlson, John P. Kennell, Victor E. Errickson, Louis Myhammer, all of Point Pleasant, N. J.; and Murray Earl, of Mantolokin, N. J.; and E. Kittell, of Allenhurst, N. J.; and all members of the United States Guard Service from the New Jersey shore stations.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not understand the present procedure and what the Senate is now doing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York obtained unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1874 providing for the coinage of certain medals.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For whom?

Mr. ASHURST. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1874) to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. HARRY MOORE, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, Capt. John Bogan, Sr., and the members of the crew of the fishing boat Paramount.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that takes in all of them. I think everybody could get a medal under that title.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from New York explain just what the bill is.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me I can explain this bill. This is a measure of which I am the author which would award medals to my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], and many others who took part in the rescue of the unfortunate victims at the time of the Morro Castle disaster. The bill really originated in the House at the hand of my colleague Representative MARY NORTON of New Jersey, but has been greatly altered since in that many names were added to those that were included in the first instance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What did they do?

Mr. BARBOUR. Many, at the risk of their lives, helped to rescue the unfortunate people who were forced to leap overboard in the water to escape this burning ship. My colleague [Mr. MOORE] for instance, went out in an airplane and, in cooperation with certain of the rescue boats at night and in the stormy weather, directed the rescue of a great many different persons. I cannot see how the Senator from Wisconsin or any other Senator can object to my colleague and these others receiving this recognition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At the moment I am not objecting. I am simply desirous to know what the medals are being conferred for and what the justification is for this honor.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator will, of course, remember the Morro Castle disaster which took place at night near Asbury Park, N. J. The steamer was destroyed by fire, there was a great loss of life, and many members of the passengers and the crew had to leap overboard to escape the flames.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why not award the medals to the passengers who jumped overboard? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. I should be glad to do so, but unhappily a great many of them are in their graves; unfortunately, it is too late to give them anything. Anyway, I hope the Senator will not object to the passage of the bill. It includes all those who took part in the rescue, as well as my colleague, then the Governor of the State.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, very reluctantly I announce that I shall not object, though the explanation is absolutely inadequate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. HARRY MOORE, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, the captains and members of the crews of certain fishing and pleasure boats, and to others."

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I will not. I wish to speak upon the pending bill.

I think it is an outrage that $500,000,000 should be authorized in 10 minutes tonight, in the closing moments of this session, without any more consideration than has been given to it; and, so far as I am concerned, I wish to have the Senate know what it is doing.

In the first place, it is authorizing the expenditure of one-half billion dollars, which is twice the amount which the Senate is about, piously, to raise with the new tax bill.

Secondly, the bill violates every precedent ever heretofore established in congressional practice in respect to flood-control works and river and harbor works, because it makes the authorization without recommendations from the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers.

If Senators will spend 2 or 3 minutes on this half-billion dollars, I suggest that they start reading the bill, opening it at any page. I opened it at page 14. Project after project contains, in the item, the following words——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. VANDENBERG. For a medal?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is entitled to one, but a lead medal, I should say. [Laughter.] He will need lots of laughs during the next half hour.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will yield as soon as I shall have completed what I was about to say.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I will wait. I can stand it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In each of these items occurs the following phrase:

Report to Congress not yet made.

And you may go through this bill from page 1 to page 53, and 90 percent of the projects have, within the language defining them, these words:

Report to Congress not yet made.

Mr. President, I consulted this morning with the Chief of Engineers, and I find that this is the situation:

Two or three years ago Congress passed a general resolution asking for a general inquiry into all the possible flood-control projects which might invite the attention of the Government in the next 25 years. The Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers made this general compilation, not as a basis of recommendation but purely as a general prospectus, intending in each instance that the time-honored congressional practice of requiring reports and recommendations from the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers ultimately should be followed ere any action was taken. But in this bill all the projects that were listed in that quarter of a century prospectus are put together, and we are asked to authorize the expenditure of $500,000,000 for these purposes in advance of any recommendation from the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers.

Mr. President, upon my motion this morning, in the Committee on Commerce, an amendment was inserted in line 5 on the front page so that these authorizations shall not become effective at least until confirmed by the Chief of Engineers. I desire to make it plain that that small measure of concession to the congressional practice for 100 years is not in the House bill. It has been inserted in the bill by the Senate committee, and I wish to make it plain that when the bill goes back to the House, if those few words shall be stricken out, this bill will become nothing more than the most gigantic "pork barrel" racket of this entire session or any other.

I wish to emphasize the importance of keeping those words in the bill if Congress has the slightest intention of maintaining the rule which we know to be essential in the name of honest and decent public expenditures; namely, that river and harbor improvements and flood-control improvements shall not be made save in the presence of recommendations from the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers.

Mr. President, the committee this morning added another amendment to the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I do not yield at the moment. This happens to be a serious matter.

The committee this morning also added a sentence which defines the authorization of these projects as emergency work-relief projects. That is the only possible justification for this method of legislation; namely, that in this extraordinary situation, when four or five billion dollars are available for emergency work-relief projects, these flood-control projects should be tentatively authorized, so as to be brought within the jurisdiction of the expenditure of the work-relief funds.

It was stated to the committee this morning that that is the sole purpose of this bill, namely, to bring these flood-control projects, half a billion dollars' worth of them, within the jurisdiction of the expenditures that are made for work relief under the $4,880,000,000 fund.

I concede that an argument may be appropriately made for that sort of an identification of projects to be paid for by that sort of an expenditure; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is not one word in the bill itself which requires the expenditures to be made in that fashion. On the contrary, so far as the text of the bill and its authority is concerned, every penny of this half billion dollars may run against the General Treasury and the general taxpayers when finally appropriated.

Therefore, in order to test the good faith with which the Senate has inserted in the bill upon page 1 the words indicating that these are work-relief authorizations, I offer a further amendment, on page 2, line 3, reading as follows:

Provided further, That the necessary appropriation to complete each project shall first be allocated from the funds appropriated for relief purposes in Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is not a thing that Congress has acted on since I have been here which has been studied half so much as what is contained in this bill.

Notwithstanding the fact that this is an administrative measure—and I think I have shown that I have been entirely free in regard to measures, whether they are administration measures or not, and probably a little bit against most of them—I may say that this happens to be about the only major piece of legislation which has been thoroughly studied and reported on, not particularly in any one document or Senate file, but this bill has had the most intensive study and investigation and hearing of any subject matter that has been passed upon by Congress during the past several sessions.

As an example, if there has been one hearing in my little State, there have been a hundred, on every project that is contained in this measure, and long delay. Not only have they been investigated by the National Government, they have been investigated by many independent agencies. The National Rivers and Harbors Conference has investigated many of them. There has been the Mississippi Valley Conference investigating them, and there has been the Missouri Valley Conference investigating them.

Not only that, but the Congress of the United State appropriated a large sum of money—I might not be able to state exactly what it was, but it was several million dollars—to make a complete study of this entire question. It was embraced in a report that was filed with the Congress, and there is not a Member of the United States Senate who has not received, not only the maps and the diagrams, but a most exhaustive report, with every detail of construction, with every item of cost, leaving it for the Congress to appropriate, either to do the job in one whole stroke, or to do it in single selected propositions, one at a time.

Instead of doing the entire job at once, which could have been accomplished had Congress seen fit to appropriate the money, it has selected the projects most necessary and which will give the greatest and most wide-spread employment of labor on the work to be done.

Mr. President, this is not a sectional bill by any means. The bill affects the welfare of the people of the entire United States, and I want to say for my friend the Senator from Michigan that evidently he did not take the time to peruse the report filed here by the Army engineers, which contains most elaborate information, and contains the statement that they had further information which might be needed by any committee of Congress, or by any Member of Congress who wished to pursue a study of any matter that was comprehended in the general outline.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has suggested that this bill, if passed, might lay the foundation for a claim against the general fund. I have never understood that a bill of this character might be the foundation of a claim against the general fund without a formal appropriation by the Congress of the United States. It is true that the money might be allocated by the President out of the work relief funds, and, of course, that would not add anything to the burden which we already face; but certainly, as the Senator from Louisiana suggested, the Congress would follow its time-honored habit of passing on each appropriation if it were made a tentative lien on the general fund. I ask the Senator from New York if my statement is not correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely correct, and I shall enlarge upon what he has said, if I may.

Mr. President, I fairly trembled when I listened to the Senator from Michigan, and wondered what really would have happened to us if we had not had this advice and assistance from him. I can imagine that this was merely a practice speech for next year. It was a good one, and I congratulate the Senator. The trouble is, however, that his facts are not well founded. Let us take just one example, and I think all the cases are alike in this respect.

The Senator complains that no report has been made to Congress. I have before me a report as to the Henderson County Drainage District No. 3, in Illinois, to protect agriculture, survey completed, and data in the office of the Chief of Engineers. The survey has been made, and all the data are in the office of the Chief of Engineers. The report has not as yet been printed. Some of these reports are very long, in some cases a whole volume being devoted to one of them.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator undoubtedly has in mind that there has been an essential change in this administration, in the last 2 years, from the old practice of selection by the Board of Army Engineers of the river and harbor and flood-control projects. In other words, when Congress made the appropriations themselves, specified the project, and appropriated the money for the project, they acted exclusively on the recommendations of the Board of Engineers. But in this administration, owing to the installation of the public-works program, a different policy has been adopted. Congress does not now make the direct appropriations for the projects. It has been left to the Public Works Administration, or the Works Relief Administration, or whatever we may please to call it, and what used to be an appropriation by Congress now simply becomes the reservoir from which the Public Works Administration draws the projects to be adopted. Therefore the objection of the Senator from Michigan does not lie in any particular.

I further call attention to the fact that the best money that can be expended in all these projects, so far as putting men to work is concerned, is in flood-control and river and harbor work, because that means 90 percent labor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for what he has said, which is absolutely correct.

The surveys have been made. On file in the office of the Chief of Engineers they have the data. We are here making into an omnibus bill an authorization which may cover years to come. I think the Senator from Michigan was helpful in the amendments he put on the first page of the bill, but when he now attempts to provide that no work shall be undertaken in accordance with this authorization except from funds out of the $4,000,000,000 appropriation, I shall have to resist his effort, because it might well be that even that enormous sum of money would disappear for other purposes long before it came time to allocate funds for projects included in the pending bill.

Mr. President, this bill may be the last one of the kind we will have for years to come. It provides an authorization merely for these various activities, so I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be rejected.

CLAUDE W. SHELTON—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 133)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 1497, authorizing me to appoint Claude W. Shelton, first lieutenant, United States Army, retired, to the grade of captain, United States Army, retired, effective as of July 1, 1920, with the retired pay of a captain. This measure further provides that no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to its passage.

From the facts in this case of record in the War Department, it appears that Claude W. Shelton entered the Regular Army as a provisional second lieutenant of Infantry with rank from June 5, 1917; was immediately promoted to provisional first lieutenant; and held a temporary commission as captain from August 5, 1917, to March 5, 1920. He was placed on the retired list as a first lieutenant March 9, 1920, because of disability resulting from wounds received in action overseas in July 1918. Under the general legislation enacted June 21, 1930, he was advanced on the retired list to his highest war-time rank of captain. That legislation authorizes the advancement of retired officers, who served with credit during the World War, to the highest rank held by them during such service, and also provides that such advancement shall be without any increase in pay or allowances.

Briefly stated, the ultimate purpose of this measure is to increase the annual compensation of this retired officer from $1,950 to $2,340. In this connection it appears that Captain Shelton's compensation is being increased regularly under existing law by virtue of the fact that having been retired for disability resulting from wounds received in action, he is credited with inactive service on the retired list for longevity pay purposes.

I have been advised by the War Department that while Captain Shelton would have been eligible for promotion to the permanent grade of captain had he remained on the active list until July 1, 1920, his retirement on March 9, 1920, was approved and effected only after a retiring board had determined that he was permanently incapacitated for active service, and that the action taken in his case was strictly in conformity with the governing laws. Therefore, I can see no reason for singling him out for preferential treatment at this time for the purpose of conferring upon him the pay of a captain, which grade he did not hold on the date of his retirement.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 23, 1935.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9100) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is no doubt in the world that many projects in this bill are meritorious, but before the year 1937, when we begin to pay for these things, there is going to be a different atmosphere prevailing in this Chamber from the one that prevails here tonight.

A few days ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offered an amendment to the then pending tax bill to carry income taxes down to incomes of $800 for single persons, as I recall, and about $1,500 for married persons. Any Senator who votes for the pending bill votes to carry the income taxes at least that far down, if not further.

Congress has appropriated $4,000,000,000 of money we do not have, in order to put people to work. There was about a billion and a half dollars left over from the old P. W. A., and now, forsooth, it is proposed to appropriate another half a billion dollars that we do not have.

Mr. COPELAND. No; not appropriate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Do Senators think that the people of this country have lost their common sense, that each and every poor man does not know that he has to work to raise the money with which to pay this huge debt? I know there is "pork" in the bill. There is some Maryland "pork", and the project in Maryland is a good one, and I should like to see it go into the bill, and I should like to see the work done. But, gentlemen, we have not the money with which to indulge in this business at this time. Men may throw money away, but, oh, there will be a different story when the time comes to write a tax bill. In 1937 the disposition will be to levy no taxes, as the disposition was the other day, but Congress will levy them whether they want to levy them or not, because the day will then be approaching when it is will be so necessary to levy the taxes that there will be no escape.

Is not the sum of five or six billion dollars enough in work projects scattered all over this country, $50,000,000 to be spent in my own State next year, a small State in both population and area, $50,000,000 in the little State of Maryland, which will, if properly spent, take every man off the relief roll, pay him a fair wage, and employ him for at least a year?

What on earth is the necessity, after having drained the Treasury and borrowed the money to carry on that huge program, of putting one-half billion more dollars on top of it at this time?

We may have to have another public-works program in 1937 or in 1938, or we may have another relief program. Is it not wise to use a bit of caution now to save our money for another rainy day rather than to pile up expenditure upon expenditure and break down the backs of the people with taxes which are inevitable?

I do not know—perhaps I have gone mad, but this sort of legislation makes me feel that the Legislature of this Republic has gone mad. We provided means to raise $250,000,000 in taxes just 2 weeks ago. Bills were offered to increase the whole tax structure, from the lowest income all the way to the top, and even then there would only be raised $450,000,000 or $500,000,000. But we do not want to levy those taxes for one reason or another. They are too burdensome, we say.

So, we strike out all the lower incomes to $50,000 a year, and raise only $250,000,000 in emergency taxes, and now we come in, when we did not have the disposition to tax the poor man, and make an expenditure which is unnecessary and which will make it mandatory sooner than necessary to tax the poor man. This is a bill the title of which should read, "To carry taxes down to the lowest wage earner in America." That would be the correct title of it.

I have sat here all during this session and heard about the Guffey coal bill to increase the wages of the miners and the agricultural bill to increase the income of the farmers and the N. R. A. to increase the income of this, that, and the other fellow. What in the world is the use of increasing their income if we are going to take all of that increase and a part of their old salary in new taxes? It is the biggest lot of sham and hypocrisy there ever was, and this Congress ought to be turned out of office if it writes this law upon the statute books in this period of great emergency.

Mr. LONG. I know my friend does not want to overlook one fact, but this is a matter which adds to the national wealth. Every dollar which is spent adds to the national wealth.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; if the Senator will give me a hundred dollars it will add to my wealth also. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to give the Senator one further bit of information about this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. It adds considerably to the wealth of Louisiana, I notice, because there are any number of Louisiana projects in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to tell the Senator one thing more about the bill. I should like to have the Senator know that this bill passed the House of Representatives at 10 o'clock last night carrying about $370,000,000 of authorizations, but it was taken up in the Senate Commerce Committee at 11 o'clock this morning, and in 1 hour about $200,000,000 of additional authorizations were added, and that the bill itself was never even read to the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator from Michigan—and I certainly do not want to make any threats—but I am willing to do my part to see that this bill shall not be written on the statute books, at least in this session of the Congress.

I think it is one of the most outrageous measures, considering the condition of the country, which was ever brought into a session of Congress. Project after project was never passed on in the bill. Data assembled, they say, survey made, no recommendation to Congress, $15,000,000. One project after the other, amounting to about one-half billion dollars.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. In 1 year that much of the people's wealth in this country was destroyed by unharnessed flood waters. That much destruction was done in 1 little year.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; and in 1 little month twice that much of the people's wealth was destroyed by the burden of taxes which the Senator from Louisiana helped to put on them by the acts of Congress. There is not a dollar in this bill that can get into the Treasury of the United States except in one way. The whole of the half-billion dollars which is herein appropriated has got to be raised by somebody in the form of taxation. An illustration which I have often used to show Senators the burden of taxation today is a small package of cigarettes. That little green stamp on the package of cigarettes represents a 6-cent tax. A man who smokes a package of cigarettes a day, or we will say 300 packages of cigarettes a year, has to pay $18 in cigarette taxes alone.

If he is a carpenter making $4.50 a day he has to work four whole days out of the year simply to pay his cigarette taxes. How much do all those taxes amount to? The entire tobacco tax on all forms of tobacco only brings in $400,000,000 a year. Yet here we have $100,000,000 more than that total tobacco tax for a year contained in this one bill. Of course, there is a project in the bill for nearly every State in the Union, including my own. That is the bait. I could take out about 12 projects and change the complexion of the Senate in regard to this bill.

I will return to any place in the bill and read. I do not refer to any particular State and I do not want to reflect on any Senator, but turning to the first page I happen to come to I read:

Lyon County, on Grand (Neosho) River in Kansas: Levees (unit no. 39) to protect 7,020 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $237,100.

I should like to ask someone where those 7,020 acres of land on the Neosho River are? Is there anyone here who can describe that particular project? The committee must know something about it. The committee has it in the bill, and the committee has a quarter of a million dollars appropriated for that work. I will ask the question, and I shall be glad to yield for an explanation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to yield for an explanation.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not happen to know where those acres are, but I do know the philosophy of the bill. The Senator all through his speech is talking about the appropriation of money. This is not an appropriation bill. This is an authorization. With regard to the particular item referred to by the Senator on page 17 he finds fault in the first place because the report has not been made. The survey has been completed, the data is in the office of the Chief of Engineers, and not a dollar can be spent until the Board of Engineers recommends it and until the Congress appropriates the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. That may be true, and it may not work out as the Senator envisages it. What I know is that after we appropriated $4,000,000,000, with $1,000,000,000 of P. W. A money left over from last year, and more, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] read a table one night showing there was some left over, it is proposed to thrust another $500,000,000 on top of that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not wish the Senator to be misled regarding the situation. The Senator from New York correctly says that so far as the amended Senate bill is concerned none of these expenditures can be made until the money is appropriated.

Mr. COPELAND. That is what I am speaking about.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the House bill remains an issue and continues to be an issue in the conference, and the reason I rose was to emphasize the fact that if this thing should go through conference and the Senate amendment should be lost in conference, as is so usually the habit, then the precise situation the Senator from Maryland is talking about would exist.

I want to say this for the information of the Senator from Maryland. Wherever the phrase "report to Congress not yet made" occurs, and it occurs 90 percent of the time, a statement by General Markham, Chief of Engineers, made this morning is that that report may be adverse when it is made. The mere fact that data are available does not mean the Engineers are going to approve the project. It merely means they finally assemble the material upon which to make an ultimate judgment, and that judgment may be adverse.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Why does not the Senator take us on faith? The Senator himself has modified the House bill as changed, and said if that is the law ultimately he is satisfied with it, but he reflects upon the conferees that they will just meekly give in and that it will be the House bill. We are not discussing the House bill. We are discussing the Senate bill. Let us be fair with each other and not throw any more bricks around the place. I have had rather a rough time today anyhow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So far as my pending amendment is concerned it is pertinent for consideration of the Senate because it tests the good faith of the proposition that the purpose of these present authorizations is to provide work relief. If that is the purpose, there is no reason why the pending amendment should not be adopted and say so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have been trying to find out just what the objection is. To begin with, there is no appropriation made in the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, if there is no appropriation, the Senator should not be contending for any of the projects in the bill. Of course, the Senator does not want anything. He just wants to enact a law that contains these items, and there is no appropriation made and, therefore, they will never be built.

Mr. LONG. I want to call to the attention of the Senator from Michigan that we would not have had one-tenth of the navigation projects in America that we have today if we had waited for the War Department to approve them. There never would have been a Mississippi Valley project or an Ohio River project if we had had to wait on the War Department. We would not have had a steamboat at Pittsburgh today if we had waited for the War Department.

Mr. TYDINGS. We may have had a few more shallow creeks, but the deep waterways would have been maintained just the same.

The item I have picked at random is followed by another one:

Lyon County, on Grand (Neosho) River in Kansas: Levees to protect 7,020 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief Engineers; cost $237,100.

That means about $30 an acre on that little block of land containing 10 or 15 farms. I doubt if some of that land is worth $30 an acre around there in this particular locality.

The next item is:

Morris County on Grand (Neosho) River in Kansas: Channel straightening and dikes from present dike at Council Grove to Lyon County line, and permanent repairs to dikes and dredging to protect city of Council Grove; survey to be completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $150,000.

That great metropolis of Council Grove, bursting with its millions of people, and these great ocean liners going up there laden down to the gunwales with freight from all four corners of the earth.. I can see now the miles of docks along the water front in Council Grove, Kans., the busy steamships occupying the slips with their gigantic funnels sending smoke into the air, while down 100 railroad spurs there comes freight train after freight train.

The next item is:

Pensacola Reservoir on Grand (Neosho) River in Oklahoma: For flood control and other incidental benefits; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $6,263,000.

I wish we had the Neosho River over in Maryland. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that they are here as guests of the Senate. The Senate is not a hippodrome performance. Any expression of amusement, approval, or disapproval are strictly forbidden. If necessary, the Chair will order the galleries cleared.

Mr. TYDINGS. The last item was $6,263,000 for the Pensacola Reservoir on the Grand Neosho River in Oklahoma. Oklahoma is doing very well. I am very fond of the two Senators from Oklahoma, and if the bill is to pass I know of no State that I would rather see helped.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. Has the Senator no imagination? Cannot he hear that "steamboat comin' around the bend"?

Mr. TYDINGS. I can hear it. I am coming to that creek in Iowa in a moment. [Laughter.]

The next item in the bill is:

Markham Ferry Reservoir, on Grand (Neosho) River in Oklahoma: For flood control and other incident benefits; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $2,591,000.

That is one of the most important projects in America. If this bill fails, the Markham Ferry Reservoir will plunge this country into economic chaos.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator made any protest against the Government expenditures around Baltimore?

Mr. TYDINGS. I voted against such appropriations. I think that is the best protest I can make. I am one of those Senators, may I say with pride, who does not mind voting against money to be spent in his own State and who always does it when there is no justification back of the proposed appropriation. I am not bribed easily with a good chunk of pork.

Mr. LONG. How large an appropriation was made?

Mr. TYDINGS. The largest appropriation I know of was $4,800,000,000, the biggest appropriation ever made. The Senator from Maryland not only voted against it, but he spoke frequently against it, and is mighty proud that he did. Subsequent events are rapidly proving that he was not as far wrong as some thought he was at that time.

Mr. LONG. How much did Baltimore get?

Mr. TYDINGS. We did not get as much as we are going to have to pay back in taxes. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. LONG. No. I want to know how much it was.

Mr. TYDINGS. We got about $23,000,000 and will pay back $125,000,000 in taxes.

Mr. LONG. Twenty-three million dollars is a pretty good chunk of stuff.

Mr. TYDINGS. And $125,000,000 of tax money is a whole lot larger chunk of stuff.

I do not want to stray out west too far. I am trying to work east. I want to work a little down in Louisiana because we all know that this administration does not give anything to Louisiana. [Laughter.]

Red River Parish, below Shreveport, La.: Levee extension and enlargement to protect 176,000 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $150,000.

To protect the constituent of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] who owns 176,000 acres on the Red River.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ASHURST. Are copies of this bill available showing the Senate amendments? I have asked three times for a copy of the bill showing the amendments made by the Senate committee. Thus far I have been unable to get a copy. I ask, Why?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will yield, I can assure the Senator from Arizona that there is no copy with the Senate amendments available. The bill passed the House last night at 10 o'clock. It went through the Senate committee in an hour this morning. It accumulated $200,000,000 additional authorizations in the course of the hour. It is now here with about $600,000,000, and no printed report.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Did the Senate Committee on Commerce propose any amendments?

Mr. TYDINGS. About two or three hundred million dollars.

Mr. ASHURST. We should like to have printed copies showing them, at least.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Arizona that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is a most fundamental thing when Senators are asked to vote upon a bill authorizing the appropriation of two or three hundred million dollars, and no printed copies are available. Why, it transcends in ridiculousness anything I ever heard of in parliamentary procedure.

I am advised that the only copy available to the Senate of the United States is the copy at the clerk's desk; yet we are asked to pass upon a bill containing $200,000,000 of amendments. Is that true.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, then, I am disgusted. That is all I can say. Here is the one copy, which I return to the desk.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have just read an appropriation of $150,000 for Louisiana, to take care of 176,000 acres of land.

Mr. LONG. Where is that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Page 8, beginning with line 3.

Mr. LONG. All right. Now, let us see. What is that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Red River Parish, below Shreveport, La.

Mr. LONG. All right.

Mr. TYDINGS. The rest of the item is:

Levee extension and enlargement to protect 176,000 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $150,000.

Mr. LONG. I think that is an oil field.

Mr. TYDINGS. The next item is:

Bayou Pierre, La.: Channel enlargement from Bayou Wincey to mouth at Grand Encore to improve drainage; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $300,000.

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to explain that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator from Louisiana has been going down to the White House and looking through the keyhole.

Mr. LONG. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that before he interrupts another Senator he should address the Chair and obtain the Senator's permission. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The next item is:

Natchitoches Parish, La.: Levees on west side of Red River, dam and floodgate at mouth of Cane River and drainage ditches; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $315,000.

Saline Point, Avayelles and Catahoula Parishes, La.: Cut-off to reduce flood heights; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $135,000.

Black Bayou, La.: Earth dam and reservoir for flood storage to protect 3,000 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $125,000.

Poor old Louisiana. The way they leave Louisiana out of these large Federal appropriations breaks my heart, and fills my soul with well-nigh unbearable grief. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TYDINGS. For a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not wish to divert the Senator from the larger amounts to which he is now referring, but I know the particular music from which he is singing does not have the Senate committee amendments in it, and I should like to have him know that the Atchafalaya Basin in Louisiana got $27,000,000 in 5 minutes this morning in the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. That shows how little the Senator from Michigan knows. He does not even know the name of the river. That river is longer and wider than all the rivers in Michigan put together, but the Senator from Michigan does not even know the name of it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And it is getting more money than all Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TYDINGS. I refuse to yield just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Everything I read is plus. The committee may have added something to the bill, but there have been no reductions; you may bet on that. So at least I am giving you the minimum picture.

FIRE POINT, CADDO PARISH, LA.

Fire Point, Caddo Parish, La.: Cut-off and levee to prevent extensive levee relocation; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $135,000.

With each new paragraph my grief for Louisiana, and the bad treatment she has received, mounts in an overwhelming flood.

Bayou Bodcau, La.: Floodway for the diversion of Bayou Bodcau and Cypress Creek to protect 70,000 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost ——.

The ridiculous sum of $1,825,000; a mere bagatelle; just a drop in the bucket; only a dollar for every man, woman, and child in Louisiana is on just that one project. There are only 1,800,000 people in Louisiana. There is $1 for every head on that one project—$1,825,000; a dollar a head. Poor old Louisiana. Here her senior Senator sits tonight, pleading her case, while Congress has given an overnight pension of a dollar a head to every man, woman, and child in the State on just one little project. Of course, none of it will have to be paid back by those people. They will get that dollar apiece, and none of it will ever have to be paid back. There is nothing to worry about—not a thing in the world. That money we are going to make down here at the mint. We are not going to tax anybody for it; or England is going to pay her war debt. Certainly the farmers of Minnesota will never have to raise that money. Delaware peaches will not pay a cent of it, or Rhode Island textiles, or Kansas corn or wheat—either liquid or in grain.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator know how many millions of dollars Louisiana spent to give these States the Mississippi River and the Atchafalaya River? For the Senator's information, I will say that Louisiana has spent about $200,000,000 so that the Nation might have a river over which it has no jurisdiction in Louisiana. Louisiana today is bonded for $200,000,000 that the ships of Maryland and of Iowa, if they go that high, or wherever they go, may use that river.

Mr. TYDINGS. Or Switzerland. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Switzerland, Germany, and everybody else that comes to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot allow the Senator to speak in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. LONG. Will not the Senator let me complete this sentence?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. We have spent $200,000,000 on that river, as I have stated.

Mr. TYDINGS. The next item is:

Bayou Des Glaises, La.: Diversion ditch from Moreauville to borrow pit of West Atchafalaya levee at Lake Bayou to improve drainage for 90,000 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $280,000.

Only a quarter of a million dollars—$280,000.

Wallace Lake, La.: Earth dam and reservoir for flood storage to protect 176,000 acres of land; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $380,000.

A mere bagatelle; only a third of a million dollars.

Shreves Island below Shreveport, La.: Cut-off and levee to eliminate extensive levee relocation; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $97,500.

Grant Parish and Colfax, La.: Levees on east side of Red River to protect 48,000 acres of land, and cut-off to protect Colfax; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $450,000.

A mere bagatelle; only half a million, $450,000.

Now I am going to tell the Vice President something, my friend sitting here on the floor, and a keen observer of human beings.

I sometimes think it pays to filibuster, because when we have an important bill before us on the next to the last night one is pretty apt to have his own State pretty well taken care of; he is pretty apt to find that four or five million dollars of projects that would not have a show otherwise are in the bill, and, instead of filibustering against it, one is apt to work for it.

I simply pass that on as a bit of philosophy for whatever it is worth. If I am any judge of the human being, the boys who anticipated the end went into a huddle, and they decided to make the thing bulletproof. It is too bad they did not call me in on that conference.

Mr. President, I do not impute bad motives to anyone, but I rather suspect that Louisiana received pretty generous treatment because it was hoped by those interested in the measure that other projects in the bill would pass, and therefore why not remove what might be an obstacle to its speedy passage, even though it cost eight or nine million dollars which we would not otherwise appropriate? What is six or eight million dollars between friends?

I have that much measure of friendship for my fellow Senator from Arizona. Eight million dollars would never buy the friendship between us, and why not therefore give to Louisiana $8,000,000 worth of friendly projects, even though they are not needed, even though the engineers in the Army have not recommended them, and never will? That land has to be protected, and this bill has to be protected, and the only way to protect the Neosho, or whatever the river was in Kansas, was to give Louisiana six or eight million dollars worth of projects.

Of course, I live in a State with no water in it. Everybody knows that the Potomac River—well, it is only a brook, and the Chesapeake Bay is only a little stream, and the Susquehanna River, which is the largest river east of the Mississippi, arising away up in New York State, and a mile wide at its mouth, and having on it four of the largest power plants in the world—that is only a little stream, and the Elk and Bohemia and the Patapsco and the Patuxent would make most of these so-called "rivers" look like rain trickling across the pavement from a broken rain spout in a 5-minute April shower. [Laughter.]

Yet, think of those great rivers out West, where the giant ocean liners come laden down, where the babble of many languages is heard on the foredeck up around the forecastle, where the Chinamen and the Lithuanians and the Portuguese and the Morrocans and the Italians and the Englishmen and the Irishmen all man the decks when the liner sails up the Neosho River out in Kansas [laughter], and the five tugboats come out to warp her into the docks, and the 1,000 people of Council Falls who happen to be standing on the wharf, and the million back in the interior of the city are waiting for friends returning from Addis Ababa, Abyssinia. They have to have deep water, or that great port will perish.

I look over here at my lovable friend the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and think how the wheat farmers out in the hot July sun, after they have been going along behind the reaper picking up one bundle of wheat after another, and hoisting it upon the large wagon and taking it to the thresher, finally taking all of their goods down to the Neosho River and shipping them over to Belgium, and to France, and to China through the Panama Canal, because those ships go right down the Neosho into the Mississippi, and far down around the Horn and up again to all the eastern world—when I think of taking that $385,000 away from that greater metropolis and leaving those poor Kansas farmers stranded out there, with all their millions of bushels of wheat, I cannot repress a tear. [Laughter.]

Of course, down in Louisiana, that delightful and lovable and romantic country, where the French and the Spaniards and the Anglo-Saxons have intermingled with the charming civilization and delightful cosmopolitan population, where the poor little Mississippi is only 2½ feet deep and only 150 yards wide, where they bring these cargoes, not in big ships but in little rowboats, the ships being anchored 250 miles out in the Gulf of Mexico because of the shallow water, I say with a heavy heart, thank heaven, Congress has at last come to the rescue of the poor old shallow Mississippi and poor old Louisiana.

We are going to dig those 2½ feet down to 35 feet, gentlemen, and make that little 150-yard wide river down there by the Delta 3 miles wide, so that she, like the Neosho, in Kansas, and Council Falls, may enjoy the commerce of the world, and be the crossroads of mighty shipping, as is the metropolis of the State which the senior Senator from Kansas represents.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator know that the Mississippi River was not navigable until along about the fifties or the sixties until the Eads jetties were constructed?

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator know that the Susquehanna River was not navigable at the same time when the Mississippi River was not navigable, and that private capital built a tremendous barge canal from the head of the Chesapeake Bay, which is 7 miles wide, away up into the coal and lumber fields of Pennsylvania, and that down that river there came tens of thousands of white-pine logs and hemlock every spring, and the greatest sawmills in this country were constructed in the town where I was born and raised, and that there we reshipped cargoes of coal and lumber to the four corners of the earth, and that at the same time one could walk across the Susquehanna, three-quarters of a mile wide at the town of Havre de Grace, stepping on barges continually, ocean-going and bay-going barges loaded with coal, and with dozens of tugboats flying all around; and that if we had had only 1 percent as much money as was spent in the first 75 miles of the Mississippi it would have been possible today to sail up the Chesapeake Bay and up the Susquehanna all the way to New York State?

But, lo and behold, Senators who were forward-looking and progressive men did not come here and get the river dredged out, as was done in Louisiana. Yet the Susquehanna runs through one of the richest countries of oil and coal and lumber and slate and many other minerals to be found in this country. It is a part of the old wealth. John D. Rockefeller's fortune was established on that watershed, as well as the fortunes of many of our lumber kings. Many of the richest people in this country laid the foundations of their fortunes on the Susquehanna River, and the fortunes of those days, though small as compared with those of today, have grown with the years, until the holders thereof, or their descendants, have become among the richest in the land.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator further know that Lake Pontchartrain, which Robert Fulton asked to have connected with the Mississippi River, never was connected but that the people of Louisiana spent $26,250,000 and that they have never yet received that money back from the Federal Government?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I live in a little town called Havre de Grace, a little town of 4,500 people. Up the river 4 miles there is a little town called Port Deposit. Across the river is the little town of Perryville. Before any of these dams were constructed, in the last 20 years, every spring when the ice and snow would melt on the Susquehanna watershed it would come down and flood the town I live in until water in some parts of the town would rise 6, 8, and 10 feet in the streets. It was a common sight to see many of the citizens in the part of the town which was closer to sea level rowing up and down the streets in rowboats.

In Port Deposit they used to move out when the waters came down for fear of being drowned. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] is familiar with those days and with that situation. Did those people ever come to Washington and ask for $385,000? It would have been the last thing they ever thought of doing. Somehow there is something about the old stock which had stayed there 4 or 5 or 6 or 7 or 8 or 9 or 10 generations. There is something about those people. They do not ask other people to help them. They stay and take it. They are the salt of this country, and without them we could not have a country. They do not run to Washington every time they have a little disaster. Time after time their houses have been swept away.

The State of Maryland on one or two occasions has made small appropriations to relieve distress, but if you would call a mass meeting and ask the people to come over and introduce a bill to repay them for some of the losses in the spring, I do not believe you could get five people to go and attend a mass meeting for that purpose. They are not built that way. They stand on their own feet. They stood on their own feet in the same town for 5 or 6 or 7 generations, and have not gone westward to conquer the great unknown, and I sometimes believe even now they are the only real pioneers we have left in America, because they never lost the art of self reliance. They never ran to the Government for help for every little thing that happened to them. They have not been pork-barrel raiders. They are poor people, but, by Heaven, there is no finer citizenship to be found on the face of the earth.

The whole tendency today is not to be self-reliant. If a man gets into trouble he wants a bill passed. If a group gets into trouble it wants a bill passed. People want it paid out of the Public Treasury. Oh, it is all right while it is going out. Then everybody is for it. While the money is being handed out nobody must protest. But wait until pay day comes—and it will come, Senators—and we shall squirm here in our seats, not wanting to vote for this tax and that tax, saying that the poor cannot stand any more taxes, and that the law of diminishing returns eventually will bring less money into the Government by way of confiscation, if it is necessary, than income tax would bring in if the principal on which the income is predicated is not diminished. Oh, we will squirm here. And I am not going to vote for the tax bill when it comes up either. I do not feel called upon to vote for it. I have not voted for these large appropriations, and I do not feel called upon to tax the people. Let those who advocate the spending of this money vote these chains and shackles upon the bent backs of humanity.

Do you tell me that these huge sums are going to increase the purchasing power of the people? It is a sham, an economic sophistry, because you will no sooner give them that purchasing power than you will levy taxes to take it away, with the interest on the money you gave them originally through years and years and years. You are building up a Frankenstein monster. About $883,000,000 of the sum appropriated was necessary. That would have humanely taken care of everyone in need in this country, and normal business recovery, without too great legislative dislocation, would have done the rest. Who is going to work when there is no reward for work? How many men in the Senate have ever had to meet a pay roll? How many men have ever tried to keep a business going on borrowed capital through a dull period? From the man who tries to keep paying his regular pay roll, and tries to keep his employees working for him, who carries his business through the depression with his bad debts and canceled orders, with large stocks of raw materials that he has to finance over that period until the wheels of industry must turn again—from him the impulse for recovery must come.

I am not one of those who hate success. I would have to hate Henry Ford then. What did Henry Ford do? From small beginning with business genius and with sticktoitiveness and with perseverance he built up a mighty industry and carried transportation and knowledge to all the people of this land.

Some people do not like those who hold railroad bonds. Well, without railroad bonds we would have no railroads. We cannot build them on air. Where would we get the money today to carry on all these huge expenditures except by borrowing it from the people who saved it?

I may be wrong. I mean no reflection on anyone, and I say it realizing that I possibly am wrong, but I venture to predict that the roll call upon this bill—the vote "aye" will be listed as the roll call of shame. It will be called the roll call of legislative shame if we add $500,000,000 on top of the $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 already available of money we have not got, and have not the nerve to raise—if you want to hear the naked truth—because we have not the nerve to raise it now.

That is what the people will think of it. And the man who goes home and says, "I got $642,000 for my district or my locality", he will be sitting pretty a little while, until old General Common Sense gets to work in the mind of every individual who votes at the polling booth, and then he will be somewhat like a very elderly man who had seen a great deal of politics in a small town, often described as a typical political situation. Election time is coming. A bunch of political workers are grouped together and are calling over the poll books. The name of John Brown is called. Somebody said, "Is he for our side or against our side?" Someone who knows John Brown said, "He is against our side." "Well, how is that?" they say. "Did we not just lately put John Brown in a new pavement, and repair the road in front of his place, and put him on garbage disposal for his house, which he never before had, all at his request, and now John Brown is against us. How do you account for that?" This old seasoned politician said, "He has got all that." [Laughter.]

This will look beautiful right now until pay day comes, which will be our comparable election time, and then the way we will lose votes by these supposed benefits will just be too bad, particularly for those of my friends who sit on this side of the Chamber, including the speaker.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The Senator asks where the money came from to build the railroads which run through the West. I am sure the Senator will recall that the United States Government gave $60,000,000 toward the building of the Union Pacific and that is how it was built. That came out of the Public Treasury and resulted in one of the great scandals of the age.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not only did the Federal Government give money but the State legislatures gave rights-of-way 10 or 15 miles wide to get them to build the railroad, and after they built it tried to enact laws to take the right-of-away away from them.

Mr. BONE. But they did not succeed.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; because the courts intervened. It was wrong to give such large rights-of-way to start with; it was unnecessary; but a man ought to be as good as his bargain. If the States encouraged people to come in and invest because of the benefits and privileges and opportunities, they ought to be good enough to go through with their bargain. I have no more use for a legislature which will induce some industry to come into its borders by making some great overture to it, and as soon as it comes then turn against it and try to take all of it away, assuming the benefits were given honestly and in good faith, than I have for a man who repudiates his note. There is no difference at all.

After they got the railroad it came back to the old political illustration, "Yes, but we have the railroad now. It does not make any difference what the legislature promised them when they came in here." Of course, there is graft in railroads, there is graft in politics, there is graft in religion.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator from Maryland understand we are trying to take any railroad away from him?

Mr. TYDINGS. Nobody is going to take a railroad away from me because I have no railroad. In any line of business, agriculture, or anything else, we find the good and the bad, good and bad in every sense of the word, just as we find good and bad preachers or good and bad railroad administrations. But we will not find any good at all in a graft bill, even if it had $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 for Louisiana in it. I would not even bring in the name of any high official of this Government, but I know that one of our Members from time to time has seen fit to say some pretty unkind things about this administration. However, they certainly have rewarded him with charity. [Laughter.] Faith, hope, charity—these three, but the greatest of these is charity.

The Senator from Louisiana cannot any more go down into Louisiana and say this administration has not treated him right, because he has more per capita than almost anybody else in this body. If he had filibustered on the next to the last day of the last session just 2 hours longer he would have had more than half of all the money in the bill. [Laughter.] He quit about an hour too soon, and that cost him at least $100,000,000. But he is not going to filibuster this time, not on this bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Maryland convinced me the last time that filibustering was not proper. I hope he is not objecting to my reform?

Mr. TYDINGS. I still hold to that opinion when it comes from the Senator from Louisiana, because I see the fruits of his evil work. [Laughter.]

I am not going to give any recipes for potlikker; but I am going to give a recipe to the taxpayers of the country as to whom they should and whom they should not elect to Congress if they want less taxes.

Of course, I know there is a large group of American citizens who belong to that great league known as "The Increased Taxes League." I think the membership in the Increased Taxes League runs into the millions. The farmers of Louisiana are all for increased taxes. Its membership will be found all over the West and even in my own State. Great organizations are clamoring that Congress shall enact laws with bigger and finer and better taxes. It is said that one State found at least three things which so far had not been taxed. I am certain that all those who are going to pay the taxes—particularly the taxes, we will say first of all, to make up any deficit that might be incurred in any one of these departments—will be overjoyed. They would rather pay that deficit and have this $500,000,000 added on to it than to pay just a $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 deficit. The people of the country, of course, according to those who will support the bill, believe that the bigger the taxes the finer everything will be. What is $500,000,000 of new debts?

I am sure the people are sitting up tonight just praying for an opportunity to pay off the $8,000,000 of national debt which will be incurred for taking care of those levees down in Louisiana. I can hear them saying, "I hope that bill passes to give Louisiana $8,000,000, because I want so badly to go down in my pocket and put that money into the Treasury of the United States so those dear levees in Louisiana may be built up to a proper height."

We come to Massachusetts. Of course, Massachusetts has about 4,500,000 people, if I recollect rightly. Massachusetts has about one-twenty-fifth of all the people in the country. Of course, this bill will put people to work. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said that the great benefit of the bill would be to put people to work. One out of every 25 people in the United States lives in Massachusetts. What big appropriations they get up there! North Adams gets $66,000, and that is all for Massachusetts.

But we did not overlook Vermont. Vermont is in the bill strong for $216,000. There are two votes in this body from Vermont. Vermont is a little State, but two votes are just as good from a little State as from a large State.

When we come to New York—of course, that is one of the small States in the Union—it has only one representative in the lower House, but under the Constitution it has two representatives in this body. I think the population of New York in the entire State is something like 250,000. [Laughter.] New York—that great big State—gets $43,000. Of course, if it should ever grow to the size of ten or twelve million people and have many unemployed, the committee might raise the sum; but $43,000 will take care of the 250,000 men, women, and children who happen to reside in the old Empire State at this time.

Vermont is in this bill at two or three places; but it was in different paragraphs and I did not notice that Rutland, Vt., is to get $49,000. That is for the construction of dikes up there. You know, Vermont very much resembles Holland. It is low, flat country. [Laughter.]

They have to have a lot of dikes up there or the sea will come in and absolutely wipe Vermont off the face of the earth.

Have you ever been to Vermont in tulip time? [Laughter.] You see those great plains up there, with the canals weaving through them like beautiful silver threads on a green carpet. You look across miles and miles of level country and see the windmills of Vermont turning round and round. Off here to the left is a field of beautiful cattle grazing—Holsteins, black and white—and the Vermonters, with their pink cheeks and their wooden shoes clattering back and forth as they visit among each other. [Laughter.] But always there is the sea [laughter], threatening at any minute to come in and dash this beautiful picture, this actual madrigal, into smithereens.

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then when I think of my noble friend, who now rises, sticking his finger in the hole in the dike to save the country [great laughter]——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again admonish the occupants of the galleries that if there should be further demonstrations the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to ask the very eloquent Senator from Maryland if he is familiar with the yarn of the man who was accustomed to brag or blow about his own State? I believe he was talking to a Vermonter on one occasion, when the Vermonter, after listening carefully, and appreciating his art, said to him, "Well, there is one thing about it, sir. Although you live far from the sea, if you could suck as hard as you can blow, you could make your town a seaport." [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. I am familiar with the story; and I may say to the Senator that I am only blowing about Vermont to keep its windmills turning. [Laughter.]

When I see my friend from Vermont standing there through the long summer evening, with his $66,000 finger in the hole in the dike, lest this financial flood will be used elsewhere and not flow through the fertile plains of old Vermont, I cannot bring myself to oppose this appropriation. In the case of Vermont, with its plains, and always the sea out there, I say the Senate has been parsimonious and has disregarded the natural beauty of that waving stretch of land.

Then there is Otter Creek Basin. The Senator and I will remember when, as boys, we walked down Otter Creek. He will remember that I had to be 12 years of age before I could run and jump across it; yet $49,000 will mark the spot where we spent our glorious boyhood. No longer even now, as a mature man, will I be able to jump over the 25 yards of watery expanse as a result of dredging that great stream to the sea, the Atlantic itself.

Mr. BAILEY. How much does that cost us?

Mr. TYDINGS. Only $49,000.

Mr. BAILEY. All right; it is worth it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, when we come to Pennsylvania, there is a State that is just permeated with rivers. They have streams there that make the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri in their lower reaches look like a fireman's hose. If you go to Williamsport, on the upper reaches of the Monongahela and the Ohio, it takes $1,880,000 to take care of that river at Williamsport. Up at Lock Haven, away out on the Susquehanna—an awful branch of the Susquehanna—it takes $2,200,000 to take care of matters around Lock Haven. Mind you, the river is not navigable, but that is no reason why we should not spend $2,200,000 on the river at Lock Haven. You cannot ship anything down it; you cannot ship anything up it; but what has that to do with Lock Haven getting $2,200,000?

Now I come to Jersey Shore, Pa. I always thought the Jersey shores were in New Mexico, but now I find that Jersey Shore is in Pennsylvania, and because of that they are entitled to $304,000.

And then there is Muncy, Pa. Most Senators have been to Muncy. I do not mean Muncie, Ind., but Muncy, Pa. The Muncie in Indiana is only a village, and that is spelled M-u-n-c-i-e, but this Muncy is spelled M-u-n-c-y. It is a town of 2,625 inhabitants, situated on the bank of a stream 3 miles wide. As I have said, the inland commerce on this magnificent stream has been one of the great wonders of the world; and it is connected up with the Great Lakes, so that when the St. Lawrence Treaty is ratified, the great ships may proceed on to the ocean through the northern route, and thereby cut off 5 days of the time necessary now to go to Europe. [Laughter.]

They do not have any floods at Harrisburg. At Harrisburg, as you ride over the river, you can see the rocks. You can almost walk across the rocks of the Susquehanna at Harrisburg at low water; but it ought to have $80,000. I want Senators to know that Harrisburg is one of our finest cities, and the capital of the great State of Pennsylvania. Why, if you were to bring in this bill and leave out Harrisburg, words would fail me in my denunciation of your lack of comprehension and esteem for that great capital, which was built up there on the banks of the Susquehanna, and is a monument to civic righteousness and virtue.

Down at Havre de Grace, where I live, where they really have floods, of course, we do not actually need any money.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. The Senator continues to refer to Havre de Grace, where he lives. I think he will find that the committee has not held that against Havre de Grace.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the Senator from Louisiana on the committee?

Mr. LONG. No; I am not on it.

Mr. TYDINGS. That accounts for it. [Laughter.]

There is Sunbury, Pa. They need levees there to protect people and city property, and they want only $72,000. Senators, I do not think we ought to pass Sunbury by lightly. When we come to think of it, in such a town as Sunbury are to be found the finest traditions with which our Republic is surrounded. You can see Sunbury there now, nestling in the little foothills, the barefoot boy going down to the creek, the wheels of industry turning, the white picket fences, and the old Pennsylvania colonial stone architecture. The only thing that is lacking in that inland town is a waterway. Why not bring the Susquehanna in on a beautiful curve, and let it go out again? [Laughter.]

It is a fitting town for a song like Home, Sweet Home, Here Comes the Steamboat Round the Bend, and, if memory serves me aright, the latter song was written there, and my industrious friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] told me no longer ago than yesterday, in the most solemn tones, that one thing he intended to do while he was in the Congress was to wipe that blot of shame from the cheek of Sunbury, where such a lovely song had been written, by seeing that the Susquehanna was brought into the town so that the steamboat actually could be seen coming 'round the bend, and that blot would be taken away.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, has the Senator reached the State of Michigan in his analysis?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not as yet, but I am hoping to get there sometime between now and daybreak.

York! Gentlemen, may I turn from the facetious to the very serious, and say that York is getting mighty close to home? It is only about 22 miles from that little town to Havre de Grace, as the crow flies, and it is one of the most lovely and beautiful and industrious towns to be found in this country.

Not far from the Gettysburg Battlefield, the hills of central Maryland roll up to it, and it is as lovely a countryside as I know. It adjoins 2 of the 3 richest counties in the United States, according to the Department of Agriculture.

York is really a thoroughly progressive American town, and I suppose it has a population of 50,000 or more, perhaps a hundred thousand, although I do not like to guess. But it has not a river. [Laughter.]

The town is absolutely inland. There are two little bridges, I think, on the approach to York, which cross a couple of little streams there which we used to ford, but we have $1,700,000 to dig a lovely river right through the town. [Laughter.]

I can see the committee now in its committee room. I can see them when the clerk read, "The next proposition is York, Pa., retarding dams and tunnel improvements, to protect people and city property." I can see the Senators now as they put their arms down on their chairs, and thought mighty hard about the terrible problem that poor old York has. I can see them pulling out their handkerchiefs and wiping the perspiration from their brows and imploring Heaven for wisdom as to what ought to be done to save York from being wiped off the face of this earth.

Finally, after they had consulted one with the other, and the Encyclopedia Britannica, and the Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire, and the laws of Charlemagne, and strength of material, and differential and integral calculus, and trigonometry, and solid geometry and plane geometry, and the Chief Engineers of the United States had been interviewed, and after Einstein had worked the thing out by the invisible logarithm, it was found that $1,700,000 would save old York. [Laughter.]

York! There she stands secure, once these retarding walls and dams are built, and will serve notice on Father Neptune that even though the Atlantic Ocean breaks loose and comes all the way across Pennsylvania it can never break down the walls that surround old York. There is a stronghold that cannot be torn down. [Laughter.]

I am going to pass over the Potomac River Basin because I know that the Senator from the District of Columbia, who is a member of the committee, elected by the people, saw to it that this section was not left out; although I suspect that most of the digging is going to be done in some State, but the District of Columbia is going to have the label put on it, because there is no water in the District of Columbia. When you get out in the Potomac you are apt to be in either Virginia or Maryland. Nevertheless, this work is going to be done for the District of Columbia.

I think they are going to parallel the little railway which runs over to the Senate Office Building with another tunnel, and fill it with water, and Senators who do not like the rapid passage in the cars can row over in their own individual rowboats.

Moorefield, W. Va., levees on the Moorefield River. West Virginia is a more mountainous State than almost any other State in the Union, and these improvements are to be built at the town of Moorefield, W. Va. The Moorefield River is well known in song and story. You could go over in the streets of Prague, you could go to Budapest, you could go down the Adriatic coast and walk over through the hills of Ragusa, and you could stop any shepherd out there with his flock and you could say to him, if you could speak his language, "Do you know where the Moorefield River is?" And without an instant's delay he would reply, "Certainly. Out in West Virginia." [Laughter.]

That great stream, rising, as it does, between mountains 5 miles high on either side, makes one feel that he is on the Italian lakes, so much grandeur of watery expanses there is on the Moorefield River. I am told that this appropriation is not for dredging, but that the people of that locality once went out to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and there saw all the pigments made by nature and caught by the resplendent sun; all the beauty; every color in the spectrum. They came back and looked at these giant, towering cliffs 5 miles high at Moorefield, W. Va.; then they looked down at the tiny stream that is 3 feet wide, and they realized they never could have a stream of water as that which flows through the Grand Canyon, but they are going to use this appropriation to paint the walls so that they will outshine those in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

Gentlemen of the Senate, a bit of homesickness overcomes me, and nostalgia that I can hardly bear.

My thoughts go back to the pre-Civil War days. I am going to ask you to shut your eyes and go with me way down South upon the Suwannee River. "Can't you sit there in the moonlight and hear those darkeys singing?" Cannot you see the palmettos rustling in the evening zephyrs? The fragrance of honeysuckle is in my nostrils and my old colored mammy says "Come on in, honey, and get some mo' sweet potatoes."

Well, we are down on the Savannah River, way down in Augusta, Ga., God bless her. Levees and retaining walls to protect the people and city property in dear old Augusta, 687,000 simoleons as they call them there, or dollars on the floor of the United States Senate.

Then there is West Point, Ga., and Lanette, Ala. There are levees and channel improvements, and floodway clearing to protect people and city property. And boy, that is going to cost just $700,000 of Uncle Sam's money.

Then there is Choctawhatchee River Basin. That is at Geneva, Ala. And did I not hear that hard-working and assiduous Senator from Alabama, the senior Senator from that State [Mr. BLACK], who with great fervor this afternoon told about the waste of the Government's money in connection with subsidies, contracts made with shipping companies, and political influence which got the contracts! Gentlemen of the Senate, rest assured there is not a bit of political influence in old Alabama appropriations. They are based on real merit! And this is no subsidy, because unless the Senate appropriates that money, the old Commonwealth upon which stars have fallen is going well nigh to fall to pieces. [Laughter.] She just cannot exist without this appropriation. And I know that both the Senators from Alabama are going to rise up and vote against this iniquitous outlay even though there is no politics in it, and even though the War Department has not approved it. Even though it is not a subsidy, we are not going to see those Senators stand up and vote for that sort of thing.

Then there is Caryville, Fla. Well, there are two Senators from Florida in this body, and I do not believe there is a State in the Union which has been left out. No; I do not believe there is a State in the Union which has been left out. It just so happens, gentlemen of the Senate, that all these projects are built upon merit. These 48 States are not all put in here just because they want to get enough votes to put the measure through. Why, these projects have been gone over with a fine-tooth comb. Permit me to say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] that he can rest assured that if this work is not done very shortly, we will never get out of this depression, never; and "never" is a mighty long time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to say to my friend from Maryland that there are a great many virtuous items in this bill which I do not wish him to lose sight of nor to ignore.

Mr. TYDINGS. The most virtuous sights I see in this bill are the semicolons and the periods.

Mr. LEWIS. There are some of those which serve as stops.

Mr. TYDINGS. If they would only put the comma in at other places in some of these appropriations I should be more willing to support the measure. For example, here we have six figures, $263500. They have put the comma between the 3 and the 5, making $263,500. If they had put the comma between the 2 and the 6, and put a period before the last two naughts it would have read $2,635. It just simply goes to show that much depends on where you put the decimal point. It is a small thing, but it is very important when the time comes to pay your income taxes.

Mr. LEWIS. May I inform my able friend from Maryland that there is extant in Massachusetts a man by the name of Tucker who desires to be known as the author of a book? He could not write much of a book or anything else. He knew nothing about punctuation. However, he prepared something which looked like a book, and not knowing what to do in the matter of punctuation he put all his punctuation marks at the end of the book with the note that those who read the book could put the punctuation wherever they pleased. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, the men who drafted this bill were a little more meticulous. They saw to it that a good, big sum of money was put under the label of each State of the Union, and they did not put all the money at the end of the bill and leave somebody else to divide it up. The men who considered this bill and who must have worked on it until they were on the verge of a nervous break-down, saw to it that no such injustice would be done as might have been done if this had been in a lump sum and put in the discretion of the Army Engineers for proper expenditures.

So far I have not paid my respects to the committee which considered this bill. I remember a while ago a bill was pending to give one of the Members of this body a medal for a very heroic act at a time of a great disaster. If I remember it after I finish these remarks I am going to ask to reconsider that action. I want to bring that bill back before the Senate because when I think of the mental strain and the research and the physical examination of the ground and the thousands upon thousands of photographs which were examined, the geological construction of the ground to be improved, the adding machines which were used, the subtracting machines which were used, the roll calls which were used—when I think of these men meeting from sunrise every day until long after the herd has come down the road in the evening and gone to bed at night, working 18, 19, and 20 hours a day, and on one day they work 25 hours out of 24 making this survey of the United States from coast to coast, hearing all the petitions—when I think of all that, I feel that the medal should be awarded to those men.

Why, that little town there of Elba, Ala! There was a time months ago, of course, when they began consideration of this bill when special trains came here from Elba. Experts of all kinds having data upon any subject which could be desired relating to the town of Elba came here. And the 163 people who got off that special train came before the committee presided over by the senior Senator from New York. I remember he went down the line and shook hands with each one of them, and he allowed them 5 days in which to present their case. A spokesman stepped forward, the mayor of Elba, a very distinguished man, dressed in the old southern style, with his black coat, and his high black hat, and his flowing black tie, and his white waistcoat—he stepped forward, and while I am not much of a mimic, I can almost give you his words and a little of his mannerism. He said:

Suh, I want to thank you powahful much for giving me this opportunity to tell you about old Elba. Now I know that a good many of you Yankees ain't been down in Elba since you took your carpetbags in 1870 when Wade Hampton ran you out with the red shirts, and you flew North to more peaceful and more lucrative pursuits. But that has nothing to do with the matter which brought me up here or with the bodyguard representing the citizenship of our distinguished and charming little southern metropolis, and if I may say it, old scores are forgotten, the old Civil War is dead, and I just as leave have a mint julep with a Yankee as most anybody else today. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that after I have presented our case I should be delighted if you gentlemen would come down to the Raleigh Hotel, where old Uncle Cornelius will just take a little mint and some bourbon, and I am sure we can get action upon this little matter in no time at all.

[Laughter.]

Well, sir—

The Senator replied—

we thank you very much for this very touching tribute and for your charming and delightful hospitality, so characteristic of the old South. But, gentlemen, this is a bill—think of it—to spend $500,000,000; and we are working on it because we realize the magnitude of the sum involved. It is the people's money. It must not be wasted. They will have to pay it back in taxes. The farmer who toils down the furrow will have to pay it back. The miner in the bowels of the earth will have to pay it back; the poor in my own city of New York will have to pay it back; and, gentlemen, although the temptation of that mint julep—even now in my mind's eye I see its amber beads; I hear the tinkling of the ice against the brim, and on it I see the green emerald flag waving o'er its top. When I think of all these velvet drops—

He was trying to outdo my friend from Elba—floating down my throat like a dew drop burying itself in the heart of the rose, it is all I can do—I must save this money for the people. I must see that it is spent wisely. I wish the witness would pardon me while I wipe a tear of regret from my right eye.

[Laughter.]

Then, of course, the witness went on. He was equipped with the Statistical Abstract of the United States. He was a very businesslike man and talked very briskly. He had come from the North. He had only been living in Elba, Ala., about 25 years, bringing with him the fine old energetic spirit of New England. He had decided to come down to Elba. He turned and said:

Gentlemen, I always believe in fortifying myself with facts; and in making this appeal for Elba, Ala., I shall quote from page 651 of the Statistical Abstract of the United States, which shows our imports and exports for the year 1933. Imports $2,653,000,000, exports $500,000,000. Now, you will be somewhat astounded that our imports are five times as great as our exports; but, gentlemen, the reason for that is that boats of foreign tonnage do not draw as much water as our boats. If we had a little deeper river there leading up to the fine old metropolis of Elba, so that our own ships could come up and get our exports and bear them on the breasts of the seven seas to people all over the earth, instead of having $2,500,000,000 of imports and $500,000,000 of exports, as soon as you deepen our harbor our exports will balance our imports and keep $2,000,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States. Need I say more, gentlemen?

[Laughter.]

He took his seat. One could have heard a pin drop. The committee went into a huddle. Finally the chairman came out of the huddle and, addressing the newcomer from Elba, Ala., said:

Rest assured, my friend, your matter shall receive our serious attention in executive session. But it is not the policy of the committee to pass on these matters in open session, for reasons best known to ourselves. Next witness.

Then came a long chain of witnesses. There were 163 who came from Elba. Everything was examined about Elba except the kitchen stove in John Brown's house and the third room of an old shack out on the last road running north and south between Montgomery and Birmingham. Somebody did ask about that, but he was told he need not bother to answer.

The witnesses were asked about the number of people, whether the babies had blue heads or brown heads or pink heads or bone heads, or whatever kind of heads they had. That was a matter into which the Committee on Commerce went most carefully, as it did the width of the streets, the character of pavements, whether they had a building code, how many ships came into Elba and left each year, whether they were of steel or wood or concrete, the industries of the town, the great gigantic steel mills of Elba employing alone 23,265 men all the year round; the vast cotton mills, dozens of them out on the levees of Elba, Ala., wherein worked hundreds and hundreds of growing, healthy, young, vigorous, strong, independent Americans; the freight yards of Elba, with row after row of sidetracks, almost like a child's toy house, and loaded with freight cars.

Weeks went along and, finally, after several weeks, the chairman said, "We must get along." So much information had been given about the water resources of Elba that the committee felt that they could not tell exactly what Elba should have. The chairman said they would have been better off if they had had no information at all because the superior way in which Elba presented its case to the committee made it impossible for all the members of the committee to keep up with the array of statistics which Elba presented.

Finally, a pair of dice were obtained. The dice were shaken and the first two numbers that came out were 2 and 6. Then they shook the dice again and 3 and 5 came out. Then shaking them again the chairman put his hands over them and said, "They have no naughts upon them, but we will put a couple naughts upon those other figures." So Elba, after careful, searching, complete, and comprehensive examination, was awarded a little over a quarter of a million dollars.

Gentlemen of the Senate, do you realize the population of Elba, Ala.? I doubt if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] knows that Elba proudly boasts of 262,000 souls. Does the Senator know that the shipyards of Elba built the boat which will win for America the supremacy of the sea against the Normandie, and the Queen Mary when she is launched in 1939? Perhaps Senators will remember Elba, Ala., as the place where Napoleon stayed until he went back to France for his vacation of 100 days. Charming little place, with the sea all around it. One can stand on Elba, Ala., and look for miles and miles—over mountain ranges! [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, how much did Elba receive?

Mr. TYDINGS. Elba received $263,500, a little more than a quarter of a million dollars. I think, in view of the fact that Elba is as important as it is the committee has been a little parsimonious with Elba. Why could not they have made that $264,000 or $265,000? No; they had to cut it down to $263,500, when only $1,500 more would have given them a round figure. That shows how parsimonious those senatorial committees get and how they hold onto a nickel and will not let go. [Laughter.] That $1,500 taken off this appropriation, may I say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], will probably result in Elba's taking second place in the exports and imports of the United States. They will not have the big facilities to handle it as New York has with this cut in their appropriation. They receive only $263,500 when $265,000 spent at Elba would have made New York look like Sheboygan, Wis. [Laughter.]

But I desire to return to the committee. I started to pay them a tribute, but how can I ever do it?

This is the 23d of August. Just think of it, Senators! Think of it! For 6 weeks and 4 days this committee has been working on this bill 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, and, on one occasion, 19½ hours a day. Through all this heat they sat there like patriots, unwilling to let a dollar of this money go out of the Treasury until a thorough, full, and complete examination had been made of each project. Perspiration rolled down their faces. Lines furrowed their brows. Fatigue drew and darkened their eyes. Iced water was continually consumed; but would the committee quit? Not at all! A great task was to be done. The Atlantic Ocean was too far off from most of the interior towns. The hour had come to bring the ocean to America. [Laughter.] Busy chambers of commerce came before them with plea after plea to carry New York Bay beyond the Mississippi; and the Golden Gate of San Francisco was taken off its hinges and put back on the Salt Lake of Utah.

Through it all there was argument by the most celebrated attorneys in the country. John W. Davis appeared for Big Creek. Elihu Root, an old man famous all over the world as an international lawyer, pleaded for the little town in Vermont; and as that great orator and statesman asked the committee to deal fairly with this little town in Vermont I was standing by, and tears rolled down my cheeks before the majesty of the human appeal which that great old scholar made on that occasion.

Why, the committee cut out lunch! They only had breakfast in the morning and a bite to eat at 11 or 12 o'clock at night, and then only a cold supper and 5 or 6 hours' sleep and a cold bath, and they were back on the job going down over the list, cutting a dollar here and a dollar there, and another dollar here and another dollar there, to save money for the Treasury.

Dr. Calver, the Senate physician, walked up and felt the pulse of the chairman and others, and said:

Here! I demand that these hearings stop. You gentlemen are working yourselves to the verge of nervous prostration. You are going into this thing as though it were an obsession with you. In Heaven's name, stop, lest this Republic lose 15 of the noblest souls that ever walked through the Senate door.

The Chairman said, "No! Duty calls. The Atlantic Ocean is out there. It must be brought inland. The two great majestic waters must be joined, tied in bigamy with the Mississippi River!" [Laughter.] "We will stay on the job if it takes all summer." Sending over to the Government Printing Office for a few more naughts and another handful of commas, and a few more decimal points, the committee turned to page 141, and proceeded on from Ohio westward. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment.

Look at them now! I shall not call the names of the members of the Commerce Committee. When they came here in January, the rosy glow of springtime was in their cheeks. Their eyes were clear. Boyish laughter played around their lips. Their hair was light brown or black. Silver then was not in the Treasury; neither was it in their hair. With flashing white teeth and clear eyes and boyish inspiration they went up to that committee room just 2 months ago and commenced their labors. Now look at them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a minute.

Now, look at them. Round shoulders, wrinkled foreheads, crowsfeet around their eyes, gray hair, halting steps, indigestion, spectacles; and if it is the last thing the Senate does on the eve of adjournment, I hope my friend from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], with his patriotic impulses, will hearken to my words, and offer an amendment to take $250,000 out of this appropriation and build a monument for that committee, which will stand for all time as the one committee that worked itself wellnigh into the grave to save the taxpayers every cent it could in this appropriation. Why, if my friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] will pardon an old man for talking to a mere youth like him, I am glad he did not serve on this committee, because I should have lost the joy of looking at his auburn locks had he been on it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator has just directed one of his very illuminating remarks to me. I know he would not wish to be guilty of inaccuracy in statement, because, in the type of expression he is making, even the very smallest inaccuracy would mar the result of the whole.

I wish to ask the Senator whether the bill itself will not disclose, in its printed form, the time it passed the House, the time it was messaged over to the Senate, and the length of time it has been in the possession of this body.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true; and I thank the Senator for that statement, because, Senators, with a mere wave of my hand I am going to show you how to compress a couple of months into a very short space of time. Follow me. You will see that I have nothing in either hand. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEIWER. Is the Senator from Maryland going to state to the Senate actually the date on which this bill passed the House, and that upon which it reached the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. TYDINGS. Ah! but the Senator, with his usual frankness, with his usual ingenuousness and his sweet character, assumes that this bill was a bill only from the dates that are printed on its face. Does not the Senator know that long before it found its way into the Senate, and long before it found its way into the House, members of the committee were working in the manner I have described? When it was introduced in one body or the other it was only a half-finished effort. From that time onward they continued their labors until they created this great monument which, if it were a statue, would outrival the Venus de Milo.

Mr. STEIWER. I asked the question of the Senator because I understood that yesterday an order was made that bills might be received from the House after the Senate was in recess, and the Secretary of the Senate was directed by the order to make appropriate reference of bills thus received. I am told by one of the employees of the Senate that this bill was received in that way.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order. I object. The Senator is not asking a question, he is making a speech.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that on July 29, the calendar day of August 22, 1935, which was yesterday, this child was born, and I understand the head of the committee was a doctor. It is not quintuplets, because it has more children than that, a few of whom I have described. This is polytuplets. They say the child came into the world without the benefit of an anesthetic, but it looks as if it will need some anesthetic before it passes the White House. Certainly, unless the $500,000,000 is tucked away in somebody's pocket, I cannot see where the $500,000,000 will be found, unless the amendment of the Senator from Michigan prevails, in which case it would come out of the Public Work; but if the Senator is waiting around for his amendment to be adopted, let me assure him that I do not think he is going to be attended with the utmost of good fortune in his quest, because that money has already been allocated, and this is just extra. This is what would be called "extra dividends", if we were receiving it from General Motors, or United States Steel, or one of the other corporations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. For a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I just stepped outside for a moment. Does the Senator know——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I object to the Senator yielding for anything but a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was about to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very happy to observe the rules with the same felicity with which the Senator from Louisiana observes them.

Does the Senator from Maryland know that the attachés of the Senate are now engaged in trying to chase a bat out of the President's room, where the President may come to sign this bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. They have nothing on me. I am engaged in chasing bats out of this legislative monstrosity I hold in my hand. [Laughter.]

There is a great deal of poetry in legislation—a great deal of poetry. For example, what could be a lovelier name than Bell Foley Reservoir on Strawberry River? [Laughter.]

It is just like a piece of poetry. The Bell Foley Reservoir on Strawberry River is a tributary of the Black River in Arkansas, a little bit of a river, but will get an appropriation of $2,109,000. It is very large strawberries they raise out on that river, and Bell Foley is a girl who demands the best of attention.

There is also a religious flavor in legislative life. For example, there is East St. Louis. What could be wrong with any appropriation for East St. Louis, named after one of the great ecclesiastics, a very renowned father? I would not say that the mere sum of $960,000 would be half enough for the town of East St. Louis, in the State of my friend the senior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely rise to advise my friend from Maryland that East St. Louis is in the State of Illinois, which, as he knows, is represented by myself, and

I desire that he should know that whatever imperfections he may find as to other items, when he comes to Illinois, it is touched and gilded with perfection, so that I may be compelled to bring that to his attention.

Mr. TYDINGS. I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him. [Laughter.] If my friend wants to praise East St. Louis, I retract my words, because when I think of that town and its importance as a great outlet to the sea, and of all the commerce that cannot find any outlet unless this particular river is dug at East St. Louis, when I think of the hardships of the backed-up commerce of the millions upon millions of western farmers who will have no outlet to the sea, may I say that I, with the Senator from Illinois, take my stand by the side of old East St. Louis. May she stand there like the Rock of Ages, and may Congress never forget to make ample appropriation to accelerate her greatness.

And may the odors that come down the river from the stockyards of Chicago never grow less fragrant. [Laughter.]

But think not that the men have any monopoly upon the religion of legislation. There is St. Genevieve Levee, St. Genevieve. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Sweet Genevieve.

Mr. TYDINGS. Sweet Genevieve receives $393,000.

You cannot really run a river or an ocean without having a drainage district. In other words, if you do not have a drainage district, you could not have navigation. There is not enough water now in the Mississippi River, and we want to drain more water into it. Then, the more water we drain into it, the higher the sides have to be, and the deeper it has to be, and the wider it has to be. So the Columbia Drainage and Levee District No. 3, Illinois, comes in for a mere $983,000, and I have no doubt at all that it is a very very fine project, and no doubt many of the lines which the members of the committee now have in their faces were put there as they delved in the metaphysics, and the physics, and the statistics, and the assembled data, all of which caused them to set aside this sum of money, $983,000.

I think one member of the committee did say that it would cost $983,906, but the other members of the committee said that perhaps they could build it if they took off the $6 and just gave them $983,900, so I suppose somehow or other they will be permitted to finish this plan.

I do not wish to dwell on Missouri too long or on Illinois.

By golly! I could not restrain that remark, because the next item is really one which commands one's respect and interest. Here is the Red River of the North Basin, the Souris River in North Dakota and Saskatchewan Province, Canada.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Souris River in North Dakota and Saskatchewan Province, Canada.

I thought we were going to do most of the work in this country [laughter], but, of course, there should be a little neighborliness like that. Bread cast on the waters will come back. I can see no reason why we should not do a little something for Saskatchewan Province up in Canada. I am told that the Souris River is in both North Dakota and Canada, and I am sure that the Canadian constituents, meaning the actual inhabitants who will be over in Canada, will see to it at the next election they get over the international boundary line and do their bit for whoever is responsible for inserting that delicious bit of "pork chop" in this very fine "piggish" bill.

Here is just a little item:

Lake Traverse and Bois De Sioux River, S. Dak.: Reservoirs for flood protection of agricultural lands, water conservation, and other incidental benefits; no report to Congress; data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $1,115,200.

I am glad they put that $200 on there because they would have had a hard time to finish that on $1,115,000.

Lake Traverse and Bois De Sioux River. I do not know, Mr. President; there may be some merit in the thing, but away up there in South Dakota that is a good bit of money for flood control. I want to say to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] that he had better look to his laurels. He is down at the mouth of this river, where all these waters come, and they have all to go by him; but we are away up where they start now, and they have $1,000,000 for one project up there, and I do not think the Senator from Louisiana is looking after his interests of his river.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Does the Senator know that the rivers in North Dakota run north instead of south, and run into Hudson Bay?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right. I knew that you were damming up this water for Canada, and not for us. I wish I had brought a map of the United States in here. I know where South Dakota is, but I should like to locate Lake Traverse and Bois De Sioux River and find out how much of that $1,115,000 can go for so small a watershed as to run no more than through South Dakota and North Dakota and then over into Canada. It cannot be a very long river, because if it flows north it can go only five or six hundred miles, when it will be in Canada as the crow flies; yet they are going to get $1,000,000 for flood control up there.

Mr. President, I do not know the exact situation; but, offhand, I should say that if North Dakota gets $1,115,000 to spend on flood control, $100,000,000 ought to be spent on flood control on the Mississippi River, the Ohio River, and the Missouri River for such projects.

Here is the Minnesota River, Lac Qui Parle Reservoir in Minnesota:

For flood protection of agricultural lands in valley of Minnesota River; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $464,000.

Now let me see—the Minnesota River: I do not know just where that flows north, east, south, or west, but my recollection is that it flows northwest. Four hundred and sixty-four thousand dollars, half a million dollars, for the protection of agricultural lands in the valley of the Minnesota River.

Kaskaskia River, Shelby County, to New Athens, Ill. Now, I am going to let you in on a small project, and it is remarkable how such little projects get in the bill.

Kaskaskia River, Shelby County to New Athens, Ill.: Leveed floodway and channel improvement for flood control; no report to Congress; data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost, $8,856,000.

Even.

I will not read all of Illinois, except to call off the appropriation:

Between Beardstown, Ill., and mouth of Illinois River, $730,000.
Lost Creek Drainage and Levee District, $46,100.
Liverpool Drainage and Levee District, $48,600.
Hennepin Drainage and Levee District, $46,800.
Big Lake Drainage, $52,500.
Seahorn Drainage and Levee District, $32,000.
Lacey, etc., $188,400.
Banner Special Drainage and Levee District, $128,700.
Rocky Ford Drainage and Levee District, $47,900.
Pekin, etc., $145,300.
Spring Lake, $384,200.
East Liverpool, $137,700.
East Peoria, $29,000.
Thompson Lake Drainage District, $351,000.
Kelly Lake Drainage District, $100,200.
Momence, Ill., $2,540,000.
Between Shelby Bridge and Baum's Bridge in Indiana, $176,600.

Then add to that the $8,800,000 which I read a moment ago. I tell you Illinois did not do so bad. They got about 12 or 15 projects and they pretty nearly captured $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. That is not a bad day's work. I tell you that is not a bad day's work, $15,000,000. They got almost as much pork for Illinois in this bill as they have pork in the stockyards in Chicago and you cannot even hear them squeal. That is another advantage. Good heavens! I have not finished with Illinois yet. I thought I was through. Here is Penny Slough, $91,000.

Sangamon River, $122,400. Sangamon River from mouth of Salt Creek to Robey, Ill., $773,000.
Salt Creek in the vicinity of Middletown, Ill., $48,000.
East of Hubley Bridge on south side of Salt Creek, $20,300.
Lussenhaf Levee, $1,820.
Swager, etc., $10,200.
Donavon Levee, $28,400.
Mason and Menard Drainage District, $78,900.
Tar Creek Levee, $34,800.
Watts Levee on south side of Salt Creek, $34,400.

Farmers Levee, $242,600.
Clear Lake Levee, $69,250.
Oakford Special Drainage District, $25,500.
Near Springfield on Sangamon River, $90,000.
Sangamon River and Salt Creek, $12,500.
Panther Creek, $143,000.
Bell and Mertz Levees, $31,100.
Henderson River, $201,300.
Plus the $8,000,000 appropriation for one drainage district, plus the $2,000,000 district, and we have over $20,000,000 now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows what committee consideration was given to this bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator very seriously that my information is that very little, if any, consideration was given by the committee to the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator know what time the bill reached the committee?

Mr. TYDINGS. According to the mark upon its face, it reached the committee yesterday from the House of Representatives. I think it was last night. It passed the House at 10 o'clock last night; and the committee, of course, stayed up all night with it, and got it in the first thing this morning.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; I am serious about this.

Mr. TYDINGS. It passed the House last night at 10 o'clock, and could not have reached the Senate until the Senate committee held a meeting this morning.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator know whether there was an actual physical quorum present at the time the committee considered the bill today?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not; but I doubt very much if there was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon what basis could it have been reported to the Senate, then?

Mr. TYDINGS. I could not say.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator yield for the purpose of enabling me to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, who is present?

Mr. TYDINGS. I prefer not to do so, but I think in a moment the Senator will have an opportunity if he will bear with me.

Mr. President, in order to point out some of the glaring and outrageous and unconsidered and unjustifiable items in the bill, I have in turn tried to be a bit humorous, a bit facetious, and at times a bit serious. I say that the vote upon this bill, if it shall come to passage in this session of Congress, and leads to a roll call, will be a vote of shame and it will be so viewed by the people of the country. This is a sheer waste of half a billion dollars, without the approval of the Army engineers of many, many projects scattered all over the country, and after having been in the possession of this body for 1 day.

Passing as it did at 9 or 10 o'clock last night in the House of Representatives, it could not have reached the Senate until after noon today, at which time the Chair would refer it to a committee. But here is a bill of 53 pages, relating to hundreds and hundreds of projects scattered all over the country, $500,000,000 in all, and within 2 or 3 hours after it comes to this body, without any consideration, the Senate of the United States is asked to appropriate this money. No Member of the Senate has a copy of the amendments. There is only one copy in existence and that I hold in my hand. Yet there is a possibility that a bill of this magnitude will receive enough votes to be passed by the Senate.

This is not a bill to make employment for the people. This is a bill to make a deficit in the Treasury, to make a debt for future generations to pay, an unnecessary debt in most cases, although some of the projects may have individual merit, because a sum of money has already been appropriated large enough to take all of those on the relief roll off of it and put them to work for a year, and therefore there can be no justification for the bill.

In addition to that, most of the money to be expended under the projects herein outlined would go for materials anyway, and while in the purchase of materials work would be created, it would not be in line with the governmental philosophy heretofore announced in matters of this kind.

Therefore, Mr. President, in order to show the people of America that the Senate is not a wasteful body, that it does not pass upon legislation of this magnitude without any report from the Army engineers, without any examination by the committee of the individual items, and having regard for the condition of the Treasury and the imminence of new taxes, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to report it to the Senate when it next convenes in January.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. There is a motion now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to recommit takes precedence.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that a moment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to ask the Senator from New York, chairman of the committee, a question. Was there a quorum present at the time the bill was reported out of the committee this morning?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; there was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was it an actual quorum?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; an actual quorum.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Maloney	Sheppard
Ashurst	Copeland	McCarran	Shipstead
Austin	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bailey	Gibson	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Barbour	Guffey	Murphy	Townsend
Barkley	Hale	Murray	Truman
Bone	Harrison	Nye	Tydings
Brown	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hayden	Pittman	Walsh
Burke	La Follette	Reynolds	White
Capper	Lewis	Robinson
Caraway	Lonergan	Russell
Clark	Long	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce with instructions.

Mr. TYDINGS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the motion to recommit the bill.

I am a member of the Committee on Commerce. The bill, I am informed, came in this morning, and was presented to the committee this morning. There has been no opportunity to consider the bill, other than the opportunity which elapsed between the meeting of the committee, I should say about 10 or 10:30, and the session of the Senate at 12 o'clock.

That is the fact. Unfortunately, it was my duty to be in attendance on the Finance Committee this morning to consider the railroad pension bill; and I was there. That is my reason for not being present at the session of the Committee on Commerce this morning.

I think it is due the country, due to the Senate, and due the members of the Committee on Commerce, that they shall be allowed to discuss the bill and prepare a proper measure. There is a great deal of merit in this plan of flood control, but it is a perfectly safe statement to make that the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate has not given adequate consideration to this bill. So I shall support the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, of course the great amount of work on this bill was done by the House committee. They have studied it in great detail. They had before them projects involving between six hundred and seven hundred million dollars—projects which covered surveys actually made by the Army Engineers, and actually having data in the Engineers' Office. Out of this great mass of material in the Engineers' Office the House committee with great care selected projects, having particularly in mind those which would involve the expenditure of labor.

If Senators had taken pains to read the splendid report of the House committee which has been upon the desks here all day, they would have seen on the very first page that those projects were chosen which had to do with labor. The hearings disclosed, as shown by the report, that more than 80 percent of the sum allocated or authorized by the bill would be expended for labor. It was considered by the House that here was a way in which a large sum of money which has been not only authorized but actually expended in the emergency works joint resolution could be used for projects of this kind.

It so happens that this year we have had an unusually rainy season over much of the country. There have been terrific floods, with great loss, not alone of property but of lives, throughout our country. I was much entertained by the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], but he was talking about rivers and harbors. He was talking about bringing the sea to Vermont and increasing the waterways with a view to navigation. The purpose of this bill is to protect the lives and property of Americans throughout our country. That is what the bill is for.

The bill came to us, it is true, at an early hour this morning from the House. Nevertheless, there have been going on, in the office of the Department of Commerce, examinations of various projects, proposed amendments which have been sent forward from the Senate. Those projects have been carefully studied, and reports were had from the Board of Army Engineers. The amendments which were offered in the Senate committee this morning were amendments which had been considered by the Army Engineers and brought to the attention of the committee, and there, through the technical staff of the committee, given study.

Let it not be thought for a moment that this great bill has not been studied thoroughly at both ends of the Capitol. There is no reason for anyone here to feel that he is stultifying himself in any way by voting for it. Bear in mind that this is not an appropriation bill; this is an authorization bill. We may not have another omnibus flood-control bill for 5 years, and that is the reason why I have not favored the motion of the Senator from Michigan, because practically everything done this year, and perhaps everything that will be done next year in the way of flood control, under projects here authorized, will be done out of funds to be appropriated. There can be no further work done unless the Congress itself, through the Appropriations Committees, actually appropriates the money. So when we talk about the vast sum authorized here, and the burden upon the taxpayers, that is largely fallacious. I have been in opposition to those large expenditures, but here we have provision made in the way of authorizations, and ultimately will make the appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator state when the Congress last passed an omnibus flood-control appropriation bill?

Mr. COPELAND. It must have been 5 or 6 years ago; I am not sure but that it was even 10 years ago.

Mr. WALSH. Is it customary to pass an omnibus bill of this type from time to time?

Mr. COPELAND. It is.

Mr. WALSH. I understood from the Senator's remarks that this bill this year was prepared somewhat as an emergency relief measure?

Mr. COPELAND. Even so, it has been our custom occasionally to pass river and harbor bills and also flood-control bills; but in the preparation of the bill this year special attention was given to emergency work where there should be the employment of labor.

Mr. WALSH. Is the same practice maintained in the designation of the rivers where money is to be expended for flood control as is practiced in river and harbor bills?

Mr. COPELAND. Exactly the same; and this bill provides that no work can be done except with the approval of the Army engineers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce with instructions. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that there are necessarily detained from the Senate the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] has a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN]. If the Senator from Oregon were present, he would vote "yea"; and if the Senator from Tennessee were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. NYE. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am reliably informed that if present he would vote as I desire to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee. Not knowing how he would vote, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—29

Adams	Barbour	Copeland	Hatch
Ashurst	Brown	Frazier	Hayden
Austin	Bulow	Gibson	La Follette
Bailey	Burke	Hale	Maloney

Metcalf	O'Mahoney	Shipstead	Vandenberg
Minton	Pittman	Thomas, Utah	Walsh
Murphy	Russell	Tydings	White
Nye

NAYS—20

Barkley	Connally	Long	Robinson
Bone	Guffey	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Capper	Harrison	McGill	Sheppard
Caraway	Lewis	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Clark	Lonergan	Reynolds	Truman

NOT VOTING—47

Bachman	Couzens	Holt	Overton
Bankhead	Davis	Johnson	Pope
Bilbo	Dickinson	Keyes	Radcliffe
Black	Dieterich	King	Schall
Borah	Donahey	Logan	Smith
Bulkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Steiwer
Byrd	Fletcher	McKellar	Townsend
Byrnes	George	McNary	Trammell
Carey	Gerry	Moore	Van Nuys
Chavez	Glass	Neely	Wagner
Coolidge	Gore	Norbeck	Wheeler
Costigan	Hastings	Norris

So the motion to recommit with instructions was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 8598. An act to provide for the inspection and regulation of vessels engaged in the transportation of inflammable, explosive, and like dangerous cargoes in navigable waters of the United States; and

H. R. 9116. An act to extend the provisions of veterans' laws and regulations to persons who served in Russia during the World War, and their dependents.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board, and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat-inspection laws, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1457) thereon.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4799) to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1459) thereon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Maj. Gen. John Francis O'Ryan, Reserve, for reappointment in the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army under the provisions of law.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 1st day of September 1935.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. May we forgive one another as we hope to be forgiven. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the children of God; grant, blessed Lord, that we may be made worthy of this merciful heritage; with royal hearts may we ponder it. We pray Thee to ennoble and constrain us to walk obediently with God, our Father, diligently and joyfully giving ourselves up to the very best in the heights; in all things help us to revere Thy sovereignty. As we pause, impress us with the conclusion of the whole matter, which is: Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. 3447. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in National Archives", approved March 3, 1925, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2621. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Devils Lake, N. Dak., in the construction, extension, and betterment of the high-school building at Devils Lake, N. Dak., to be available to Indian children.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader or the Chairman of the Rules Committee in what order the various rules are going to be called up, as well as conference reports? I think it will facilitate business if we know, so far as possible, in what order these matters are to be brought up.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know nothing about the conference reports. The Speaker may advise the gentleman as to that. As to the rules, I thought I gave them to one or two of the gentleman's lieutenants this morning.

Mr. SNELL. Sometimes it is a good thing to consult the captain.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The first one we propose to call up is House Resolution 316.

Mr. WOODRUM. If the gentleman would not mind saying what they are. Some of the rest of us are interested.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I intended to. That is the Federal Trade Commission investigation.

Second, the neutrality bill, a Senate joint resolution.

Next, a resolution from the Immigration Committee to suspend some deportations. That is House Resolution 362.

The next, House Resolution 347, appointing a campaign expenditures committee—very important.

Next, House Resolution 348, prevailing rate of wages on projects already started.

Next, House Resolution 354, extending the powers of the committee investigating real-estate bondholders' committees.

Next, three bills, H. Res. 355, H. Res. 356, and H. Res. 357, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, relating to safety at sea.

Next, customs brokers. That has not yet been filed.

Next, a resolution investigating smuggling across the borders. That has not yet been filed. There may be more during the day.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman.

BROADCASTING

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts on radio control.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States are desirous of legislation which will first, insure employment opportunities for all workers, and, second, protect the small merchant from being dictated to by Wall Street or big business.

With full realization, and, after careful consideration of how the power interest, or Radio Trust, has successfully imposed upon the Government and secured from a governmental agency—supposedly an agency of the Congress—virtually dominant control of the radio structure, I presented H. R. 8475 as, at least, a real effort to curb the growing power of money in our country.

Many years ago a wise man coined the phrase that the newspapers and magazines of America constituted "the fourth estate"; in other words, that they represented the fourth power in strength in our country. At that time but little was known of radio broadcasting, but today more than 100 newspapers—and they with very few exceptions operated in large populous centers—in order to protect themselves and their investments have found it necessary to pay fabulous sums of money to radio privateers who through their influence with members of the old Radio Commission, or the present Federal Communications Commission, possess licenses or franchises which cost them nothing and which they have sold, to those who wish to broadcast, for large sums of money.

As an illustration of this financial racketeering on the part of big business, the General Electric Co. holds 2 of the 40 clear-channel licenses issued in this country to operate three high-powered stations. The Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co. also possess 3 of these 40 clear-channel licenses to operate four high-powered stations. Thus we have 5 of the 40 clear-channel licenses used for the operation of 7 high-powered radio stations owned by 2 of the most powerful members of the Power Trust, namely, the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co. None of these seven high-powered stations are operated directly by either the General Electric Co. or the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co. These stations are leased to the National Broadcasting Co., and a very fat rental for this governmental property is paid yearly by the National Broadcasting Co. to the General Electric and Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Cos. In one particular instance, about which I shall later give specific details, the National Broadcasting Co. has leased and released the facilities of one of these high-powered stations at a profit over and above the amount which it paid to the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co.

The National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting Co., the two networks which dominate the radio-broadcasting field, show through their statistical figures that the average advertiser during the year 1934 spent on their networks more than $150,000. This figure indicates that only those interests dominated by or affiliated with Wall Street could sponsor such an advertising campaign. This means that the local merchant, the man who has helped to build the community, is placed under a great handicap. Either he must accept the dictation of big business and handle only the products which big business wishes him to handle, and at the price which they insist he must handle them, or he finds himself in difficulty.

Big business was not interested originally in radio as a source of profit alone. Testimony given by the President of the National Broadcasting Co. proves that radio broadcasting was originally conceived as a means of promoting the sale of those radio sets manufactured by the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co., and, secondly, to promote the use of the long-distance telephone lines held by the Bell Telephone Co. monopoly. The statement of Mr. Aylesworth is as follows:

> Among the broadcast experimenters—and that is precisely what they were in September 1926—the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., operated station WEAF in New York City as an experimental station. Its prime interest was to learn how the radio telephone could be utilized in the furtherance of the Bell telephone system's service to the Nation. Toll broadcasting resulted. Under the leadership of Mr. Owen D. Young, the organizations most concerned, namely, the Radio Corporation of America, General Electric Co., and the Westinghouse Electric, decided upon the formation of a Nation-wide broadcasting service to meet the immediate, as well as the future, requirements for programs of the highest standards. Thus came into being the National Broadcasting Co., organized in November 1926, primarily devoted to indirect sales promotion for the radio manufacturing industry. Its basic principle of operation was obvious—service to the radio-manufacturing industry.

Despite the requirements of the Communications Act of 1934 and the Radio Act of 1927, which specifically state that license can be issued or renewed only by the Federal Communications Commission, provided the applicant's or the licensee's station will be operated primarily in public interest, the president of the National Broadcasting Co. publicly admitted that the primary purpose for which his company was organized was not to serve public interest but to serve the radio manufacturing industry and the Bell Telephone Co.

BIG BUSINESS IN CONTROL OF RADIO

What is the interest big business has in the control of radio? That control, that influence which big business seeks, whether local or national, is the power to form and mold public opinion. Big business neither knows nor cares what sacrifices are made by those in educational, labor, farm, religious, fraternal, and other fields who, seeking no profit for themselves, seek to enhance the knowledge of others. Big business seeks to control and mold public opinion in order that they may add to the millions they now possess and that the cost of government may be imposed upon the little fellow rather than upon those who are well able to pay.

A few years ago there were more than 125 educational institutions who operated their own radio stations. Today about 5 percent of the 640 stations holding licenses remain. Naturally these stations were operated for the good of the community and not for profit. The chairman of the board of directors of the National Broadcasting Co. truly reflected his sincere and innermost feelings in connection with these stations when he stated:

> But the profit motive of industry—apparently there's the rub. As an industrial executive I admit a natural prejudice in favor of profitable enterprises and a disposition to defend the profit motive as against social or intellectual snobbery.

The profit motive stands first and foremost. Apparently the thought of public interest, the opportunity for unselfish service to one's fellow man by helping him to develop and enrich his mind and heart finds no place in that scheme of life.

Naturally these non-profit-making stations were independent of vested interests, and those who use such facilities were privileged to tell their story without censorship on the part of any controlled representative. Such stations are a menace in the eyes of big business, because through them the public can get the truth. The press of the country made no protest against the existence of such stations. They welcomed competition that might result from non-profit-making stations. The independent press of the country always welcomes fair competition. The controlled press of the country, however, is unable to think for itself, because it only carries out the wishes of its master. It is never at a loss for revenue.

If paid advertising falls off, big business sees that associates in Wall Street furnish enough advertising to pay expenses. The independent press cannot secure advertising when the Radio Trust offers better inducements.

PRINTING TRADES WORKERS SUFFER

Up to 6 months ago, those who controlled radio broadcasting were satisfied to leave the dissemination of news to the newspapers, but now news-gathering agencies make contracts with radio broadcasting stations. Carried to its logical conclusion there will be no further necessity of a press, because the radio listener will not have to accept a paper which contains word advertising in order to get the news. Some may say this is visionary, but many newspaper men fully appreciate the fact that the radio is disseminating news before it can be printed and distributed.

The greatest problem before the people of America today is the question of employment at decent wages, and under decent working conditions. The Printing Trades Union of America, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, is credited by all historians with being a leader in the upbuilding of the public schools, in the spreading of education, and in the uplifting of the worker. The officers estimate that the diversion of advertising from newspapers and magazines to radio has already resulted in the loss of employment opportunities of some 40,000 to 50,000 union printing-trades workers in this country. Were these job opportunities lost for the benefit of the Nation as a whole, it would not be so bad, but these men have lost job opportunities solely that a few who contribute nothing constructive might add millions to their hoarded wealth.

BIG BUSINESS POWER OF CENSORSHIP

Much is heard of the right of free speech and of our opposition to censorship. The right of free speech is so inherent amongst our people that the Congress in enacting radio legislation has prohibited its own agency, the Federal Communications Commission, from censoring any licensee. Yet, while the Government itself is proscribed by congressional action from censoring that which goes on the air, big business, through its control of the Radio Trust, invokes and maintains a censorship of its own. No person, with the possible exception of the President of the United States and some few Members of the Congress, is privileged to use the facilities of radio broadcasting without first submitting to the station over which he is going to speak at least 24 hours in advance, a copy of that which he is to say, and, unless agreeable to the representatives of the Radio Trust, he is not privileged to deliver his remarks on the air. For example, Mr. Aylesworth testified before a governmental investigating commission that:

> The National Broadcasting Co. reserves the right to accept, or reject, any programs, and to broadcast only for those we choose to serve.

If this is not tyranny, if this is not dictatorship on the part of the Radio Trust, may I inquire what it is?

A report made to the Congress last winter by the Federal Trade Commission contained reference to a broadcast which very unfavorably commented on the operation of public utilities. The talk was carried over the National Broadcasting Co.'s network, and a Mr. J. B. Sheridan, director of the Missouri Utilities Committee, immediately wrote to Mr. Aylesworth about the broadcast because of the possible reactions it might cause in the minds of the listeners. Mr. Aylesworth's amazing reply was, to say the least, indicative of the tyrannical and arrogant display of power of members of the Radio Trust. According to the report, he stated:

The speaker was permitted to make the speech in order to avoid the accusation that the National Broadcasting Co. was a monopoly

Moreover, he also stated that—

This is just one of those things, which is not very apt to occur again in the very near future.

One of the most subtle and vicious methods employed by the Radio Trust is the employment of radio broadcasting for not only the invasion of the home with programs which even the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission has described as offensive but they now seek to control the classroom in the interests not of education but of the advertiser. Having reduced the number of educational and cultural broadcasting stations from 125 to less than 35 in 5 years, the Radio Trust is now endeavoring to mold the minds of the youth of America. Dr. Arthur G. Crane, president of the University of Wyoming, in a recent address before the Federal Communications Commission, stated:

I cannot foresee how America, judging by her past practice and standards, can permit the entrance into the schools of radio broadcasting, if it is sponsored by and paid for by advertisers.

He further stated:

In the State of Wisconsin, where broadcasts have been made to schools with the idea of not supplanting the teacher but supplementing the teacher, with the idea of vitalizing the study for young people, it has been proven that classes given the advantage of the vitalized, stimulating effect of frequent radio broadcasts, progress 20 percent faster than controlled groups that did not have the advantages of the radio broadcasts. I have seen thousands of children gathered into a single auditorium listening to radio broadcasts of great current events, a magnificent service, and there are 30,000,000 of American citizens in school this year, public and private.

EDUCATORS DEMAND CHANGE IN RADIO

Educational institutions, especially private institutions, have, during the past few years, been sorely pressed for finances with which to carry on their most worthy and necessary work. Confronted with increased expenses on the one hand and a decreased student registration and donations on the other, educational institutions which were licensed to operate their own broadcasting stations were in many instances forced to relinquish their franchises. One of the many instances of this condition is that furnished by station WCAJ, owned by the Nebraska Wesleyan University of Lincoln, Nebr. The station was one of the pioneer radio stations of the country, having begun operation in October 1920, but wearied and financially exhausted from repeated attacks by commercial interests seeking its franchise, which involved much time and several thousands of dollars of expense, the station was finally discontinued. Realizing the financial difficulties confronting the university authorities, the commercial interests were able, so I understand, to close a deal by paying for the station less than the value of the broadcasting equipment.

Another outstanding and typical example of the efforts being made by commercial interests or the Radio Trust to eliminate entirely, if possible, the educational broadcasting stations is that concerning the University of Minnesota. Mr. W. T. Middlebrook, a trustee and secretary of the board of regents of the University of Minnesota, recently testified before the Federal Communications Commission, as follows:

This year there will be on our campuses for instruction over 17,000 students for college work, work of a collegiate level. There will be over 7,000 students taking instructions in evening classes, and there will be over 3,000 students receiving instructions through the mail. Altogether, including ordinary and short courses, etc., the University of Minnesota will this year offer instructions to approximately 27,000 people in the State.

The university has an alumni of 35,000, a large number of whom live within the State. It has a former student body of over 40,000; and if we add these students, alumni, and former students and their families and other friends of the institution together, there is a large potential audience. * * * Now the University of Minnesota and its potential audience has been allotted by the Commission a total of 8 hours per week.

Commercial stations operate 112 hours each week.

St. Olaf College, which shares time with the University of Minnesota station, has approximately the same amount of time—8 hours per week. The balance of the time is allotted to a commercial station. * * * I submit that not very much can be done by an educational station of our size, with our material and audience, on any assignment of 8 hours per week or on power assignment of 1 kilowatt. Now, we tried abandoning our station in the early thirties. There has been broadcasting at the university since 1921. It was not satisfactory. Why? Well, the allocation of time made by the commercial station for our university programs became less and less and poorer and poorer as the profit motive encroached. The second course of action was to continue our station and supplement it with a commercial station broadcast. This is what we are doing, but we are experiencing the same result as at the time when we abandoned our own station; we are getting poorer and less supplementary time from the commercial station.

I could, Mr. Speaker, go on indefinitely calling the roll of similar instances of the treatment accorded the educational broadcasting stations, but I believe that the illustrations which I have cited are sufficient to prove the efficiency of the methods being pursued by the Radio Trust to eliminate these non-profit-making and human-welfare types of stations.

TRAFFICKING IN RADIO LICENSES

During the past few years there has developed a system of trafficking in governmental property, namely, trafficking in radio frequencies. This system is well known to members of the broadcast division of the Federal Communications Commission, and, despite their knowledge and despite the fact that Members of Congress have protested against such a practice, it still continues. A notable illustration of this trafficking in radio frequencies is that of the license issued to the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co., station KYW, which was leased by Westinghouse to the National Broadcasting Co. This frequency was assigned originally to the State of Pennsylvania, which is in the second zone. However, the Radio Trust needed another station in Chicago, which is in the fourth zone, and it prevailed upon the old Federal Radio Commission to transfer this frequency to the fourth zone, and station KYW was located in the city of Chicago.

The Radio Trust having acquired subsequently, through purchase, another frequency having a Chicago station located on it, the Radio Trust was not seriously concerned, nor did it strongly interpose objection last year when the Commission decided to return this frequency to the State of Pennsylvania and the second zone where it is now located, in the city of Philadelphia, probably because the Westinghouse interests already have a high-powered station at Pittsburgh.

To further illustrate the viciousness of this system, after acquiring a third high-powered station in Chicago, the National Broadcasting Co., which, as I have previously stated, had leased station KYW from the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co., the licensee turned around and subleased it to Mr. William Randolph Hearst's exclusively owned radio company, known as "Hearst Radio, Inc." To avoid a suit, because the lease which Hearst Radio, Inc. had with the National Broadcasting Co. at the time when the Commission ordered the frequency transferred back to the second zone, it is now necessary for the National Broadcasting Co. to sell, lease, or help Mr. Hearst's radio company locate another station in Chicago or elsewhere; otherwise a damage action may be instituted. This situation may also explain the cooperation and willingness on the part of the National Broadcasting Co. to further the interests of Hearst Radio, Inc. It may also explain Mr. Hearst's ability to purchase last year the high-powered radio station located at Baltimore, known as WBAL, and licensed to the Baltimore Electric Light & Power Co. It may also explain Mr.

Hearst's defense of the utility-holding companies, a matter which is familiar to every Member of Congress.

Now, after station KYW was located in Philadelphia, and the Commission approved the continuance of the licensee in the name of the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co., and gave cognizance to the re-lease by the licensee to the National Broadcasting Co., it further approved one of the most outrageous examples of the arrogance displayed by the Power and Radio Trust interests by permitting a sublease of the facilities of station KYW by the National Broadcasting Co. to the owners and operators of the Columbia Broadcasting System's station in Philadelphia, namely, Isaac and Leon Levy, who are officers, directors, and big stockholders in the Columbia Broadcasting Co., and brothers-in-law of Mr. William S. Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Here is another of many similar instances that not only illustrates what is meant by trafficking in radio licenses, but also illustrates the close interlocking connection which exists between, and identifies, these two networks.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the studios of station KYW, the National Broadcasting Co.'s network station in Philadelphia, and the studios of WCAU, the Columbia Broadcasting Co.'s Philadelphia outlet, are all housed in the same building, under the one roof, as it were, owned by the Levy Bros., whose connections with the Columbia Broadcasting System I have already mentioned. Naturally an attorney reserves the right to serve whatever clients he sees fit to identify himself with, but it is rather strange, almost bordering on suspicion, to point out to the Members of Congress the fact that one of the Levy brothers, Isaac D. Levy, has represented the RCA-Victor interests in the courts.

MONOPOLY OF NEWS AND RADIO

To further prove the existence of the system of trafficking in radio licenses, I wish to call attention to another recent instance, and that is the case of radio station WWL, of New Orleans, and station KWKH, of Shreveport, La., two stations which for years shared time on the same frequency. Two years ago the old Federal Radio Commission held a hearing to decide which one of these two stations was serving public interest. It is reliably reported that the Commission first decided favorably for station WWL, and then later reversed itself to favor the Shreveport station. An appeal was taken in the local courts, but before a decision was rendered the commercial interest controlling the Shreveport station sold out to another commercial group, and the Commission, it is stated, suggested a solution to the owners of the two stations whereby, after certain consents were obtained, the Commission would then be in a position to fulfill the expectations of the owners of the two stations by granting each of them full-time operation instead of the part-time assignments for which they were previously licensed.

I refer to the leasing of the facilities of a commercial station in New York City, known as WMCA. The license of this station is held by the Knickerbocker Broadcasting Co. With the exception of one share of stock, which is held by the vice president and general counsel of the corporation, the balance of the stock is in the name of only one individual, Donald Flamm. In the early part of 1934 the Federal Radio Commission approved the leasing of WMCA's facilities to a group of Wall Street bankers.

According to the press, the terms of payment called for an annual rental of $125,000 a year for a period of 5 years, at the expiration of which the Wall Street bankers would obtain control of the station by an additional payment of $500,000, making the total purchase price of the station approximately $1,125,000. I am quite confident, Mr. Speaker, that an investigation of the files of the Commission when approval of this lease was requested will disclose the fact that the terms which I have just mentioned were known to the members of the Commission. At least it was given the widest sort of publicity by the press of the Nation. Early this year the lessees of the station, the Wall Street bankers, decided that the Radio Trust was too strongly entrenched in the broadcasting industry to justify their continued opposition, and they canceled the lease, which the Commission not only approved but, without further investigation or a public hearing, it permitted and approved the continuance of the license in the name of the former licensee, Mr. Donald Flamm and his Knickerbocker Broadcasting Corporation. This station, like the Radio Trust, also appears to have exceedingly powerful influences with the old Radio Commission and its successor, the Federal Communications Commission, as I shall prove later.

One of the most flagrant and deliberate violations of the Communications Act of 1934, which very distinctly states that the "holder of a radio license must at all times have complete control of the mechanical equipment and the programs of the station", is the leasing of stations to the Radio Trust. The Federal Communications Commission and its predecessor, the Federal Radio Commission, have time and time again approved of the trafficking in radio licenses by members of the Radio Trust. The strange, and almost unbelievable, feature of this vicious system is that the transactions of the Radio Trust are winked at by the governmental supervisory and licensing agency, the Federal Communications Commission. After the lease or contract made by and between the Radio Trust and the original licensee has been completed, all the Radio Trust then has to do is to use its powerful influence with members of the Federal Communications Commission to add their approval to the contract or lease whereby the licensee voluntarily assigns over his control of the mechanical equipment and supervision and censorship of the programs of his station—after receiving a large sum of money from the Radio Trust.

Copies of these transactions, I am reliably informed, after approval by the Commission, are kept on file in its offices, subject only to inspection by the Commissioners themselves. These leases are not available for public inspection unless a court action is instituted by a protesting station, or a new applicant for the facilities which have been illegally transferred to the Radio Trust, and, as I have previously stated, approved by the Federal Communications Commission. As an illustration, the National Broadcasting Co., very frequently referred to by its President, Mr. Merlin H. Aylesworth, as the "world's greatest broadcasting system", holds such lease agreements with its powerful affiliated members of the Power Trust, namely, the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co., wherein the complete control, production, supervision, and broadcasting of all of the programs made over these stations are subject to, and only to, the ideals, policies, and wishes of the National Broadcasting Co. Each of these secret lease agreements are on file with, and have been approved by, the Federal Communications Commission.

The so-called "competitor", the Columbia Broadcasting Co.—and I use the word "competitor" very advisedly—is just as guilty of comparable offenses as is the National Broadcasting Co. in its contracting and leasing of radio facilities licensed to municipalities, power companies, newspapers, and others. About 5 years ago the president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Mr. William S. Paley, signed an optional 15-year lease with the city fathers of one of the widely known Atlantic coast summer resorts, often called "the world's greatest playground", whereby the high-powered radio station, which was licensed originally by the Federal Radio Commission for operation by this municipality, was turned over, stock, lock, and barrel, to the Columbia Broadcasting Co. to do with it as it saw fit. A few years after this iniquitous and illegal document was completed, a small educational station, one of the early pioneers in radiobroadcasting, owned and operated by the Paulist Fathers, licensed for 15 hours each week on the air, made a protest to the old Federal Radio Commission, and directed attention to the existence of this glaring example of "trafficking in radio licenses."

A public hearing was held before the Commission. I am told that the records in this case, on file with the Commission, not only exposed the existence of this secret and illegal transaction but it also developed that the lease had not been submitted to and approved by the Federal Radio Commission until a few months prior to the hearing, and that it had been supplemented by a contract which was even more vicious and of such a nature that it beggars description.

It was without seal or notarization; it was not approved by the proper authorities of the municipality nor by the Commission. It contained corrections and additions which were not properly initialed as required by law. This lease permitted the Columbia Broadcasting Co. to move the transmitter to any part of New Jersey it desired without even consulting the officials of Atlantic City, and it absolutely prohibited the city officials from broadcasting any programs without first obtaining the consent and approval of the Columbia Broadcasting Co., or its dummy holding company, the WPG Broadcasting Corporation, which was formed purely and simply to act as a blind for the real owner, the Columbia Broadcasting Co. The same officers and directors of the Columbia Broadcasting Co. held similar titles in this WPG Broadcasting Corporation, and that is why I refer to it as the "dummy holding company" of this member of the Radio Trust, because none of its stock or directorships were held by any of the duly elected officers of the municipality.

INFLUENCE OF NETWORKS

Regardless of all of these facts, the Federal Radio Commission decided against the small educational station; it approved and whitewashed questionable documents and permitted the situation to continue in the future, as it had in the past. Fearful of congressional notice and action, the Columbia Broadcasting Co., to lull the criticisms of the press of the country, and I suppose to relieve the Commission of future embarrassment, made a new arrangement with the city fathers. A few months ago, when the first of three 5-year options granted to the Radio Trust expired, the Columbia Broadcasting Co. canceled the lease. Then a new and more modern method of trafficking in radio licenses was inaugurated. First, the dummy holding company of the Columbia Broadcasting Co. applied to the Federal Communications Commission for approval to voluntarily assign its license back to the municipality. This was granted by the new Commission, without opportunity for a public hearing to the owners of the educational station, the Paulist Fathers, and others interested. Once more, seemingly strange and most unusual methods of the Radio Trust were accepted by the Federal Communications Commission. Before the Commission approved the assignment of this license, the Columbia Broadcasting Co. entered into a new agreement with the city authorities, whereby it agreed to supply all of the programs needed.

If this is not favoritism, if this does not prove existence of "trafficking in radio licenses" by and with the consent and approval of the Federal Communications Commission, then I do not know what further evidence is necessary.

PEOPLE INDEBTED TO THE INDEPENDENT PRESS

Mr. Speaker, no Member of Congress has more respect nor greater admiration than I for the independent press of the country. Through the medium of its printed columns, its editorials, its loyal devotion to public interest, and its ability to publicize fresh and vital news, it forms and molds public opinion and inculcates true Americanism in the minds and hearts of our present-day youth. I refer to the independent press of every State in the Union.

Public officials and servants are deeply indebted to the uncontrolled and independent members of the metropolitan newspaper fraternity, but this tribute of mine goes deeper and extends particularly to the thousands of small-town editors and newspapers of America. With extremely limited financial resources, the small-town publisher often is obliged to set his own type, print his own newspaper, and sometimes even deliver it. Back home we have scores of these gallant and glorious, self-sacrificing, and unsung heroes of the press fraternity. I call them "heroes" without a moment's hesitation. They are responsible for the enlightenment and education of young and old, for thousands of America's best statesmen; yes, even Presidents of the United States.

Despite all of the good they have done in directing the youth of America, the upholding of its ideals and traditions in their continual fight for what is right, we, the Members of Congress, are slowly but surely helping to crush out of existence thousands of small-town newspaper editors. If the conditions which I cite are permitted to continue, a small minority, composed of controlled newspapers, friendly, to say the least, to the Power Trust, are permitted also to monopolize radio stations. The Radio Trust uses its influence with the Federal Communications Commission to obtain licenses for these friendly interests, after which they become affiliates of the Radio Trust networks. This vicious system compels the listeners of these newspaper radio stations to carry programs only bearing the stamp of approval of the Power and Radio Trusts.

Very properly, the question could be raised as to how this system affects the editors and publishers of small, medium, and large newspapers. There is a vast difference between a newspaper and a radio station, or a network. In its value to the community, a local newspaper and local radio station are somewhat comparable.

Due to international radio agreements, the number of frequencies, or wavelengths, allotted to the United States are limited, as are the number of radio stations which the Federal Communications Commission can license for operation on these frequencies. This very important feature was discovered by the Radio Trust as far back as 1920, when the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. erected its first experimental station in the city of New York. Already this same company is planning and working, under the guise of experimentation, to monopolize television through the operation of what is known as a "coaxial cable", now installed between New York City and Philadelphia, the operation of which was approved only a few weeks ago by the Federal Communications Commission.

When Congress was considering radio legislation in 1927, agents and engineers of the Power Trust and the Radio Trust were most eloquent and profound in their solicitations for the listeners in urban and rural sections. They contended the only solution to the problem was for Congress to set aside 40 of the 90 frequencies for use by high-powered stations.

Having won their point, the Radio Trust immediately started to corner practically all of these 40 "high-powered" clear-channel frequencies, so that today, between exclusively owned, leased, and controlled stations (the Radio Trust refers to their contract-controlled stations as "affiliates"), the Radio Trust has possession of more than 35 of these frequencies. Having obtained possession of the heart of the radio industry, they next started a campaign for the right to boost the power of these stations from 5,000 watts up to 50,000 watts, and I suppose it will not be very long until these 50,000-watt stations are boosted up to 500,000 watts as was recently authorized for a station in the Middle West. Naturally the higher the wattage, the more power is used—power supplied by the same interests that control and dominate the Radio Trust—power that is purchased at high rates by the advertiser on the assumption that he is getting a wider and more intensive coverage by purchasing time on the high-powered stations owned by the Radio Trust for the advertising of his products.

As always, who is it in the final analysis that pays for this supposed high power? None other than the radio listener, the prospective purchaser of the advertiser's products, for naturally if his advertising expenses are increased in order to help boost the consumption of electricity, then the advertiser has to add this increased radio advertising expense to his manufacturing costs, or reduce the salaries paid to his employees. The situation is comparable to a remark credited to the chief spokesman of the Radio Trust, Mr. Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Co., former managing director of the propaganda institution of the Power Trust, which was called the "National Electric Light Association", who said: "Never mind the expense; the public pays it." This statement, made years ago by Mr. Aylesworth before a convention of the Power Trust interests held in Birmingham, Ala., remains today the slogan of the Radio Trust.

ADVANTAGES OF RADIO OVER PRESS

With the exception of the advertising done by big business, the average radio advertiser's appropriation is limited, and if he is susceptible to, or unknowingly becomes a victim of, the alluring and inducing promises of quick returns advanced by the solicitors of the Radio Trust networks, he is, of necessity, forced to reduce his newspaper and magazine advertising, and, in the case of newspaper, it is the small town newspapers which are hit the hardest. The large metropolitan dailies also suffer by a reduction in the amount of space which this radio advertiser uses. Radio advertising today represents nearly 15 cents of the advertising dollar. Most of this money comes out of the pockets of thousands of "small town newspaper editors."

Again, in comparing a local newspaper with a local radio station, the latter has a decided advantage in that the circulation or distribution area of a newspaper is exceedingly limited, while the area of the radio station's audience is confined only to the amount of power under which it operates, ranging anywhere from 10 to 500 miles.

Realizing the present intolerable and monopolistic advantages which it now enjoys, the Radio Trust has within the past year entered into a gentleman's agreement with certain newspaper interests. For example, imagine what may happen within a very short period of time if the Power and Radio Trusts, with the cooperation of friendly newspaper interests, were able to control both the newspapers and radio stations of their local communities.

Mr. Speaker, this unwise, unsound, and highly unimaginable condition is now under way, with the full knowledge and consent of the Federal Communications Commission. During the past 6 months or so, in the city of Shreveport, La., the only 2 newspapers published there, as well as the only 2 full-time radio stations, are now owned and controlled by the same identical financial interests who have contracted with the Radio Trust for the broadcasting of its programs over their radio stations. This same condition exists in Wilmington, Del., Lancaster, Pa., York, Pa., and other cities throughout the country.

What chance has the honest, unbiased, and independent press of the country when it is forced into competition with a newspaper which also controls a radio station and, therefore, can offer the advertiser a reduced combination rate for both mediums. An examination of the hearings held before the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission last January, on the confirmations of the present members of the Federal Communications Commission, will disclose the fact that the Chairman of the Broadcast Division, Eugene O. Sykes, went on record as being opposed to the ownership and control of radio stations by newspaper interests. Mr. Speaker, hardly a week has gone by since Chairman Sykes, under oath, made this statement, but additions have been made to the list of radio broadcasting stations now owned by large newspaper interests. Nothing is being done to prevent or lessen this far-reaching evil. It is high time that something is done by the Congress to correct this and the many other existing conditions which are being condoned and approved by the Federal Communications Commission.

GRAFTERS PROTECTED—WHY?

Elsewhere I have made mention of the hearings of last January held by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee on the confirmation of members of the Federal Communications Commission. During these hearings a number of amazing and startling facts were disclosed in connection with the actions of members of this Commission and the activities of the representatives of the Radio Trust. As an indication of what took place during these hearings, I cite one of many outstanding and glaring examples of the need for strong and drastic action by Congress to correct the abuses.

I refer to the case of a Mr. George Llewellyn, who was discharged from the service of the Federal Radio Commission without a hearing simply because this honest, conscientious, and loyal Government employee, a World War veteran, tried to do his duty by exposing the crookedness of a superior. His superior was retained in the service for several months, and permitted to resign, even after an investigation by an agent of the Department of Justice disclosed him guilty of several of the charges.

Due to the intercession of Senator BILBO and Congressman ROBERT RAMSPECK, the entire facts in this case were placed before the members of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee. Senator BILBO frankly admitted that he was in opposition to the confirmation of Chairman Eugene O. Sykes. He placed before the committee all of the facts bearing on the crookedness of a former official of the Commission and the uncalled-for discharge of a loyal worker and correspondence which clearly showed the official guilty of accepting bribes. The facts indicated how grossly unfair, unjust, and severe the members of the former Federal Radio Commission were in the treatment of this young and loyal employee, and the present chairman of the Broadcast Division of the Federal Communications Commission was the then Chairman of the Federal Radio Commission. Hon. Thad Brown, who acted as Chairman when this case was first brought to the attention of the Federal Radio Commission, is now a member of the Telephone Division of the Federal Communications Commission, acting as vice chairman under Chairman Paul A. Walker, the gentleman who recently found it necessary to use his famous "antigift" order. Colonel Brown last January told the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee members that he favored the ownership and control of radio stations by newspaper interests.

To return again to the case of Mr. Llewellyn: The only defense which Chairman Sykes had to offer for the unexplainable and unjustified discharge of this faithful employee was that when the case was first called to the attention of his Commission he was in Europe attending a conference. But the correspondence very clearly showed that on his return to the States the matter was called to his personal attention not only by Mr. Llewellyn but also by members of both the house and senate of the State in which this young man resides, and in every instance Chairman Sykes refused to give Mr. Llewellyn an opportunity to present his side of the story.

In amazement the members of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee listened to the unfolding of the many instances of gross negligence and carelessness performed by members of the former Federal Radio Commission and the present existing Federal Communications Commission. Finally, my colleague from the State of Montana, Chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York, and many other members of the committee propounded question after question to Chairman Sykes and Commissioner Brown. Senator WAGNER was most insistent in asking both of these gentlemen if they considered their actions fair and just, and after 2½ years of silence they both had to admit that an injustice had been done and agreed to give him a hearing. He was not only vindicated but so successfully proved his charges that the Commission was compelled to reinstate him in its service.

Mr. Speaker, even if this was the only instance of incompetence, and I might even go so far as to charge malfeasance of office, I contend that it is sufficient reason and justification for a thorough investigation of the Federal Communications Commission, particularly the Broadcast Division of this Commission, as well as the dominating and powerful influences which the Radio Trust seems to have with members of this Commission.

PROTESTS MEAN LITTLE

Some 4 months ago the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission cited 21 member stations of the Radio Trust to appear before the Commission and show cause why their licenses should not be revoked in view of their having repeatedly broadcast a program which the American Medical Association and the Federal Trade Commission had publicly branded as injurious and harmful to the consumer. The hearings on all of these cases was set for June and then postponed until October.

As all licenses expire in either July or August we find the Commission citing 21 stations before them for what is termed "violations of the law" and then the Commission issuing a renewal of the license even while the licensee is under charges. However, this was changed as the Commission did not wait for any hearing but entirely on its own motion whitewashed the entire matter and issued as their reason for this unusual action the fact that the stations had agreed not to broadcast this particular program again.

Another recent decision which has created considerable interest on the part of those Members of the Congress who have indicated an interest in matters pertaining to radio broadcasting is the findings of the Commission in the recent citation of station WMCA, of New York City. This is the station which some Wall Street bankers leased in order to enter into competition with the Radio Trust and found the competition too hard and left the radio field sadder but perhaps wiser men.

The attorneys for the Commission who investigated the numerous complaints which were filed, protesting against a program broadcast over this station, directed the Commission's attention to three depositions in particular. A public hearing was held. The attorneys for the Commission presented these three depositions, and the only witness in opposition was the vice president and general counsel of the station, who holds one share of stock. The balance of the stock is owned by the president of the company, who was so sure of the decision, even before the case opened, that he did not deem it necessary to publicly tell the Commission such a story as he might have concocted.

The result of this public hearing was another victory for those who seemingly feel that radio is a racket, which only the privileged few may indulge in, as the Commission approved the renewal of the license because the program had been canceled and the sole "star" witness, the possessor of one share of stock, promised that the station would not broadcast such a program again.

The testimony officially taken by the Commission in this case and their action is such that Congress is warranted in demanding an investigation as to whether or not such complaints as are herein referred to are used for the purpose of enriching certain lawyers who seemingly have a way of securing results with this particular commission.

THE PRESS AWAKENS

Mr. Speaker, the free and independent press of the United States seemingly is now aware of the great danger which is confronting it. Only last week, I understand, the California Publishers' Association, comprising 350 publications with newspapers, located in the various communities of California, other than in the cities of Los Angeles and San Francisco, after careful consideration of the effect which radio control has had on the free and independent newspapers of our country, in convention, have called upon the Congress "to purge radio of commercial influence" and return to the people of America control of radio. It is my opinion and my belief that this action on the part of the California Newspaper Association soon will be followed by similar action on the part of the newspaper association in every State of the United States. With such support in addition to the support of labor organizations, farm organizations, educational and cultural organizations, there is no doubt in my mind but that Congress will soon enact H. R. 8475.

The legislation which I have presented to Congress and which I will actively insist upon consideration of at the next session will not deprive the American people of any constructive good which may be obtained from radiobroadcasting. The legislation which I have presented will, first, place the American people in control of the facilities which they alone own, namely, the air. It will deny to the Radio Trust the power of influencing and molding public opinion. It will protect the employment opportunities of many thousands now employed and will, in addition thereto, soon provide employment for the forty or fifty thousand printing-trade workers deprived of employment by the diversion of advertising from newspapers and magazines to radio. It will enable the independent newspapers of our country to derive that revenue which is essential to the continued maintenance of a free and independent press. It will permit of real education being carried into the homes of all of our people.

As an illustration, I cite my own State, Montana, where, in the hills and valleys, in the homes of the ranchers, the miners, and the farmers, the homes where the youngsters too often are deprived of the opportunity of an education, because of the inadequate wages paid their parents or the low prices paid to farmers, it will permit the college carrying to these people throughout our land a type of education now denied them because the Radio Trust and the Power Trust are only interested in the type of information which will add additional profits to their coffers.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. I wish to say a word in regard to a bill that I introduced in the House. This is the anti-lynching bill, the companion of the Costigan-Wagner Senate bill. Friends of this bill planned to have it voted on in the Senate first. It is most regrettable that in spite of the splendid fight made by Senator COSTIGAN for the favorable consideration of this bill, it was defeated by a filibuster.

One of the arguments used against the antilynching bill was that it was unconstitutional. As to this specious argument I agree with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who said:

> Can it possibly be unconstitutional for this Government to protect its citizens—its taxpayers—against mob murderers in cases in which the States refuse or fail to discharge their duty in this important matter? How can anyone with a scintilla of national pride or self-respect seriously contend that the Constitution requires the Federal Government to stand idly by while nearly a hundred of its citizens are every year tortured to death by means more horrifying than any of which the fiercest Indian tribe ever dared to dream?

I believe in the Constitution, and, in common with all good Americans, I am prepared to defend it.

But I am bitterly opposed to the effort now being made to use the cry of unconstitutionality to prevent the passage of measures designed to promote the welfare of our people. This is merely a trick and device to defeat progressive legislation. And yet this argument was used effectively to prevent the passage of the antilynching bill.

Republican politicians are using the defeat of this bill as an argument to prove that a Democratic Congress is not friendly to legislation designed to protect the colored people from mob violence.

The answer to this lies in the record. In 1921 and 1922 the Dyer antilynching bill came before a Republican Congress and met precisely the same fate as the present anti-lynching bill.

The Republicans remained in control of Congress and the Presidency for 10 long years after the defeat of the Dyer antilynching bill. And during those 10 years of complete control the Republicans neither passed nor tried to pass an antilynching bill.

Not one party, but reactionaries in both parties are responsible. The remedy lies in the hands of enlightened and progressive men and women. We must continue our efforts to persuade legislators to enact laws that will ultimately wipe this stain from our national escutcheon.

MAIN STREET OR CHAIN STREET

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered at Hagerstown, Md.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me at Hagerstown, Md., on August 21, 1935:

> This evening I come before you as one who has a deep interest in the problems which have brought you together. As a young man I clerked in a general store. Later, as the publisher of a weekly newspaper, I experienced that close relationship and mutuality of interest which exist between the small-town merchant and a country editor. As Governor of my State, I used the opportunity for leadership which the office afforded to call to the attention of the people the menace presented by the tendency toward concentration in the field of merchandising. As a Member of Congress, I have supported the cause of the independent merchant.
> Shortly after I had left a village of 1,500 people to assume the office of Governor of Minnesota, a friend one day brought me the information that a political boss whose bidding I had refused to do had called me a "small-town man." I said: "Go and tell your friend that I feel that he has paid me a high compliment and conferred upon me a badge of distinction. I am a small-town man, and proud of it. Tell him that I have the rural outlook and a country background. Tell him that the first time I had writer's cramp, I got it from milking cows. Tell him that my first job in life was to teach calves to drink milk out of a pail; that first I had to pull a calf's ears off to get it up to the pail, and then I had to pull its tail off to get it away from the pail. And tell him, also, that the hungry interests for which he usually speaks are like those calves—it is hard to get their noses out of the pail of special privilege."

It is because during the last few years some of the calves have been getting more than their share of the milk that I am interested in your fight. This Nation today is witnessing a concentration of ownership and control of business unprecedented in the history of the world, and it bodes no good to the Republic. Mergers and consolidations on every hand; ruthless competition driving small business men out of the field and leaving big business men in unchallenged control; these are conditions in America today that are undermining prosperity and even endangering the structure of our democracy.

Fifteen years ago chain stores were doing only 4 percent of the retail business of this country; today they are doing 20 percent. There are now over 100,000 chain stores in the United States, representing 5,000 chains and doing an annual business of over $8,000,000,000.

Two great mail-order houses, already giants, are reaching out into the local field, one of them having undertaken a program of 1,500 community stores. Before this onslaught of big business 300,000 independent dealers have gone down, and unless the movement toward centralization is checked, 500,000 more are due to follow them. Eight hundred thousand men, each the master of his own little store, men who have spent their lives learning merchandising, who know the peculiar needs of their own customers, who love their communities and have given a helping hand in their development, who cherish the institutions of their country because those institutions have enabled the individual man to develop, to grow, and to achieve—these 800,000 masters must become servants, employees of great chain corporations, cogs in a soulless and conscienceless machine, robots of distribution, receiving and obeying orders from the great city, directing them what to sell, how to sell it, and how much to sell it for. This is the prospect that is due to face the American people when Main Street became Chain Street.

"An inevitable development", say some. "You can't sweep back the tide of economic forces."

"Chain stores have come in response to social and economic needs", say others. "They provide a more efficient means for the distribution of goods and commodities, and therefore will continue to grow, despite artificial and legal restrictions."

If either of these contentions were true, I should not be here today. I should not care to take up the cudgels in behalf of the independent merchant, if I thought he was a vermiform appendix in the economic body; I should be the first to advise a surgical operation. I should not be here, if I believed that unyielding economic law doomed the individual unit distributor to extinction, for I can think of any number of easier ways to die than to bump my head against a stone wall.

The spirit of martyrdom is not strong enough in me to make me want to sacrifice myself for a hopelessly lost cause. I like a fight, but I am usually found fighting for causes and principles that have at least a chance to win.

No, there is no economic law which dooms the independent merchant to inevitable extinction. If the independent merchant dies it is his own fault; it is because he retreats when it is time to advance; it is because he lies down and lets the enemy march over him; it is because he fails to call to his aid the millions of right-thinking American citizens—the reserve army that has never yet failed to rally to any just and deserving cause.

There is a great deal of buncombe in the talk about economic drifts and economic laws. There is nothing to justify economic fatalism. This country has made its great progress by circumventing and evading principles which economists have advanced with much seriousness and supported with much learning. Time and again Joshua has told the sun to stand still, and it has stood still.

There was a time when there was hardly an economist worthy of the name who was not an advocate of free trade. A hundred years ago the American people adopted the principle of the protective tariff; and, leaving out of consideration in this discussion the question whether we have not at times adopted tariff schedules that were too high, let me ask you, Is there anyone present who believes that the incomparable progress that the American people have made in industry in a century and a half would have been possible if we had followed the advice of doctrinaire economists and remained on a free-trade basis?

By legislating in defiance of economic law as expounded by learned men, we have kept foreign goods out of the home market, maintained an artificial price level for the domestic producer, enabled him to develop mass production and thereby cut his costs to such a degree that he was able to undersell his low-wage foreign competitor in almost every world market. By statute law we have suspended economic law.

The tariff is only one of the many examples I might cite. By the Transportation Act we have avoided the disasters which would have flowed from a policy of laissez faire in the operation of railroads. By antidiscrimination laws we have stopped many of the abuses which existed when competition was unrestricted. We interfere with economic law when we fix telephone rates and tell power companies what they may charge for lighting our houses or turning the wheels of our machinery.

We interfere with economic law when we say who may and who may not operate bus and truck lines. We interfere with economic law when we grant patents and protect trade marks. We interfere with economic law through the control of credit by the Federal Reserve Board. Saying that any trend or tendency is inevitable because of the operation of economic law is an admission of either insincerity or incapacity. It denotes a lack of the will or the skill to do what ought to be done. It is a confession in social and political bankruptcy.

So let us at the outset reject the idea that there is any economic law which makes continuing concentration in retail business inevitable. What about the second contention, that chain stores have come in response to the need of a more efficient means for the distribution of goods and commodities? Do the facts justify that claim, or is it a mere assumption?

First, are efficiency and economy inherent in bigness? Let Dr. Julius Klein, formerly of the United States Department of Commerce, answer that question:

"For certain types of business the big concern has an undoubted advantage over its smaller competitor. But in those lines of merchandising, where success depends mainly on taking advantage of changing trade opportunities, close watchful contact with market conditions, and expert personal superintendence, the small operator has many advantages over the large establishment. * * * The resourcefulness and freedom of action of the individual will always go far toward offsetting the advantage of large-scale operations of the more complicated organizations. In fact, those characteristics are the most important factors in maintaining American business."

Let us hear what J. C. Penney has to say. Does he, admittedly the most successful of all chain-store operators, claim for chain merchandising any inherent advantage that will put the independent retailer out of business? Speaking of the individual who prefers to operate his own store, he said: "There will always be room, and plenty of it, in this country for this type of man. If he has the ability, the resources, and the necessary energy, he will succeed alongside the chain store, the mail-order house, the big department store, the direct house-to-house salesman, or of any other type of competition."

This man, who operates 1,425 stores, entertains no illusions about the advantages of mass buying and large-scale operations. He knows that the individual owner of a single store can manage that store more economically than the hired clerk taking orders from a distant city. He knows that an owner will find and eliminate those little leaks and losses which a hired man would never see. He knows that in a small organization every member is a salesman, while in a large one there is necessarily a large proportion of nonselling employees. He knows that there is in big business a point of diminishing returns beyond which advantages are nullified by disadvantages.

There is no more efficient and economical unit of distribution than a properly conducted small store. Gorton James, while a division chief in the Department of Commerce, asked, "In what respects can the chain beat the old type of store when the latter is run on the new principles being evolved today?" Answering his own question, he says: "One element is claimed in cash selling, yet the economies of cash selling have been disputed. The cost of credit extension to retail customers is apparently a few tenths of 1 percent. Certain cash stores report inventory shrinkages that mean greater loss than that. Thievery, careless handling, spoilage, and work under pressure of crowds add their mites. More retail selling time is required in cash-and-carry stores.

Business comes in peak loads and the entire selling transaction must be finished at once. This adds to the congestion of the store. In a store which gives delivery service, the order can be taken and set aside to be packed for delivery after the rush."

In other words, it is very doubtful whether those merchandising methods which curtail service reduce the cost of doing business.

Even the hired spokesmen of the chain stores do not claim that the growth of the chains is due to any inherent economic advantage of chain-store merchandising. At the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, at a conference sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers, William J. Baxter, director of a research bureau representing 300 chains, declared: "They haven't been successful due to prices. They haven't been successful due to buying."

Let it be admitted, despite Mr. Baxter's statement, that on account of their large purchases chain stores have in the past been able to buy goods at lower prices than independent merchants.

That advantage is not as great as it may seem. For after the chain merchant has bought a large quantity of merchandise, he must store it in central warehouses before delivering it in small quantities to his local stores. He must pay interest on the money invested in that merchandise; he must keep the goods insured; he must bear the expense of dividing large shipments into smaller parcels; in fact, he must add to the initial cost of the goods every item of expense which is usually attendant upon distribution by the wholesaler. He doesn't eliminate the jobber when he becomes his own jobber. In fact, it may seriously be questioned whether a chain-store merchant who performs this function for his own stores, as an incidental although necessary part of his business, can perform it as cheaply as the independent jobber who specializes in jobbing and supplies the general trade in a wider field.

If there is any net saving in mass purchases, independent merchants can effect that saving as well as chain stores through cooperative buying associations. It is not necessary for a man to abdicate to a big corporation in order to buy goods at the lowest prices consistent with good quality and honest business practices.

Whenever chain stores have bought goods at a lower price than the jobber who supplies the general trade, they have done it by beating down the manufacturer and forcing him to sell below the cost of production. Such a practice in the long run spells higher prices to the consumer—not lower. Consider what happened in the cheap-watch trade. The Ingersoll dollar watch made good bait for price cutters, who sold it for as low as 59 cents. In order to sell it at that figure predatory dealers forced the manufacturer to sell to them for less than cost and to get all his profits out of the independent merchants. But the latter, resenting the discrimination and refusing to sell Ingersoll watches at less than cost, discontinued the line, and the manufacturer went out of business.

There is no economy in commercial piracy. It may enable a few men to amass a fortune, but to the great mass of the people it spells a total loss. The consumer is best served when he buys his goods from day to day at honest prices, allowing a fair margin of profit on every item, a profit that will enable the manufacturer, the jobber, and the retailer to continue doing business, competing with others in a fair and honorable way. Whenever a manufacturer or a merchant fails as a result of unfair competition, the loss ultimately falls on the consumer. The bankruptcy of many producers and distributors may mean temporary savings for the patrons of bargain counters; but ultimately it results in monopoly for a few producers and distributors, who will charge the public a price limited only by what the market will bear.

Chain merchants have succeeded, not because they have given the public better service, for they have curtailed service; not because they have given better values, for their average price is fully as high as that of the independent merchant; but because they have been able to create the impression that their prices were lower by offering standard, trade-marked merchandise at cost or below cost and recouping their losses by marking up other lines. That this has been their practice was disclosed by Mr. Baxter in an unguarded moment, when he said:

"To me there isn't any question as to the advisability of any retail store if it can sell some nationally known product at cost to get the crowd. * * * A consumer will go to a grocery store and she is willing to pay 55 cents for steak, whereas it might be sold for 52 or 50 cents elsewhere, if she at the same time can purchase Campbell's soup or some other package goods at cost. * * * Scientific retailing means studying the blind articles in the store and selling them at full price. But what we call 'open articles', the ones that the consumer can go from store to store and compare, selling them at low prices."

This is the ethics of merchandising, as preached and proclaimed by the chain stores' paid spokesman. This is the doctrine of caveat emptor—"let the buyer beware"—brought down to date: Not to serve the people, but to fool the buying public by any device, fair or foul. Get the business honestly if you can; but if you can't get it honestly, get it any way. This is the business code presented by an acknowledged exponent of the chain stores.

I don't want to be unfair; I don't desire to be extreme in my statements; I don't care to use harsh language; but there is only one term that to me adequately describes business conducted along the line laid down by this apostle of high-powered and low-principled merchandising. I would call it "commercial racketeering."

Lest that term seem too strong, let me quote Mr. Hoover, who, as Food Administrator, paid his respects to purveyors of food products, who during the period of sugar shortage indulged in unfair practices through the use of combination sales. Many of these combination sales offered sugar at less than actual cost, but the prices of other food commodities were increased sufficiently to make up the loss on sugar and at the same time allow a profit. Speaking of those whom he called "black sheep" of the grocery business, he said that honest merchants "do not cajole their customers by giving the impression that $1 worth of goods is sold for 69 cents, for the days of gold bricking an intelligent public have passed. One's money's worth—no more, no less—is offered, and on such a basis of honesty is permanent business founded."

Mr. Hoover stopped the vicious practice of deception by prohibiting the sale of combination lots which included sugar. May not the question fairly be asked: Should not the same standards be required in time of peace as are exacted in time of war? If it was wrong to deceive the public then, is it not equally wrong now? If the arm of the Government was used to stop commercial chicanery in 1918, should not the arm of the Government be invoked in the same cause in 1935?

There have been pending in Congress from time to time measures to stop the practice of using trade-marked merchandise as a bait. Such legislation would end predatory price cutting on standard goods. It would declare such a practice unfair competition and give independent business men the means of protecting themselves against it.

We have enacted laws to prevent railroad companies from giving rebates to favored shippers. We require warehouses to charge every man the same price for storing grain and other commodities. We make telephone companies maintain a uniform schedule of rates. We revoke the licenses of insurance companies if they collect different premiums from different policyholders for the same risk.

We prohibit discrimination because discrimination lifts the burden off a favored group and places it upon the rank and file. We prohibit it, because when some pay less than a fair price others pay more. We prohibit it because discrimination is the mother of monopoly.

Why should not the principle of fair dealing which has been adopted for the protection of those who use the railroad for transporation, the warehouse for storing commodities, the telephone for communication, and insurance for protection be extended to protect those who buy merchandise and those who sell it?

The law of the jungle should be superseded in the field of merchandising by the law of fair dealing and honest service. We find no fault with the principle that the fittest should survive; but we protest with all the emphasis we can command against a misinterpretation of that principle which gives advantage not to the fittest but to the strongest and the craftiest. The unique contribution of civilization is that it has substituted fitness and adaptability for cunning and brute force as the determining factors of survival. Civilization puts the emphasis on right rather than on might. The powers of government should be used to make business civilized.

In this country we have, despite temporary setbacks, made material progress unparalleled in history. We have amassed wealth and power.

Instead of the primeval forest, trackless except for a few lonesome trails which marked the westward path of the retreating red man, and the unbroken prairie, treeless except for a few cottonwoods which skirted the streams, we have farms of unprecedented productiveness and cities throbbing with industry. Agriculture has invoked the aid of every science, and our soil has produced sustenance for all the world. Industry has increased a thousandfold, and American-made goods are to be found in every market. American-made bridges span the rivers of central Africa. American-made steam shovels dig ore out of South American mines, American-made binders reap the harvests of Asia Minor, and American-made automobiles are penetrating the inner recesses of Thibet. Today you can buy Swift's Premium ham even in the markets of Jerusalem.

Territorially, also, we have made great strides. A century and a half ago our fathers crossed the Alleghenies. Since then the Mississippi Valley has become an empire; beyond the Rockies a region once the home of the cowboy and the adventurer has yielded a dozen sovereign States. Half-way across the Pacific we have carried the flag—emblem of our power. We have carried it, too, to far Luzon, "where the setting meets the rising sun." Night no longer for more than an hour envelops our dominion. The sun is always rising over some portion of American soil into some American sky.

But this power and glory would be mere pomp and circumstance if opportunity for the individual to grow and to achieve were lost.

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
When wealth accumulates and men decay."

Our fathers came to these shores to find opportunity. They had no illusions; they did not dream that all would have the same condition and circumstance; they knew that in any society some by reason of greater foresight, more talents, and better self-control would acquire more wealth than others; they knew that the labor of some men is more productive than that of others. Nature, which does not give to any two trees the same foliage, or even to any two blades of grass the same structure and form, never invests two men with the same capacity. Our fathers did not expect to build a society in which every person would have the same number of dollars, own the same number of acres, live in the same kind of house, or wear the same kind of clothes as every other person. They did not conceive even of a nation without classes, because they knew that men naturally and instinctively gravitate into strata.

What they planned and hoped was that here the avenues between the classes should always be kept open, so that through ability and perseverance, the lowliest might rise, despite the accident of birth and blood, even to the highest places in the Republic. This was what James A. Garfield had in mind when he said that while European society is stratified like the rocks in the earth, ours is stratified like the ocean, where from the sternest deeps any drop may rise to glisten on the highest wave that rolls. This was the dream of Abraham Lincoln when he spoke of America as a Nation built to preserve in the world that form and substance of government, the object of which is to remove the obstacles from the pathway of all, to open the avenues of honorable employment to all, and to give to all an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race of life.

STATEMENT ON LABOR

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include in connection therewith a statement by the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor on labor legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement on labor legislation given out on August 22, by Henry Ohl, Jr., president of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor:

On the eve of the announcement of a great effort to bring about the rejuvenation of the Democratic Party, it became necessary to warn the workers of Wisconsin of the consequences of misplaced confidence. The Wisconsin State Federation of Labor deems it a duty to inform working people that the Democratic Party in Wisconsin, together with its reactionary political ally, the Republicans, has proved itself unworthy the affiliation or support of decent citizens. Its indifference toward the asinine and dishonest acts of its legislators during the present session of the legislature deserves only contempt and condemnation.

Wisconsin labor will never forget that it was the Democrats in the State senate, acting as the henchmen of the antisocial, money-mad Republican representatives, who strangled the highest hope of working men and women for economic sanity and social security by defeating the Wisconsin labor-disputes bill, sponsored by labor. This was the most important and vital piece of labor legislation of the session. It was patterned after the Wagner Labor Disputes Act, passed by Congress and signed by President Roosevelt. Its provisions were to apply to intrastate business while the Federal act covers interstate enterprises. The bill was defeated by a conspiring alliance of Democrats with reactionary Republicans. By their action the Democratic State senators stamped themselves as enemies of the organized labor movement, and the whole Democratic Party organization, by its failure to rebuke its legislative representatives for this action, has placed itself in the same position.

The State labor-disputes bill took no advantages away from capital except the unwarranted, usurped power to squelch intercourse between workers that comes from self-organization into bona fide labor unions, without interference on the part of employers. As a result of the prostituted statesmanship of these misrepresentatives of the people, strikes, lockouts, industrial controversies of various kinds become inevitable, for, with or without a labor-disputes act, labor in Wisconsin will never surrender the natural, constitutional right to organize. If it was the intention of the Democratic Party and its Republican money ally to test the caliber of the organized labor movement in Wisconsin by running counter to its entire program of reconstruction, we say to them now that we accept the challenge for a finish contest on both the economic and political fields.

Every clear-thinking worker is chagrined at the murderous assault made jointly by Democrats and Republicans on the labor-disputes bill. They are also cognizant of other transgressions by these political misfits who lack every qualification of statesmanship. The Wisconsin works-program bill, under which labor had hoped to secure something more than a standard-destroying wage, and which we had every hope would develop a model for the Nation, was assailed as mercilessly as was the labor-disputes bill.

Organized labor will not forget with what fiendish glee the State senate, again led by the Democrats, endeavored to crucify the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor on a lying joint resolution, when they knew it was a lying resolution inspired by a politically disgruntled senator. A more decent assembly, composed of Progressive and Socialist members, rebuked the intent of the senate by killing the resolution by an almost unanimous vote.

Numerous pieces of vital legislation were mercilessly mangled by Democratic amendments before the original bill was given the final death vote of the false statesmen of the Democratic Party, who held the balance of legislative power. Space forbids a complete review of all the impudent defiance of the will of the people in the present legislature by Democratic edict. A more complete presentation will be issued from the official records at the close of the session. We ask the Milwaukee electorate particularly to weigh the fact that this city furnished the kind of reactionary senators that made the science of government a travesty in Wisconsin in 1935.

Of Milwaukee County's 7 State senators, 6—Galasinski, Phillips, Schoenecker, Shenners, and Zimmy, Democrats, and Morris, reactionary Republican—voted against the labor-disputes bill, and Callan, Democrat, was absent.

Out of the 14 Democratic State senators only 1 voted for the bill. It is highly significant that of the 6 Republican senators 5 voted against the bill. This conclusively shows the tie-up between the Democrats and the reactionary Republicans.

While the rejuvenation of a discredited political group is being attempted, it will be well for Democrats to consider that every controversy with employers involving industrial relations, sought to be covered by the State labor-disputes bill, will be charged to Democratic perfidy and Republican chicancery. Every strike that takes place because of the opposition of the employer to the right of self-organization will be attributable to Democratic glorification in the enslavement of labor and treachery to their own standard bearer, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Every penny of cost, every sacrifice, every pang of anguish that might have been avoided by the enactment of the labor-disputes bill will be an additional blot on the escutcheon of Democratic politics in Wisconsin. The failure of every effort to develop labor's plan for management-labor cooperation must be accounted for by Democratic political dishonesty and broken pledges, aided and abetted by spurious Republicanism.

Whatever decent and honest individuals may yet call themselves Democrats after the legislative abortion of 1935 must wonder, as we do, under what process a structure as decayed as is the Democratic Party in Wisconsin can be rejuvenated. The most reactionary and bitterly hostile senate in Wisconsin's history, that of 1935, contained not only old, worn-out fifteenth-century minds, but the younger members, sans any idea of the meaning of statesmanship, aped the fogies in their most indecent and unpatriotic political maneuverings.

Had it been the deliberate aim of those who held the reins of Democratic Party management to commit political suicide, they could not have made a better job of it. The failure of the party leaders, young and old, to protest oft-repeated, unscrupulous, labor-baiting acts of the party's adherents in the legislature certainly offers no hope of awakening a conscience where there is none by a belated assurance of rejuvenation.

Our complaint is not on the basis of a few individuals violating their pledges, but against the party in Wisconsin as a whole which connived at and aided in the grossest, deliberate violations of the principles of democracy and studied labor oppression, with the aid of Republicans as indecent politically as they. They have also called to their aid every recalcitrant employer whose god is profits and to whom the common weal is meaningless.

The Wisconsin State Federation is primarily an economic, rather than political, movement. Politics to us is merely an instrument for economic and social betterment. To this end clean and honest politics or statesmanship is essential. That kind of politics is expected and demanded by our movement. Labor and the farmers have been too patient with the spoilsmongers in both the Democratic and Republican Parties. We have dared to venture into the political arena to accept the challenge of reaction and treachery as characterized in the Wisconsin Senate of 1935.

Our people must not be misled by assurances that any party so utterly lacking in statesmanship as the Democratic Party now promising to rejuvenate itself, anymore than the grabbing, grafting Republican Party can ever be eligible for the suffrage of the great hosts of men and women of labor in the industries and on the farms of the Badger Commonwealth.

HENRY OHL, JR.,
President Wisconsin State Federation of Labor.

STARVATION WAGES

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, a most deplorable condition is existing in the neighboring city of Alexandria, which is only a few miles from the Nation's Capitol. The Morris Weinman & Son Century Manufacturing Co. is paying starvation wages to its employees. Verifying this statement I wish to submit this company's pay roll for the week ending July 19, 1935.

The above figures are based upon 48 hours per week according to authentic information I have received. These employees are in most instances known as "machine operators" in the manufacturing of garments. They are good citizens in this community, and it is impossible for them to exist on wages of this kind. How can employees receiving these amounts contribute anything toward business recovery or how can they assist the merchants to develop their business on such starvation wages? It surely is impossible to develop a safe standard of morals and self-respect on a pay roll of this kind. How can we as Members of Congress expect law and order to be observed when women are forced by circumstances to work under unbearable conditions such as these, namely, long hours at the rate of pay shown on the above list? Sweatshops such as this should be prohibited to exist, and the owners should be punished for their Shylock tactics. This company is also competing with legitimate concerns for Government contracts, who have signed agreements with the United Garment Workers of America and complying with the wage agreements of that organization. Therefore, it is my opinion that this company should be prohibited from bidding on these Government contracts because of the menace it is to the welfare of not only Alexandria but the country as a whole.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. Doubtless every Member of the House will appreciate the difficulties and the embarrassment of the Chair, with so many bills of importance to various Members pressing for consideration. It is impossible, of course, to recognize all, but the Chair feels, as he has for the past few days, that Members ought to have a reasonable opportunity to ask unanimous consent to consider public bills, either Senate bills which have been passed, and where there is a House bill on the same subject on the calendar, recommended by the committee, or where they are House bills which are pending with Senate amendments.

It does seem to the Chair that it is fair to give those Members an opportunity, if it is possible, and, so far as possible, to ask unanimous consent for their consideration. Although one or two passed on yesterday, it is manifestly impossible to take up private bills, because there are a multitude of those bills. We will have another day in January, if we adjourn tomorrow, as I fully expect and hope will be done. There are a number of Members who have been asking for recognition. Others have had their chance in the past, and their bills were objected to. The Chair feels that, in all fairness to Members, those Members who have been waiting, who have not had an opportunity to ask unanimous consent, should have that opportunity before others who have had one opportunity and who have had their request rejected. The Chair hopes he can recognize all of them, but under the circumstances the Chair feels that recognition should be given to those who have not had this opportunity.

The Chair will recognize the lady from Arizona.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KVALE. Will the Speaker tell the House that after recognition has been given those who have not had an opportunity, recognition will then be given those who have had an opportunity where the objection has been withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be delighted to accord that opportunity if circumstances permit, but, of course, the Chair does not know how much time will be consumed. There are some rules which must be adopted if we are to get away tomorrow. Of course, any conference report would have preference over any unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILCOX. I understood the Speaker to say that he would not recognize Members to call up private bills. Does that also extend to omnibus bills, including private bills, and that no recognition will be given at this time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is asking about the omnibus private claims bills?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Two of them have gone to the Senate.

The Chair did not mean to say that any Member having a private claim bill would not be recognized. What the Chair was trying to convey to the House was that the Chair felt that Members having public bills were entitled to preference. If we reach the private bills and if we have time the Chair has no desire to cut any Member off from the opportunity of having them considered.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF ACT

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1567), an act to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the "War Minerals Relief Act."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill explained to the House.

Mrs. GREENWAY. This bill has never been considered before in this Congress. It has passed the Senate, has been approved and reported by the House Committee. It involves no appropriation at this time.

Mr. TABER. It is my impression it involves an appropriation of $75,000.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Will the gentleman let me explain the bill?

Mr. TABER. May I ask the gentlewoman a question or two? This bill involves about 15 or 20 war-minerals claims.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield until I explain the bill.

Mr. TABER. And it also involves a future appropriation out of the Treasury of $75,000.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Will the gentleman bear with me for a minute while I explain that? I think the gentleman is considering a different bill, called the "Vinson war-minerals bill", H. R. 2077.

Mr. Speaker, the pending bill has to do with 93 claimants who did not file their claims with the Secretary of the Interior within the 1-year limitation. Out of 1,269 claimants over 1,000 received payment. Ninety-three missed the opportunity for various reasons. The money was appropriated 12 years ago. Eleven million dollars was used and that remaining reverted to the Treasury. Those who for good reason did not file their claims are justly due the consideration this bill allows. I hope the gentleman will not object unless he is 100 percent sure we are talking about the same bill.

Mr. TABER. I know I am talking about the same bill the gentlewoman is talking about. There are 93 of these people who did not present their claims. As I understand it, it will cost the Government $75,000. While the money was once appropriated it has been recovered along with other items into the Treasury, and it would require an appropriation out of the Treasury and this expenditure if this bill is passed. This is my understanding of the situation.

Mrs. GREENWAY. May I ask the gentleman if he is perfectly sure, for the members of the committee do not agree with him, and I have the report in my hand.

Mr. TABER. Yes. This is the bill of August 17, this is the one.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. GREENWAY. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not this bill have something to do with the war-minerals bill that we had up a short time ago?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Not at all; that was Mr. VINSON's bill, H. R. 2077.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mrs. GREENWAY. This bill has never been up before in this Congress. It merely enables 93 people who have been out of pocket and who for bona fide reasons have not been able to present their claims within the 1-year limitation to the Secretary of the Interior for consideration.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentlewoman will yield further, one of these claimants, one of the men interested, came to see me and I asked him a good many questions about this and he told me that it was in the same group, the same category. Now, I shall state my objections, and I am going to be forced to object to consideration of the bill at this time, because this will open the door, this one big claim down in Georgia, or somewhere.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I see two of the principal proponents of the bill who were proponents of the other bill, on their feet, jumping to the assistance of the gentlewoman from Arizona. They must have some interest in it.

Mr. MILLER. I voted against that bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In order, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that there may be proper consideration, I am going to object.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE NEUTRALITY BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 1887), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 365

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order for the Speaker to entertain a motion to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 173 as amended, a joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries, the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states, for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war, and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war.

TO ABOLISH CERTAIN OATHS REQUIRED OF CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL-REVENUE EMPLOYEES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 1888), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 364

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9114, a bill "to abolish the oath required of customs and internal revenue employees prior to the receipt of compensation, and for other purposes." That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

INVESTIGATION OF SMUGGLING OF ALIENS

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 1889), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members of the standing committee of the House on Immigration and Naturalization, for the purpose of making an investigation and study of (1) the methods used in, extent of, and number of organizations or individuals engaged in the smuggling of aliens into the continental United States in violation of law; (2) the sources of funds to initiate this smuggling activity and the final distribution of the financial proceeds therefrom; (3) the amount of money on deposit in banks and other places of deposit in the name of individuals or organizations engaged in smuggling aliens unlawfully into the United States; (4) the laws, rules, and regulations which are in effect with which our Government men are combating this unlawful smuggling and the adequacy of personnel employed to enforce the laws and regulations; (5) the need for any remedial legislation to more effectively stop the illegal activity of alien smuggling across our land and water boundaries; (6) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation; and (7) the work of the land-border patrol, its efficiency, and need for increased men and money.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, documents, and vouchers, by subpena or otherwise, to take such records and testimony, as it deems necessary.

The subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the request of the chairman of the committee, and shall be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives or any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation and study heretofore authorized, or who fails to produce such books, papers, documents, and vouchers as required by subpenas, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The said committee shall report, by legislative proposals or otherwise, to the House of Representatives before sine die adjournment of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what is going to be called up now?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am going to try to pass some rules under unanimous consent.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we ought to know about them before we grant unanimous consent.

INVESTIGATION WITH RESPECT TO AGRICULTURAL INCOME

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 9, authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STAY OF DEPORTATION IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 350, requesting that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation in the cases of aliens of good character in which deportation would result in unusual hardship until Congress had had an adequate time to consider proposed legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have this matter explained to the House?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, there are about 2,600 cases involved, 75 percent of which are called "hardship cases." That is, there is no criminal element involved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RETIREMENT OF TEACHING STAFFS AT UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2845) to provide for the retirement and retirement annuities of civilian members of the teaching staffs at the United States

Naval Academy and the Postgraduate School, United States Naval Academy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have this bill explained?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a departmental measure recommended to Congress by the Navy Department. It has passed the Senate and has been unanimously reported to the House by the Naval Affairs Committee. The object and purpose of this bill is to work out a system of retirement for the civilian professors at the Naval Academy. It will cost in its first year of operation $1,200, then it will cost $15,000 per annum until 1946, after which time there is no cost whatsoever.

The purpose of the bill is to give to the civilian professors at the Naval Academy an annuity along the same line that other colleges and universities have. That is the whole object and purpose of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Do these men make any contribution?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. They do. They make a contribution of a certain percentage of their pay.

Mr. SNELL. How much?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am frank to say to the gentleman I will have to look up the bill. Ten percent of their monthly basic pay must be contributed to this fund.

Mr. SNELL. That is fair enough.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Permit me to invite the gentleman's attention to section 2, which reads in part as follows:

> Toward the purchase of said deferred annuity, each member of such teaching staff shall be required to register a monthly allotment through the Navy Allotment Office, Navy Department, Washington, D. C., equivalent in amount to 10 percent of his monthly basic salary.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Does it not also provide that one-half of this 10 percent shall be credited to the credit of the particular teacher?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DITTER. So that he only contributes 5 percent as a matter of fact?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DITTER. In other words, a credit is established for his possible retirement of one-half of the contribution which he makes?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right. I may say to the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Naval Affairs Committee made a most thorough investigation of this matter. We thought it was right and proper to recommend this measure. The ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], attended the hearings, with the rest of the members of the minority and majority, and we reached the conclusion that this was fair and an act of justice to these deserving instructors of the Naval Academy who devote their entire lives practically to the education of the youths who go to the academy.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many years must one of these civilian professors serve and contribute before he is eligible upon retirement to receive this annuity?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The retiring age of all civilian members of the staff shall be 65 years of age. I am sorry I have not the definite information.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if we adopt this principle and call upon the working class to maintain it, we will eventually reach the place where one class will be maintaining the other class. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I trust the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have objected.

AUTHORIZATION OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL TO CERTIFY FOR PAYMENT CERTAIN CLAIMS

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 72, authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to certify for payment certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CERTAIN TRIBAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4324) to carry out certain obligations under certain tribal agreements, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after "taxation", insert "or which by the terms of any act of Congress was continued under the supervision of the United States during the minority of any such allottee."

Page 1, line 9, strike out "contrary to the law."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "illegal or unauthorized."

Page 1, line 12, strike out "allotted lands", and insert "such tax-exempt lands during the period of such exemption or from any allotment during the minority of the allottee, or any such person who has been erroneously or illegally taxed by reason of not having claimed or received the benefit of any deduction or exemption permitted by law."

Page 2, line 5, strike out "1 year" and insert "2 years."

Page 2, line 12, after "wards", insert "or to exact for its own use and benefit an income or inheritance tax from them while they or their property continued under the supervision of the United States, and/or during the minority of such Indian allottee."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

CLAIM OF MENOMINEE TRIBE OF INDIANS

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3210) to refer the claim of the Menominee Tribe of Indians to the Court of Claims with the absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is another one of those bills that we ought to have explained.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, this is a jurisdictional bill for the Menominee Tribe of Indians, and there is a provision in the bill which I believe will meet the objections raised with reference to these gratuities. I know the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has seen this bill, and I understand he is agreeable to its consideration. I believe Mr. Wilkinson explained the provision in the bill with respect to gratuities, providing that there shall be a set-off with respect to such gratuities.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much is entailed in the way of expense to the Government?

Mr. BOILEAU. It is a jurisdictional bill, and we do not know how much it will be. Most of these claims arise out of the act of 1908, which provided for the operation of a sawmill on the Menominee Indian Reservation. These are claims against the Government, and the bill is recommended by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. DITTER. Does the bill provide that a set-off shall be established against any of these claims of the Indians?

Mr. BOILEAU. Any gratuities that have been given by the Government since 1908 are to be considered as off-sets.

Mr. SNELL. How much money is involved in this claim?

Mr. BOILEAU. It is impossible to state.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman knows something about the amount of the claim involved.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am not in position to say how much, because of the fact the Government has already appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of making a survey. As a matter of fact, they gave $20,000 to this firm of attorneys, $12,000 of which they were at liberty to use as their own fee and $8,000 for expenses; but the attorneys have waived their claim for any fees and permitted the use of the $20,000 to make this survey.

Mr. SNELL. What is the report of the Government on it?

Mr. BOILEAU. The Department of the Interior recommends the enactment of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, adjudicate, and render final judgment on all legal or equitable claims of whatsoever nature which the Menominee Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, arising under or growing out of any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or out of any maladministration or wrongful handling of any of the funds, land, timber, or other property or business enterprises belonging to said tribe or held in trust for it by the United States, or otherwise; including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, (1) a claim for damages for swamp lands which the United States allegedly purported to convey to the Menominee Tribe of Indians by a treaty ratified May 12, 1854 (10 Stat. L. 1064), but which the United States allegedly did not convey because of already having conveyed the same to the State of Wisconsin (9 Stat. L. 519); (2) claims for damages resulting from the improper or unlawful expenditures of tribal trust funds, including trust funds created by the act of April 1, 1880, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment" (21 Stat. L. 70), and the act of March 22, 1882, entitled "An act authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin" (22 Stat. L. 30), and the act of June 12, 1890, entitled "An act to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menominee Tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin" (26 Stat. L. 146), and the act of March 28, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of timber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin" (35 Stat. L. 51), and the act of February 12, 1929, entitled "An act to authorize the payment of interest on certain funds held in trust by the United States and Indian tribes" (45 Stat. L. 1164); (3) claims for damages allegedly caused by the United States cutting timber on the Menominee Reservation contrary to the terms and provisions of the aforesaid act of March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 51); (4) claims for damages allegedly caused by maladministration on the part of the United States as respects its management of the timber and lumber industries of the Menominee Indian Tribe, in particular, its management of the Menominee Indian mills.

SEC. 2. The Menominee Tribe of Indians is hereby empowered to bring such suit, as party plaintiff, against the United States, as party defendant, by filing its petition in the Court of Claims and serving a copy thereof on the Attorney General of the United States. Such petition shall set forth the facts on which the claim for recovery is based and shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Menominee Tribe of Indians in accordance with existing law to prosecute such claims which may be made upon information and belief and no other verification shall be necessary. Suit shall be instituted within 2 years from the date of this act by the filing of a petition in the Court of Claims in behalf of the Menominee Tribe of Indians.

SEC. 3. At the trial of said suit the court shall apply as respects the United States the same principles of law as would be applied to an ordinary fiduciary and shall settle and determine the rights thereon both legal and equitable of said Menominee Tribe against the United States notwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitations. No payment or payments which have been made by the United States upon any claim or claims therein asserted or for the account of said Menominee Tribe of Indians nor any gratuities paid to or expended for said tribe or members thereof shall apply as an estoppel against said suit but may be pleaded as offsets. No gratuities, however, paid to or expended for said tribe or members thereof prior to the act of Congress of March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 51), or paid pursuant to any emergency relief legislation enacted subsequent to January 1, 1933, or out of any appropriations authorized by the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 984), shall be pleaded by the United States as offsets.

SEC. 4. At the trial of such action so instituted in the Court of Claims, any letter, paper, document, map, or record in the possession of any officer or department of the United States (or a certified copy thereof) may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government of the United States shall give full and free access to the attorneys for said tribe of Indians to such letters, papers, documents, or records as may be useful to said attorney or attorneys in the preparation for trial or trial of such action and shall afford facilities for the examination of the same and the making of copies thereof.

SEC. 5. Either party shall have the absolute right of appeal (not by writ of certiorari) from any final judgment entered by the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States is hereby invested with jurisdiction of such appeals.

SEC. 6. (a) If it shall be determined by the court that the United States, in violation of the terms and provisions of the treaty ratified May 12, 1854 (10 Stat. L. 1064), unlawfully failed to convey certain swamp lands to the Menominee Tribe of Indians the court shall render judgment in favor of the Menominee Tribe of Indians for a sum equal to (1) the value of the timber removed therefrom since May 12, 1854, with interest at 4 percent per annum from the time of such removal, and (2) the present acquisition costs of such lands to the Menominee Tribe of Indians, which shall be determined by the court, with a proviso that the United States may in lieu of paying the present acquisition costs of such lands acquire and hold said lands in trust for the sole benefit and use of the Menominee Tribe of Indians.

(b) If it shall be determined by the court that the United States has improperly or unlawfully expended or misappropriated tribal funds or properties of said tribe of Indians the court shall render judgment against the United States for an amount equal to the value of all such funds and property with interest thereon at the same rate per annum as provided by the act of Congress authorizing the creation of the fund or property improperly or unlawfully expended or misappropriated from the date of the unlawful expenditures or misappropriations.

(c) If it shall be determined by the court that the United States has violated the terms and provisions of the act of Congress of March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 51), by cutting other than dead and down timber or such fully matured and ripened timber as the Forestry Service shall have properly designated, or by cutting such timber so as to prevent forest perpetuation, the court shall award as damages to the Menominee Tribe of Indians either (1) the difference between the net income that has been and will be received from the liquidation of the timber unlawfully cut and the net income which would have been and would be received from an acreage which would have produced, under selective cutting, if then cut, the same volume of timber as that unlawfully cut, from the time of the commencement of the unlawful cutting up to the time when the timber unlawfully cut shall have been replaced by replanting and the sustained yield from the said replanted timber shall be equal, acre for acre, to the sustained yield from the timber had it been selectively cut so as to perpetuate the forest, as required by law, with interest thereon at the rate of 4 percent per annum for the same period, said period, wherever specified herein, to be deemed to be 60 years, unless otherwise determined at the trial, plus the cost of replacement of the timber on the same areas, including the necessary protection, until the replanted timber shall have attained the said sustained yield; or (2) the cost of replacement of timber on the respective areas thus unlawfully cut, including the necessary protection until the replanted timber shall have attained the aforesaid sustained yield plus interest at 4 percent per annum for the same period of time on an amount equal to the reasonable value as of the date of the unlawful cutting of the timber on the areas thus cut, whichever is the greater.

(d) If it shall be determined by the court that there has been maladministration on the part of the United States as respects its management of the timber or lumber industry of the Menominee Indian Tribe, including, but without limitation, its disposal of timber and lumber products and its management of the Menominee Indian Mills, the court shall award to the Menominee Tribe of Indians as damages either (1) an amount equal to the net losses incurred during the year or years in which maladministration is found, with interest thereon at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the respective dates of said losses, or, (2) interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the capital investment of the Menominee Tribe of Indians in their standing timber, lumber, plant, buildings, equipment, and all other assets used in, or about, or in any way connected, with the Menominee Indian Mills or the timber and lumber industry of the Menominee Indian Tribe for each year in which maladministration is found, whichever is the greater. "Net losses" shall be determined by using customary and accepted principles of accounting. "Capital investment" in standing timber and lumber shall be determined by using the unit price for each species of lumber and timber as used by the United States in its accounting records at the Menominee Indian Mills at the beginning and end of each year in which maladministration is found and dividing the sum thereof by two. "Capital investment" in plant, buildings, equipment, and all other assets shall be determined by using cost less depreciation at the beginning and end of each year in which maladministration is found and dividing the aggregate thereof by two. In determining "Cost less depreciation", the general ledger accounts maintained at the Menominee Indian Mills shall be accepted subject to such adjustments as may be found proper upon investigations using customary and accepted principles of accounting.

SEC. 7. Upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action, whether by judgment, compromise, or otherwise, the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said Menominee Tribe of Indians under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law: Provided, That in the event the claim for damages for swamp lands shall be compromised and settled by the Menominee Tribe of Indians and the United States without the assistance of the attorney or attorneys employed hereunder pursuant to a special resolution adopted by the Menominee Advisory Council authorizing the rendering of such assistance, no fees shall be paid or decreed with respect thereto: Provided further, That in the event the claim for damages for swamp lands shall be compromised and settled by the Menominee Tribe of Indians and the United States, prior or subsequent to the institution of suit hereunder but prior to the trial thereof, with the assistance of the attorney or attorneys employed hereunder pursuant to a special resolution adopted by the Menominee Advisory Council authorizing such attorney or attorneys to render such assistance, the Secretary of the Interior shall, for such assistance, award to said attorney or attorneys such fees, with respect thereto, as based upon a quantum meruit he shall deem reasonable. In no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims and the Secretary of the Interior be in excess of the amount stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suit or action or received by compromise and not otherwise. All actual and necessary expenses incurred by the attorney or attorneys so employed, including court costs, bills for printing required by law, or court rules, the cruising and examination of lands and timber, the auditing and tabulation of accounts, travel, and subsistence of said attorney or attorneys and his or their employees while engaged solely in the preparation or prosecution of said suit or suits, securing and taking evidence deemed material therein, the compensation of stenographers, and such clerical assistance as shall be reasonably employed solely upon work in connection therewith, fees or commissions of notaries public or commissioners, and any other expense reasonably necessary for the preparation for trial or prosecution of any such suit or suits shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, when approved by him, from time to time, as the same shall accrue out of the funds standing to the credit of said Menominee Tribe of Indians in the Treasury of the United States upon verified accounts submitted in such form as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior, and without regard to the outcome or success of said suit or action against the United States. The net amount of any judgment recovered shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per capita payments to said Indians.

SEC. 8. A copy of the petition in any suit instituted under this act shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 8, line 5, strike out the words "per annum" and insert "for the particular year or years in which maladministration is found."

Page 8, line 10, after the word "tribe", strike out the words "for each year in which maladministration is found."

Page 5, line 3, after the word "or", strike out the word "trial" and insert the word "trials."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 8165) were laid on the table.

PROMOTION OF TRAVEL TO AND WITHIN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 33) to encourage travel to and within the United States by citizens of foreign countries, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether this bill has any connection or any reference to reducing the pay of the enlisted men of the Army?

Mr. LEA of California. Nothing whatever.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Then I should like to tell the Membership that S. 1301 does have a provision to decrease the pay of enlisted men, and I hope the Members will object to S. 1301, if unanimous consent for its consideration is requested.

I withdraw my reservation of objection to this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from California if this is the measure establishing a travel bureau?

Mr. LEA of California. Not a bureau. It permits the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to encourage travel to and within the United States. In a small way, it confers upon that Bureau the right to promote travel as well as commerce within and to the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, while this project or proposal may have its attractive side, I see in it the beginning of a new bureau in this Government, and I object.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICS OF TOBACCO

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2215) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture", approved January 14, 1929, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments to the House amendments, as follows:

On page 2, line 16, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let the gentleman explain this bill.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think, was here day before yesterday when I explained this bill in considerable detail, and I do not like to take too much of the time of the House now.

Mr. RICH. The Department of Agriculture has the power now to get all this data?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes; but this bill is designed to increase that power to a small extent and make it beneficial to the tobacco growers of this country.

No objection was made to the bill at the hearings. It is simply a small change in verbiage in one place to expedite the administration of the law by changing "shall" to "may."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BUREAU OF MARINE INSPECTION AND NAVIGATION

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat-inspection laws, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. BLAND. The bill first provides for a change in the name of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection to Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. It provides for traveling inspectors to unify the activities of the local inspectors, to take more control over the examination of officers, to make inspections aboard vessels when and as required, to act as part of a trial board in the event of the trial of officers, and to go on vessels, report conditions in the crew, to drill, and generally to see that the laws are properly observed regarding the safety of ships.

It reduces the number of supervisors of the inspecting district. There are now 11 supervising inspectors, who get $4,400 a year; and this bill reduces them to 7, who will get $6,000 a year.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. What extra duties are placed upon them to justify the increase in salary?

Mr. BLAND. Because they will have the duty of coordinating the work of the local inspectors. There is no increase of salary, because we reduce the number of districts from 11 to 7. These 11 get now $4,400 a year, and the 7 will get $6,000 a year.

Mr. SABATH. There is an increase of salary from $4,400 to $6,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. What extra duties are there that justify the increase in salary?

Mr. BLAND. The duties will not be so much increased, but we will secure more efficient men, better coordination, and more effective work to prevent disasters that have recently occurred.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman tell us what these duties are?

Mr. BLAND. The supervisors of inspectors travel around to these districts and check up on each district. This bill breaks them up into traveling inspectors who will go around and coordinate the activities and bring the local inspectors into line. There will be an inspection service which will inspect more efficiently than is now done. We will have more capable and efficient men than we can hire for $4,400. One of our men is Captain Fried, whose reputation and record is well known in this House. He is serving at $4,400 a year, and we wish to get men of that type as supervising inspectors.

Then there are other features of the bill. There are several traveling inspectors who not only go around to the various other inspection districts and see that the laws are enforced, but they will also travel on the ships and see that the regulations of the Department for safety of life are observed. We provide also for a technical staff.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will this correct the evil such as we have heard so much about in the recent disasters, such as the Mohawk and other boats going down?

Mr. BLAND. We hope so. We provide for a technical staff in the Government itself, such as a building inspector in a town, and all plans must be submitted to the Government and must be approved by the Government.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does this bill meet with the approval of Ira Campbell and his bunch?

Mr. BLAND. This has nothing to do with Ira Campbell. He appeared at the committee, and I think it meets with the approval of all of them.

Mr. WHITE. How does this proposed increase compare with the salary received by the captains of United States Army transports?

Mr. BLAND. That I cannot say; but these are not captains. These are performing inspection duties.

Mr. WHITE. Would not the captains of Army transports be competent to do that work?

Mr. BLAND. No; these men must know the inspection laws of the country.

Mr. CULKIN. The service requires highly technical and highly trained men?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely.

Mr. CULKIN. And without them the service is inefficient?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. It does make for greater safety at sea?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it true that all of these men are practical men and there is not a single "brain truster" in the lot?

Mr. BLAND. Not so far as I know.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. I know of an instance where we tried to replace a man who was paralyzed, and unable to function, and we could not get an efficient man to take his place at the port of Detroit, simply because there was no inducement. Ship captains, qualified men in the marine service, were not interested. Therefore, ships on the Lakes were going without proper inspection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is this one of the bills for which I reported a rule?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection in the Department of Commerce shall hereafter be known as the "Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation."

SEC. 2. That section 4404 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4404. There shall be seven supervising inspectors, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce without regard to the civil-service rules and regulations. In the appointment of the supervising inspectors provided for by this section the Secretary of Commerce shall give due consideration to the reappointment of such of the present supervising inspectors as by their record of efficiency and experience have demonstrated their fitness for their positions. All vacancies occurring thereafter in the Board of Supervising Inspectors shall be filled by selection from the principal traveling inspectors provided for by section 3 of this act. Each supervising inspector shall be entitled to a salary of not to exceed $6,000 per annum and his necessary traveling expenses while traveling on official business assigned him by competent authority, together with his actual and reasonable expenses for transportation of instruments, which shall be certified and sworn to under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of Commerce.

"In the case of the absence of any such supervising inspector from his official station, the Secretary of Commerce may designate some officer of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation to perform the duties of such officer during his absence."

SEC. 3. That there shall be in the field service of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation in the Department of Commerce not to exceed 10 principal traveling inspectors to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, the compensation of such principal traveling inspectors to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce at not to exceed $5,000 per annum. Each of said principal traveling inspectors shall be entitled to his necessary traveling expenses while traveling on official business. Such principal traveling inspectors shall be selected for their knowledge, skill, and practical experience in steam and motor power for navigation and shall be competent judges of the character and qualities of such vessels and of all parts of the machinery employed in such navigation. They also shall have full knowledge of the duties imposed by law on licensed officers and crews of vessels.

SEC. 4. That section 4450 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read:

"SEC. 4450. (a) For the purpose of investigating marine casualties involving loss of life and in connection therewith, any acts of incompetency or misconduct or any act in violation of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer while acting under authority of his license, the Secretary of Commerce shall appoint for each casualty a marine casualty investigation board consisting of a chairman designated by the Secretary of Commerce from the personnel of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, a member of the United States Coast Guard Service, and a representative from the Department of Justice. At the request of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General shall assign to the Secretary of Commerce subordinates as herein provided to serve on any such marine casualty investigation board. Should the exigencies of the case require, the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to appoint additional members to any such board.

"(b) For the purpose of investigating marine casualties not involving loss of life and all cases of acts of incompetency or misconduct or any act in violation of any of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer or holder of a certificate of service while acting under the authority of his license or certificate of service, whether or not any of such acts are committed in connection with any marine casualty, the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is hereby authorized and directed to appoint marine boards, each consisting of two principal traveling inspectors and a supervising inspector of the said Bureau.

"(c) The said boards provided for in subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall, upon the approval of the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, have authority to engage such other assistants, clerical or technical, as may be deemed necessary by the said Director. The members of said boards shall not receive any compensation in addition to that for their regular appointment, but shall be entitled to their necessary traveling expenses while traveling on official business.

"(d) Immediately after the occurrence of a marine casualty, the appropriate board shall conduct an investigation into any acts of incompetency or misconduct or any acts in violation of any of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer acting under authority of his license, or by any chief or assistant steward, purser, or radio operator acting under authority of a certificate of service issued to him by the board of local inspectors of steam vessels, or by any seaman; and into all circumstances surrounding such marine casualty, and shall determine, so far as possible, the cause of such casualty, the persons responsible therefor, and whether or not United States Government employees charged with the inspection of the vessel or vessels involved and with the examination and licensing of the officers thereof have properly performed their duties in connection with such inspection, examination, and licensing.

"(e) In any investigation directed by this section a marine casualty investigation board or a marine board shall have power to summon before it witnesses and to require the production of books, papers, documents, and any other evidence. Attendance of witnesses or the production of books, papers, documents, or any other evidence shall be compelled by a similar process as in the United States District Court. The chairman of each of said boards shall administer all necessary oaths to any witnesses summoned before said boards.

"(f) The disbursing clerk, Department of Commerce, shall pay, on properly certified vouchers, such fees to any witness summoned under subsection (e) of this section, for his actual travel and attendance, as shall be officially certified to by the chairman of the board conducting the investigation, not exceeding the rate allowed for fees and to witnesses for travel and attendance in any District Court of the United States.

"(g) In any investigation of acts of incompetency or misconduct or of any act in violation of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer or any holder of a certificate of service, the person whose conduct is under investigation shall be given reasonable notice of the time, place, and subject of such investigation and an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. The whole record of the testimony received by the board conducting such investigation and the findings and recommendations of such board shall be forwarded to the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, and if that officer shall find that such licensed officer or holder of certificate of service is incompetent or has been guilty of misbehavior, negligence, or unskillfulness, or has endangered life, or has willfully violated any of the provisions of this title or any of the regulations issued thereunder, he shall, in a written order reciting said findings, suspend or revoke the license or certificate of service of such officer or holder of such certificate. The person whose license or certificate of service is revoked may within 30 days appeal from the order of the said Director to the Secretary of Commerce. On such appeal the appellant shall be allowed to be represented by counsel. The Secretary of Commerce may alter or modify any finding of the board which conducted the investigation or of the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, but the decision of the Secretary of Commerce shall be based solely on the testimony received by the said board and shall recite the findings of fact on which it is based.

"(h) If the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation shall find evidence of criminal liability on the part of any licensed officer or holder of a certificate of service, he shall submit such findings to the Secretary of Commerce who, if he be satisfied that such criminal liability exists, shall refer all of the evidence and the findings in such investigation to the Attorney General for investigation by and prosecution through the Federal district attorney of the district having jurisdiction, under the provisions of the Criminal Code. Nothing in this section shall be construed as prohibiting the Federal district attorney from conducting a criminal investigation or prosecution in connection with a shipping casualty.

"(i) Any attempt to coerce any witnesses, or to induce them to testify falsely in connection with a shipping casualty, or to induce them to leave the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be punishable by a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for 1 year, or both such fine and imprisonment. Any person making such attempts shall be prosecuted by the Federal district attorney of the district having jurisdiction.

"(j) The Secretary of Commerce shall make such regulations as may be necessary to secure the proper administration of this section."

(k) This section shall take effect 90 days from its enactment.

SEC. 5. (a) That hereafter there shall be in the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation a technical staff, consisting of the Director and technical members who shall be selected for their knowledge, skill, and practical experience in designing and supervising the construction and operation of vessels propelled by machinery, and they shall be competent judges of the character, strength, stability, and safety qualities of such vessels and their equipment. Such technical members shall be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, without reference to the civil-service laws and regulations. The Director of the said Bureau with the advice and assistance of the technical staff so appointed shall pass upon all contract plans and specifications for passenger vessels of the United States of 100 gross tons and over, propelled by machinery, as provided for by subsection (b) of this section, including the installation of tested and effective sprinkler systems, and upon arrangement plans for all material alterations to existing vessels. Such approval shall be given promptly and with due regard to the orderly progress of the work but only when the Director is satisfied, after a full and complete examination of the plans and specifications, that the vessel, when built or altered, as the case may be, can be navigated with safety to those on board. In case the said Director shall disapprove such plans and specifications, the person or persons submitting the same shall be apprised thereof the reasons for such disapproval and advised of the amendments necessary to secure such approval. The Director shall, at as early a date as practicable, and from time to time thereafter as he shall deem advisable, formulate and publish regulations and instructions for the guidance of builders of prospective vessels showing the safety characteristics of vessels which will meet the approval of the Director: Provided, however, That such regulations and instructions shall in all cases be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

(b) That no passenger vessel of the United States of 100 gross tons and over, propelled by machinery, the construction or material alteration of which shall be begun subsequent to the passage of this act, shall be granted a certificate of inspection by a board of local inspectors of the Bureau unless the said general contract plans and specifications therefor shall have been submitted at least in triplicate to and approved by the aforesaid Director before the construction of such vessel or alteration thereof shall have been commenced; nor shall any such vessel, the said plans or specifications for which have been materially altered subsequent to such approval be granted a certificate, as aforesaid, unless such altered plans and specifications shall have been submitted at least in triplicate to and approved by the said Director, prior to such change in construction having been made. No such certificate shall be granted to any such vessel which has not been constructed and equipped in accordance with said plans and specifications approved as aforesaid: Provided, That approved plans and certificates of the American Bureau of Shipping classed vessels may be accepted by the Director as evidence of the structural efficiency of the hull and the reliability of the machinery of such vessels. In the case of passenger ships building to class with the American Bureau of Shipping, certificates of the said American Bureau of Shipping certifying to the adequacy of the subdivision arrangements, on the basis of any regulations issued by the Department of Commerce, may be accepted by the Director, subject, however, to the submission to the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation and the approval of the Director of all flooding calculations. The American Bureau of Shipping shall continue to function in connection with the Government, its bureaus, departments, boards, and commissions, as heretofore provided under the Merchant Marine Act, June 5, 1920 (ch. 250, sec. 25; 41 Stat. 998; 46 U. S. C. Annotated, sec. 881), and as provided in the act of March 2, 1929, entitled "An act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes", or any similar act hereinafter enacted.

(c) Upon the approval by the said Director of the original or modified plans and specifications for any such vessel or for any subsequent alteration of such vessel, an endorsement to that effect, signed by the Director, shall be placed upon such plans and specifications, and one copy thereof shall be delivered to the person or persons submitting the same. Whenever any inspector shall ascertain to his satisfaction that any such vessel does not conform in all material respects to said plans and specifications approved as aforesaid, he shall immediately report his conclusions to the aforesaid Director, setting forth the reasons for his belief; and if, after a preliminary examination of the facts of the case, the said Director shall be of the opinion that reasonable ground exists for believing the conclusions of such reporting officer to be correct, he shall notify the person or persons who submitted the said plans and specifications and the board of local inspectors of the Bureau who shall not issue the vessel's certificate of inspection until the discrepancy has been corrected to the satisfaction of the said Director. The final decision of the Director shall be reached with as little delay as the proper consideration of the question will permit. The owner of any vessel coming within the provisions of this act shall notify the Director of any material alterations proposed to be made on such vessel, and should any such alteration be made on such vessel before the plans and specifications for such alteration have received the approval of the said Director the owners shall, in addition to any suspension of the certificate of inspection which the Director may determine to be necessary, incur a penalty of $500 for which the vessel shall be liable and which may be mitigated or remitted by the Secretary of Commerce on such condition as he may deem proper.

(d) That the words "plans and specifications" wherever used in this act shall be held to include prints of all general contract plans and copies of the specifications and other matters of a similar nature, as necessary to the purposes of this act for any vessel to which this act applies. The said plans and specifications of all passenger ships of 100 gross tons and over shall specify for fire-retardant material in their construction so far as reasonable and practicable.

(e) That any person or persons who shall alter, deface, obliterate, remove, or destroy any plans or specifications approved as provided in this act, with intent to deceive or delay any officer of the United States in the discharge of his duties under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or by imprisonment for not to exceed 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

(f) This section shall not take effect as to vessels under 500 gross tons until 3 months, nor as to vessels of 500 gross tons and over until 30 days, after its enactment.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Commerce shall fix a reasonable rate of extra compensation for overtime services of local inspectors of steam vessels and their assistants, United States shipping commissioners and their deputies and assistants, who may be required to remain on duty between the hours of 5 o'clock p. m. and 8 o'clock a. m. or on Sundays or holidays to perform services in connection with the inspection of vessels or their equipment, supplying or signing on or discharging crews of vessels on the basis of one-half day's additional pay for each 2 hours or fraction thereof at least 1 hour that the overtime extends beyond 5 o'clock p. m. (but not to exceed 2½ days' pay for the full period from 5 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock a. m.) and 2 additional days' pay for Sunday or holiday duty. The said extra compensation shall be paid by the master, owner, or agent of such vessel to the local inspectors of steam vessels or the United States shipping commissioners, as the case may be, who shall pay the same to the several employees entitled thereto according to the rates fixed therefor by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That such extra compensation shall be paid if such officers or employees have been ordered to report for duty and have so reported, whether the actual inspection of the vessel or her equipment, or the supplying, or signing on, or discharging crews takes place or not: Provided further, That in those ports where customary working hours are other than those hereinabove mentioned, the local inspectors of steam vessels or United States shipping commissioners, as the case may be, are vested with authority to regulate the hours of such employees so as to agree with prevailing working hours in said ports, but nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed in any manner to alter the length of a working day for the local inspectors, their assistants, the United States shipping commissioners and their deputies and assistants, or the overtime pay herein fixed.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of Commerce may make such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 8. That all laws or parts of laws insofar as they are in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have a committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 14, section 6, line 17, strike out the word "the" and lines 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and in line 23 the words "by the Secretary of Commerce" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The said extra compensation for overtime services shall be paid by the master, owner, or agent of such vessel to the local United States collector of customs or his representative, who shall deposit said collection into the Treasury of the United States to an appropriately designated receipt account. The amount of the receipts so covered during the fiscal year 1936 is hereby authorized to be appropriated and made available for payment of extra compensation for overtime services to the several employees entitled thereto, according to rates fixed therefor by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That effective July 1, 1936, and thereafter, the amounts of such collections received by the said collector of customs or his representative shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and the payments of such extra compensation to the several employees entitled thereto shall be made from the annual appropriations for salaries and expenses of the Bureau: Provided further, That to the extent that the annual appropriations which are hereby authorized to be made from the general fund of the Treasury are insufficient, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated from the general fund of the Treasury such additional amounts as may be necessary to the extent that the amounts of such receipts are in excess of the amounts appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAMSPECK: Page 11, after line 21, insert a new subsection as follows:

"That section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 464), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following new paragraph:

"'On and after July 1, 1936, every steamer permitted by her certificate of inspection to carry as many as 50 passengers or upward shall be equipped with an automatic sprinkler system, which shall be in addition to any other device or devices for fire protection. Such automatic sprinkler system shall consist of an arrangement of piping connecting one or more adequate supplies of water (which supplies shall be in addition to any other water supply of the vessel) with a distributing device which is so assembled and located as to discharge and diffuse automatically over all portions of the vessel accessible to passengers and/or crew (except cargo holds, machinery spaces, and when of fireproof construction, toilets and bathrooms) a spray of water which will be effective to extinguish fire. Such system shall be kept at all times in good working condition and ready for immediate use. The Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation shall cause to be made at least once in every 90 days such tests and inspections as will insure the proper working of such automatic sprinkler systems. In carrying out the provisions of this paragraph the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe rules and regulations to govern the work of installing automatic sprinkler systems in steam vessels.'"

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, in brief, this amendment provides for the installation of automatic sprinklers in ships carrying 50 or more passengers. The Bureau has had the authority to require this since 1871, but they have not required it. Yesterday I had the privilege of talking to Commander Yeandle, of the Coast Guard, who had charge of the relief work on the Morro Castle, and he told me, as his opinion, that if there had been sprinklers on the Morro Castle there would have been no loss of life. I think the time has come when the Congress ought to require the shipbuilders and the ship operators of this country to give protection to the lives of the passengers who pay for transportation on these ships. [Applause.] We have not passed a single act in this Congress that would give any protection to the passengers who travel on the ships on the high seas. The time has come, I think, when we ought to at least put on those ships a system of protection which has been found so effective on land and which saves from 40 to 70 percent in insurance cost in the various buildings throughout this country.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment, but may I ask what will be the effect of that amendment on ships flying foreign flags?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know that we can apply it to ships flying foreign flags. I am not in a position to answer the gentleman's question, but we can certainly put it on our own, and if we can put it on foreign ships, it ought to be done.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CASTELLOW. This would provide for the safety of human beings, the same as is required in Government warehouses for the safety of property which is stored?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman mentioned something about inspection every 90 days. I did not quite understand that.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I did not say anything about inspection. It requires automatic sprinklers to be put on all ships that carry 50 or more passengers.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The statement was made in the amendment that they should have two sources of water supply. On land I see how that can be accomplished, and I think it is a wise thing; but does the gentleman mean dual pumps on the ships, or what would be the two sources of supply that would be possible to make it function?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It means it should have a separate source of water supply for the sprinkler system, so that it would be there and ready to operate in case of a fire. That is the purpose of the provision.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The amendment is a wonderful amendment and I believe that every ship in the United States should be compelled to do that, and then other countries, in my opinion, would follow suit.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand it, the gentleman stated that the Government has had the power to compel the installation of sprinklers since 1871?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why has not the Government exercised that power?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I talked to Mr. Weaver, who is in charge of the Steamboat Bureau, about it, and he said that the shipbuilders did not have the money to put it in. I do not think that is any excuse when we have had such glaring examples as the Morro Castle and other disasters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was that the only reason he gave?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is the only reason he gave. There is a report filed on this bill. I introduced this bill several months ago. The only objection stated in the report is that some man in the Bureau of Standards objected to the feasibility of it, or to the authority of Congress to require such a thing. I have a letter in my file from Mr. Briggs, of the Bureau of Standards, stating that they never authorized any such statement to be made as representing the viewpoint of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Committee on Merchant Marine given consideration to this amendment?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It has not, but the Senate has passed a bill identical with this, which is now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman realize that this measure, if it becomes effective, will retire from service probably half of the coasting steamers in the United States, half of the inland steamers who happen to carry more than 50 passengers?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not see any reason why it should retire them. They could put in sprinkler systems.

Mr. CULKIN. Those boats are not susceptible of this type of construction. It would practically revolutionize their construction.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman may know more about the construction of ships than I do, and I expect he does, but certainly sprinklers are put in all types of buildings, and I see no reason why they cannot be put in ships.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman does not think that a ship is a building, of course?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course not.

Mr. CULKIN. They are two distinct things, and it is a fact that, while I am for this amendment in spirit, and it is along the proper line, it will, in all probability, retire from operation a great many of the old-time boats. That may be meritorious.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The amendment gives authority to the Bureau to regulate the installation. I am quite sure they can devise proper methods of putting them on all boats.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. In reply to the gentleman from New York, if it would retire those ships if they cannot have sprinkler systems, they ought to be retired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Certainly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. With reference to coastwise vessels, might this not put American ships out of business and permit ones with foreign flags to operate?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not think so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As the gentleman from New York has so well said, I am in thorough sympathy with the principle and the intention to save life at sea; but this bill has not been considered by the committee. The bill has passed the Senate and I have assured all interested that it shall have early consideration, certainly among the first bills to be considered in January. It must be remembered, however, that this bill does not apply only to ships on the ocean; it applies also to every inland steamer; it applies to every small steamer that may be carrying 50 passengers and running only 10 miles or 14 miles. There is no limitation as to the length of the voyage.

We have suffered a great catastrophe, it is true, but I am asking that you not pass legislation under the hysteria of that catastrophe that would put out of business or at least place an enormous burden upon ships that are entirely safe without the sprinkler system.

No member of our committee is able to tell you what the results would be. The report which came from the Secretary of Commerce was to the effect that the Bureau of Standards, which was working on this problem to see what kind of a system could be worked out, have been unable to make their report up to this time. This matter will be considered by the committee early in January.

In the bill there is a direction to the Director of the Steamboat Inspection Service to consider the installation of these sprinklers. I urge that it would be unwise to place this amendment in this bill at this time.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The gentleman says this bill will be the first thing taken up in January. What will happen between now and January? Are we to have another Mohawk, another Morro Castle?

Mr. BLAND. The Mohawk did not burn, if the gentleman please.

Mr. CONNERY. All right; several others did burn.

Mr. BLAND. Not in the United States.

Mr. CONNERY. Out in the ocean off New Jersey, that is where they burned.

This is a question of safety of life on American ships. It is not a question of whether the Steamboat Inspection Service has the right to do this. The Steamboat Inspection Service has had the right to do this since 1871, but they have not done it. It is up to this Congress to make them do what they should have done since 1871, install these sprinklers to protect human life.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Does not the gentleman think it would be somewhat of a discrimination against American bottoms if we adopt this amendment? How could we make it apply to foreign bottoms?

Mr. CONNERY. Let us take one thing at a time; let us save American lives to start with and then take up the question of foreign ships.

Mr. CELLER. Would not the amendment force passengers to sail on foreign vessels because of higher cost of transportation in American vessels?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I do not think it would.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why not give American vessels the advantage of this added protection; then if people prefer to travel on foreign ships, they may do so at their own risk?

Mr. CONNERY. That is correct.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. It is entirely possible, under the law, to order them installed on foreign ships. We have already pending here, and which we expect will be brought up for consideration, a limitation-of-liability bill. Why add this additional burden during the next 4 months, when we very seldom have fires at sea?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, we have had plenty of fires at sea on foreign ships.

Mr. BLAND. I have the record before me.

Mr. CONNERY. And on American ships, too. Then there was the Burgoyne, and there were other disasters.

Mr. BLAND. The Burgoyne was not an American ship.

Mr. CONNERY. I did not say it was an American ship; I said foreign and American ships.

It seems to me Congress should pass this bill. The House should pass the bill and adopt this amendment, for the Senate has shown by passing the Senate bill that they are in absolute accord with the views of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. We should pass this amendment to give this added protection to American lives. We ought to pass the Ramspeck amendment.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am against the amendment and for the legislation. My impression was that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts was a doughboy and not a gob. He displays, however, considerable sea technic.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I live on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean, in Lynn, Mass.; I know a little about ships.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman is a better doughboy than he is sailor, and he had a very distinguished record serving as a doughboy.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, has as its purpose not safety at sea. It could better be entitled "A bill for the relief of the plumbers and steamfitters' union."

The gentleman from Massachusetts smiles. He has a very distinguished record in the service of labor, and I have admired him many times. May I add that I very often follow him on economic questions. His brilliant advocacy of their cause is always timely and proper; but in this case he is speaking out of a wholesome but mistaken loyalty to the cause of labor. This amendment, if put into effect, will simply tie to the docks many hundreds of boats in the United States which are serving the convenience of the public. And may I repeat anew, too, in this connection, that I yield to no man in my devotion to the reasonable and just demands of labor.

Mr. COLDEN and Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana rose.

Mr. CULKIN. I yield first to my friend the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman overlooked one important item, and that is the fact that these sprinklers are patented and are on the market at a very high price.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, this installment is a technical matter. You must have this water brought down by gravity.

There are many different types of construction on various craft, both coastwise and inland. Each boat is a law unto itself, and there is much construction that does not permit the installation of the necessary tanks. I think the matter may wait until January, at which time it will be taken up in an orderly way. To do otherwise would wreck this excellent bill.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. If the gentleman is going to Europe, and he has the choice of going on a boat which has a sprinkler system or one which does not have such system, and he knew he was not going to burn to death before getting over there, or plunging into the sea on the way over, on which boat would he go?

Mr. CULKIN. I do not want to be impertinent, but the question, of course, is as remote as the stars from the question before the House. It tends to create passion on the subject. I have endeavored to present the question fairly. We have a very excellent bill, and the amendment offered cripples it. This amendment should go over until January, at which time it can be considered in an orderly way.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Has the gentleman ever heard of a steamship company voluntarily putting such improvements as this on a ship at any time? They always say they will do it later on.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman's question is another generality which does not go to the heart of the question before the House. We cannot legislate fairly without some knowledge of the facts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY)—ayes 40, noes 55.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McCORMACK: On page 2, line 8, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

On page 2, line 10, after the word "act", strike out the period, insert a comma and the words "or from the United States local inspectors."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIMITATION OF SHIPOWNERS' LIABILITY

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3446) relative to limitation of shipowners' liability, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the House bill?

Mr. SIROVICH. This is a bill that was unanimously passed by the Senate and unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In order to understand the provisions of this bill, let me call to the attention of the Members of the House the historical aspects in connection therewith.

The first statutory enactment of limited-liability law took place in Great Britain in the year 1734, and was only for acts of embezzlement on the part of the master and crew and other acts caused by them. It limited liability for nothing else, just acts of the master and the crew. In those days the enemies of the shipowners were the captain and the crew who took out the vessel and embezzled the cargo. They operated against the interests of their owners. Therefore, the owner of the ship had to be protected against the master and his crew.

In 1786 the limitation of liability was extended to robbery and to losses in which the master and crew had no part. In 1813 the limited liability of shipowners in England was still further extended to include other causes of losses, including cases of collision. The only funds against which those who had lost their life or cargo could sue was the money that was raised from the salvage of the ship, and if the ship was sunk there was no money, plus the money that was received for the transportation of passengers and its cargo. This was known as the "limited-liability act of Great Britain."

In 1851, Hannibal Hamlin, the distinguished Senator from the State of Maine, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, introduced the limited-liability law that was upon the statute books of Great Britain as part of the laws of the United States. His fundamental purpose was to put the American merchant marine on a parity with that of Great Britain.

In 1862, Great Britain, because of the protests of her citizens, who felt this limited-liability law was written for the interests of the merchant marine and not for the traveling public, abolished the entire law. In its place it substituted a bill which made it mandatory upon all British shipping organizations to pay $75 per ton for each of its registered tonnage for the protection of human life and cargo.

This law was approved in Great Britain in 1862. We never changed our law of 1851. Therefore we are in the tragic position of being the worst nation of the world in taking care of its traveling public, our American citizens. Take the Morro Castle as an example. When that ship was sunk, 147 lives were lost and 100 people were permanently injured. The total amount of money for which these 247 people who lost their lives and were injured can sue is the sum of $20,000, while the Ward Line Co., the owners of the Morro Castle, have received the sum of $4,500,000 for its insurance. Behold the Mohawk, which was sunk; 74 lives were lost and 50 to 70 permanently crippled and injured. All these people can sue since the ship has sunk is the money that the company received for the transportation of passengers and cargo, which amounts to $9,000, while the company received $2,500,000 for loss of its ship. Is it fair? Is it just? Is it humane? Is it American? If my bill which is now being considered is passed, the Morro Castle victims, instead of having had only $20,000 against which the victims could sue, would have had at least between $600,000 and $700,000.

Mr. Speaker, in the past, property rights, the property of shipowners, were guarded and protected, but human life took its chance not only with the dangers originating with wind and wave but also with the dangers from incompetent crews and officers and ineffective equipment and inefficient operation of vessels in times of emergency and danger. This limitation-of-liability bill makes our laws the most humane and progressive in all the world, and I appeal to the humanitarian and sympathetic consideration of the Members of the House to pass this bill to bring justice to our deserving American traveling public.

Mr. CULKIN. Are there any changes in it as to requirement?

Mr. SIROVICH. There are no changes in it. There is an omission in the bill that we originally passed, and which the chairman of the committee will take up in January. This bill is a great improvement over the present law, under which we have been operating since 1851.

Mr. CULKIN. This is a bill that was incorporated in the House ship-subsidy bill?

Mr. SIROVICH. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. It relates to safety at sea and limitation of liability?

Mr. SIROVICH. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. There is only one difference. It does not require the compulsory insurance to be deposited with the Department of Commerce in order to protect against liability. This would have been unworkable and impracticable. We provided that the insurance should be given by American companies, and the question arose as to whether the American companies could have given this insurance or not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is this bill similar to one on which we reported a rule?

Mr. BLAND. No.

Mr. CULKIN. I am very strongly in sympathy with the gentleman's bill, and I trust that the House will support it.

Mr. BLAND. The committee met this morning and directed the gentleman to bring it up for consideration.

Mr. SIROVICH. And that request was unanimously made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

LIMITATION OF SHIPOWNERS' LIABILITY

SECTION 1. Revised Statutes 4283, United States Code, title 46, section 183, shall be amended by adding the following proviso at the end thereof: "Provided, That the total liability of the owner or owners of any sea-going sailing, steam, or motor vessel, whether American or foreign, other than tugs, barges, fishing vessels, and their tenders, for the entire loss of life or personal injuries caused without fault or privity of such owner or owners to any person, shall be in an amount not less than an amount equal to $60 for each ton of the tonnage of such vessel or vessels, or the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel and her freight then pending, if the latter be the greater amount. The tonnage of a steam or motor vessel shall be her gross tonnage without deduction on account of engine room, and the tonnage of a sailing vessel shall be her registered tonnage, provided that there shall not be included in such tonnage any space occupied by seamen or apprentices and appropriated to their use. The owner of every sea-going vessel or share therein shall be liable in respect of every loss of life or personal injury arising on distinct occasions to the same extent as if no other loss or injury had arisen."

SEC. 2. In respect of loss of life or bodily injury, the actual privity or knowledge of the master of a sea-going vessel (other than tugs, barges, fishing vessels, and their tenders), or of the superintendent or managing agent of the owner thereof, at or prior to the commencement of each voyage, shall be deemed conclusively the privity or knowledge of the owner of such vessel.

SEC. 3. Chapter 6 of title 48 of the Revised Statutes is amended by inserting after section 4283, as amended, the following new section:

SEC. 4238A. Stipulations limiting time for filing claims and commencing suit: (a) It shall be unlawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any sea-going vessel (other than tugs, barges, fishing vessels, and their tenders) transporting passengers or merchandise or property from or between ports of the United States and foreign ports to provide by rule, contract, regulation, or otherwise a shorter period for giving notice of, or filing claims for loss of life or bodily injury, than 6 months, and for the institution of suits on such claims, than 1 year, such period for institution of suits to be computed from the day when the death or injury occurred.

"(b) Failure to give such notice, where lawfully prescribed in such contract, shall not bar any such claim—

"(1) If the owner or master of the vessel or his agent had knowledge of the injury, damage, or loss and the court determines that the owner has not been prejudiced by the failure to give such notice; nor

"(2) If the court excuses such failure on the ground that for some satisfactory reason such notice could not be given; nor

"(3) Unless objection to such failure is raised by the owner.

"(c) If a person who is entitled to recover on any such claim is mentally incompetent or a minor, or if the action is one for wrongful death, any lawful limitation of time prescribed in such contract shall not be applicable so long as no legal representative has been appointed for such incompetent, minor, or decedent's estate, but shall be applicable from the date of the appointment of such legal representative: Provided, however, That such appointment be made within 3 years after the date of such death or injury."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF 10 VESSELS FOR THE COAST GUARD

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2632) to provide for the construction of 10 vessels for the Coast Guard designed for ice breaking and assistance work and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what this bill is about?

Mr. WARREN. This bill has been passed by the Senate after very lengthy hearings were held by a subcommittee of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. It has been requested by every Representative from New England and a great many from New York, New Jersey, and the Columbia River. This is a mere authorization.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is this the so-called "ice-breaker bill"?

Mr. WARREN. The ice-breaking bill; yes.

Mr. MILLARD. I hope the bill will pass unanimously. I can vouch for its necessity in connection with the Hudson River and Long Island Sound.

Mr. TABER. The Public Works Administration allotted a lot of money to the Coast Guard a couple of years ago with which to build new ships.

Mr. WARREN. But not for ice-breaking purposes.

Mr. McCORMACK. They allotted some money to build ships, but not for ice-breaking purposes. We need this type of ship along the Atlantic coast and on the Pacific coast as well as the Great Lakes. This bill has for its object the protection of the entire country where ice-breaking facilities may be needed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The need for such ships was shown last winter when for days certain harbors were closed and not accessible at all.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How does this bill provide for the Great Lakes?

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no limitation as to where they may be assigned by the Coast Guard.

The original bill applied to Massachusetts Bay and New York, and then I introduced another bill providing for 10 vessels without any regard to where they should be assigned. The Coast Guard can assign them to any place throughout the country where the exigencies require.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Are they going to use them on the northeast coast in the winter and the Great Lakes in the summer?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to enter into any controversy with my friend.

Mr. BACON. As a matter of fact, Admiral Hamlet told me he intended to use some of these boats on the Pacific coast, some in the north Atlantic and some on the Great Lakes.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the intention; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 2632), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to construct and equip 10 Coast Guard cutters to be of design and construction suitable for ice-breaking service and for rendering assistance to marine commerce.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF TWO ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3389) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we should have an explanation of this bill. We had up here an omnibus bill appointing 15 additional judges, and I supposed that they had covered the country as they usually do.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I called up the wrong bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3414) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3002) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to which I shall offer an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand this bill properly I do not intend to object, but I think the request should be that the gentleman move that the House go into Committee of the Whole and consider the bill. I think this is too important a measure to go through with no explanation whatever.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that unanimous consent is required to take up the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from New York that reasonable opportunity be permitted for the explanation of the bill. I think a very brief explanation of the bill will save time.

Mr. SNELL. I think it should be explained fully. This is a very important measure. I believe I am for it, and I am not trying to object to the bill. However, I think as important a measure as this should receive the consideration of the House and that the bill should be carefully and fully explained.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman give us a chance to explain it under a reservation of objection?

Mr. SNELL. That might be all right, but I think it would be much better if we moved to go into Committee of the Whole for its consideration.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, the gentleman knows if unanimous consent is given for the consideration of the bill, the bill is then considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole and is read under the 5-minute rule for amendment. It is an important measure and reasonable and adequate time can be taken under such circumstances to consider the bill.

Mr. SNELL. The way we have been considering them today is to get unanimous consent and then have them go right through.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is because we do not object to them. As the gentleman knows, if the unanimous consent is granted, the bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SNELL. The only thing I am trying to do is to get a reasonable explanation of this bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. I agree with the gentleman; and, if unanimous consent is given to consider the bill, then it is to be read and considered under the 5-minute rule, and if the Members of the House want to do so, they can have reasonable and orderly consideration under such circumstances.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is taken up by unanimous consent, as the gentleman from Virginia has said, it will be considered in the House just as the bill which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] called up a few minutes ago, which was open for amendment. In other words, it will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the gentleman first obtain unanimous consent for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is the question that is pending before the House now. Of course, it cannot be taken up in the House as in Committee of the Whole unless unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by amending the second sentence of subsection (b), so as to read as follows: "The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services a fee of $25 for each case submitted to him, and, when docketed, to be paid out of the Treasury."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I thought we were to have an explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and when unanimous consent was given for the consideration of the bill it carried with it consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole. That is being done, and the Clerk had read the first section.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to state to the Members of the House that this is not a new act. It is simply an amendment to section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act which was passed under the last administration.

At that time we passed four different sections. Section 74 was for the home owner and unincorporated business. Section 75 was for the farmers; section 76 was for those secondarily liable, such as endorsees on notes, and so forth; section 77 for the railroads; and section 77 (b) for corporations. Now, during the last session Congress added one section to section 75, section 75 (s), that part of section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act which was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

All this bill does is to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court, giving the farmer an opportunity to get a breathing spell after he goes into bankruptcy.

Under this law no farmer can take advantage of it unless he is willing to surrender into the hands of the court all his property for distribution.

The maximum time given him to pay the debt is 3 years, but the district judge can cut it down to less than 3 years if he finds that the farmer is able to pay in less than that time. It is an emergency act. It is a conservation act.

Let me suggest that under this bill no mortgagee loses anything. He loses no rights, and he can come into court where debt adjustments are being made. If the property is sold at public auction, the farmer is given 90 days to redeem.

I am sure that it is not necessary to speak of the necessities of this legislation to you who come from the drought-stricken States.

In fact, there is a serious situation out there in the Middle West and in other parts of the United States, and something must be done to relieve it. There is nothing in this bill that the United States District Courts are not doing and have not already done under the Bankruptcy Act, except that this gives the farmer the same advantage that the small business man, corporations, and others that go into bankruptcy have—that is, to have his affairs liquidated in an orderly way. If the farmer can borrow the money within 3 years to pay off what he owes, well and good; but all of his property must go into the court. Under the old act it was said that the farmer might have a lot of stocks and bonds and be wealthy otherwise. Under this bill he has to surrender all of his stocks and bonds into the custody of the court the same as in other bankruptcy cases, although he can retain possession, under the jurisdiction of the court, by paying a reasonable rental.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman has an amendment that he is going to offer to the bill under consideration?

Mr. LEMKE. That amendment will be offered by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and explained by him.

Mr. MILLARD. The conciliation commissioner receives $25 a case?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. What effect will that have on the referee in bankruptcy?

Mr. LEMKE. When the case comes up in counties where there is a referee, he can be appointed as conciliation commissioner. In counties where there is no referee a conciliation commissioner will be appointed.

Mr. MILLARD. And that is the reason for the conciliation commissioner?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. This bill simply does for the farmer who is in danger of foreclosure, who is in fact insolvent, what has already been done by law for the business man and the railroads.

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; for the incorporated business man and the railroads; but this bill does not do nearly so much as sections 77 and 77 (b) do for the other two classes.

Mr. CULKIN. It does not do any more.

Mr. LEMKE. It does not do as much.

Mr. SHORT. And if an experienced farmer cannot operate his farm successfully, certainly an insurance company or Uncle Sam cannot.

Mr. LEMKE. The gentleman is correct. This bill was very carefully considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of both the House and the Senate, and by the full Committee on the Judiciary of both the House and the Senate, and last Monday it was passed after an hour and a half discussion on the question of its constitutionality, without a dissenting vote, in the United States Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Assuming that this bill is passed, and that it is held constitutional by the Court, it is the first time that we will have given that kind of assistance to the farmers of this country.

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; except subsection (s) passed by the last session, which the Court held unconstitutional.

Mr. FORD of California. Is it not designed to give to the farmer a breathing spell so that he may orient himself in such a way as to get out of his present difficulties without in the least jeopardizing the lien of his creditors?

Mr. LEMKE. Absolutely, and the district judge has complete control all the time of the farmer's property.

Mr. FORD of California. That is the object?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. All it does is to give a 3-year extension for the time of the redemption if the court so directs.

Mr. LEMKE. Under the supervision and control of the court.

Mr. GREEVER. Does the gentleman feel that the constitutional feature that was decided by the Supreme Court is now fully cured?

Mr. LEMKE. I agree with the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee that, with the amendment that Mr. SUMNERS will offer, there will be no constitutional question about the bill.

Mr. KLOEB. The gentleman ably argued the case before the court of appeals at Cincinnati. In view of his arguments there and in view of the legal questions raised as to the constitutionality of the former bill, is the gentleman now satisfied in his own mind that this bill will pass the constitutional test?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; I am satisfied that this bill now complies with the language of the Supreme Court decision, in which they overruled the circuit court of appeals and two other circuit courts and about 50 other judges. We have complied with the decision that overrules all of those.

Mr. CARPENTER. And if the farmer takes advantage of this act and goes into bankruptcy, will he be entitled to his regular exemption?

Mr. LEMKE. We leave all that just as it is now in the old bankruptcy act. This has nothing to do with that. His exemptions are just the same as before and controlled by State law.

Mr. PIERCE. And the full rental value is to be paid over to the mortgagee?

Mr. LEMKE. The full rental value is to be paid into court, to be paid to the creditors.

Mr. PIERCE. That principle is now being carried out in the Pacific Northwest.

Mr. NELSON. Am I right in understanding that the benefits under this bill apply only to debts previously contracted and not to future debts?

Mr. LEMKE. There is no limitation except that this act will expire in about 2½ years. The reason we did not put that into this bill is because when the former act got up to the Supreme Court there was serious argument whether that could be done, because you would have a farmer have part of his property in a bankruptcy court, and then the property that he acquired afterward would not be in bankruptcy; that is, he would be partly in bankruptcy and partly out, which would, to say the least, cause great confusion.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER. One of the most difficult things we encountered under the operation of the past law was whether it applied after there had been a foreclosure sale in the district court. What will be the effect of this law?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 2 additional minutes in order to answer my question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the gentleman have my question in mind?

Mr. LEMKE. I have the gentleman's question in mind. I will say there has been great confusion among the district courts in the other act as to this point, because there were some amendments added in a hurry, and these made it ambiguous. This act clears up those ambiguities, and there will be no misunderstanding.

Mr. CARPENTER. This gives the farmer the benefit of this act after there has been a foreclosure?

Mr. LEMKE. As long as title has not passed, and he has a right of redemption.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman think the home owners in the cities are entitled to the same consideration as the farmers?

Mr. LEMKE. There is another act, a companion to this, which passed the Senate on yesterday, Senate 3049, H. R. 8743, that gives the same opportunity to the home owners. I hope the gentleman will get that bill passed. I will do all I can to help the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Could we not amend this bill by inserting that?

Mr. LEMKE. No; because there are two different set-ups. In 74 and 75 they started out differently, and we cannot very well get them together.

Mr. SABATH. I do not want to kill the gentleman's bill, but I am very much interested that the same relief should be granted to thousands of home owners who are about to be evicted as we are giving to the farmers.

Mr. LEMKE. I would say to the gentleman that if he will help me to get those other two bills considered by the Judiciary Committee they will have the same opportunity. The Senate passed the bill on yesterday. I shall do all I can to have H. R. 8743 considered and brought up in the closing hours of this session.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEMKE: Page 8, line 23, after the word "courts" and the comma, in line 23, strike out the balance of line 23 and the first seven words of line 24, and insert the word "shall."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Members of the House are satisfied with the explanation made with regard to the general features of this bill. The amendment offered is at line 23, page 8 of the bill, and the purpose is to remove a question as to the constitutionality of the bill.

Under existing language of the bill, whether or not there may be a foreclosure in a case where the award is less than the debt secured is left to the discretion of the judge. Now, that is not a clear explanation, but it will suffice for the present purpose. I would make it clearer if it were important. However, the amendment proposed removes the judge's discretion, if the original debt has not been fully paid, and gives the creditor the right, as a matter of right, to have a foreclosure of the property in the event his debt has not been in full.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. This bill does not in any way destroy the right of the security holder in having preference for his claim?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This bill does not disturb the ordinary relationship between debtor and creditor insofar as the right of the creditor to pursue the property by which his debt is secured. He can have it sold, under the terms of this amendment, to the highest bidder; he may himself bid and he gets for himself whatever the property brings. I did not personally go into the details of the bill when it was being considered in committee, but the Committee on the Judiciary did do it very well. I may say for the members of my committee—there are good lawyers on that committee—and as far as I know, there is no doubt now, although there was doubt with reference to the first bill. I understand from my colleagues on the committee there is not now any doubt as to the constitutionality of this bill, assuming the House will adopt the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. HOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. What is the gentleman's opinion, if he will be good enough to give it, as to the soundness of the provisions generally and the desirability of the legislation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My opinion is based to a considerable degree upon representations made to the committee as to the condition that obtains, particularly in the western and northwestern section of the country, where, by reason of a series of droughts, the people are absolutely unable to take care of their indebtedness. This is intended for the purpose of giving them a breathing spell, in which those people whose homes are threatened may have an opportunity possibly to get better crop conditions and to pay their debts.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does this apply to loans that have been made by the Federal land bank?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would rather the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] answered these questions as to details.

Mr. LEMKE. It applies to all loans by any corporation of the Government of the United States. Some of the members of the Federal land banks say this law is absolutely essential for them to function.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is the gentleman's opinion that this bill as now drafted comes within the constitutional powers of the Congress?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I explained, that opinion is drawn largely from the unanimous opinion of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, who have more carefully examined it, but from the examination which I have made, which is rather casual, I did not observe anything, if this amendment is adopted, which would make me apprehensive as to its constitutionality.

Mr. McCORMACK. Under the circumstances, with the emergency existing, it is a moratorium, and it is a reasonable, logical, and proper thing for the Government to provide for in order to protect the farmers and, I hope, the small home owners from complete liquidation of their property and destruction of the equity they may have therein.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I prefer not to designate the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is this permanent legislation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it is not permanent.

Mr. KNUTSON. How long will it be in effect?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Two and a half years, I believe.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by amending subsection (g) to read as follows:

"(g) An application for the confirmation of a composition or extension proposal may be filed in the court of bankruptcy after, but not before, it has been accepted in writing, by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, including secured creditors whose claims are affected, which number shall represent a majority in amount of such claims."

SEC. 3. That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by amending subsection (k) to read as follows:

"(k) Upon its confirmation, a composition or extension proposal shall be binding upon the farmer and his secured and unsecured creditors affected thereby: Provided, however, That such extension and/or composition shall not reduce the amount of or impair the lien of any secured creditor below the fair and reasonable market value of the property securing any such lien at the time that the extension and/or composition is accepted, but nothing herein shall prevent the reduction of the future rate of interest on all debts of the debtor, whether secured or unsecured."

SEC. 4. That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by amending subsection (n) to read as follows:

"(n) The filing of a petition or answer with the clerk of court, or leaving it with the conciliation commissioner for the purpose of forwarding same to the clerk of court, praying for relief under section 75 of this act, as amended, shall immediately subject the farmer and all his property, wherever located, for all the purposes of this section, to the exclusive jurisdiction of the court, including all real or personal property, or any equity or right in any such property, including, among others, contracts for purchase, contracts for deed, or conditional sales contracts, the right or the equity of redemption where the period of redemption has not or had not expired, or where a deed of trust has been given as security, or where the sale has not or had not been confirmed, or where deed had not been delivered, at the time of filing the petition.

"In all cases where, at the time of filing the petition, the period of redemption has not or had not expired, or where the right under a deed of trust has not or had not become absolute, or where the sale has not or had not been confirmed, or where deed had not been delivered, the period of redemption shall be extended or the confirmation of sale withheld for the period necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section. The words 'period of redemption' wherever they occur in this section shall include any State moratorium, whether established by legislative enactment or executive proclamation, or where the period of redemption has been extended by a judicial decree. In proceedings under this section, except as otherwise provided herein, the jurisdiction and powers of the courts, the title, powers, and duties of its officers, the duties of the farmer, and the rights and liabilities of creditors, and of all persons with respect to the property of the farmer and the jurisdiction of the appellate courts, shall be the same as if a voluntary petition for adjudication had been filed and a decree of adjudication had been entered on the day when the farmer's petition, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt, was filed with the clerk of court or left with the conciliation commissioner for the purpose of forwarding same to the clerk of court."

SEC. 5. That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by amending subsection (p) to read as follows:

"(p) The prohibitions of subsection (o) shall apply to all judicial or official proceedings in any court or under the direction of any official, and shall apply to all creditors, public or private, and to all of the debtor's property, wherever located. All such property shall be under the sole jurisdiction and control of the court in bankruptcy, and subject to the payment of the debtor farmer's creditors, as provided for in section 75 of this act."

SEC. 6. That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by adding a new subsection (s), after subsection (r), to read as follows:

"(s) Any farmer failing to obtain the acceptance of a majority in number and amount of all creditors whose claims are affected by a composition and/or extension proposal, or if he feels aggrieved by the composition and/or extension, may amend his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt. Such farmer may, at the same time, or at the time of the first hearing, petition the court that all of his property, wherever located, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, be appraised, and that his unencumbered exemptions, and unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions, as prescribed by State law, be set aside to him, and that he be allowed to retain possession, under the supervision and control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of his property, including his encumbered exemptions, under the terms and conditions set forth in this section. Upon such a request being made, the referee, under the jurisdiction of the court, shall designate and appoint appraisers, as provided for in this act. Such appraisers shall appraise all of the property of the debtor, wherever located, at its then fair and reasonable market value. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects with rights of objections, exceptions, and appeals, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in proceedings under this section either party may file objections, exceptions, and take appeals within 4 months from the date that the referee approves the appraisal.

"(1) After the value of the debtor's property shall have been fixed by the appraisal herein provided, the referee shall issue an order setting aside to such debtor his unencumbered exemptions, and his unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions, as prescribed by the State law, and shall further order that the possession, under the supervision and control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of the debtor's property shall remain in the debtor, as herein provided for, subject to all existing mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances. All such existing mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall remain in full force and effect, and the property covered by such mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall be subject to the payment of the claims of the secured creditors, as their interests may appear.

"(2) When the conditions set forth in this section have been complied with, the court shall stay all judicial or official proceedings in any court, or under the direction of any official, against the debtor or any of his property, for a period of 3 years. During such 3 years the debtor shall be permitted to retain possession of all or any part of his property, in the custody and under the supervision and control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental semiannually for that part of the property of which he retains possession. The first payment of such rental shall be made within 1 year of the date of the order staying proceedings, the amount and kind of such rental to be the usual customary rental in the community where the property is located, based upon the rental value, net income, and earning capacity of the property. Such rental shall be paid into court, to be used, first, for payment of taxes and upkeep of the property, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, and applied on their claims, as their interests may appear. The court, in its discretion, if it deems it necessary to protect the creditors from loss by the estate, and/or to conserve the security, may order sold any unexempt perishable property of the debtor, or any unexempt personal property not reasonably necessary for the farming operations of the debtor, such sale to be had at private or public sale, and may, in addition to the rental, require payments on the principal due and owing by the debtor to the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and may require such payments to be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually, not inconsistent with the protection of the rights of the creditors and the debtor's ability to pay, with a view to his financial rehabilitation.

"(3) At the end of 3 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the amount of the appraisal of the property of which he retains possession, including the amount of encumbrances on his exemptions, up to the amount of the appraisal, less the amount paid on principal: Provided, That upon request of any secured or unsecured creditor, or upon request of the debtor, the court shall cause a reappraisal of the debtor's property, or in its discretion set a date for hearing, and after such hearing fix the value of the property, in accordance with the evidence submitted, and the debtor shall then pay the value so arrived at into court, less payments made on the principal, for distribution to all secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property, free and clear of encumbrances to the debtor: Provided, That upon request in writing by any secured creditor or creditors the court, in its discretion, if it deems it for the best interests of the secured creditors and debtor, may order the property upon which such secured creditors have a lien to be sold at public auction. The debtor shall have 90 days to redeem any property sold at such sale, by paying the amount for which any such property was sold, together with 5 percent per annum interest, into court, and he may apply for his discharge, as provided for by this act. If, however, the debtor at any time fails to comply with the provisions of this section, or with any orders of the court made pursuant to this section, or is unable to refinance himself within 3 years, the court may order the appointment of a trustee, and order the property sold or otherwise disposed of as provided for in this act.

"(4) The conciliation commissioner, appointed under subsection (a) of section 75 of this act, as amended, shall continue to act, and act as referee, when the farmer debtor amends his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt under the provisions of subsection (s) of section 75 of this act, and continue so to act until the case has been finally disposed of. The conciliation commissioner, as such referee, shall receive such an additional fee for his services as may be allowed by the court, not to exceed $35 in any case, to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate. No additional fees or costs of administration or supervision of any kind shall be charged to the farmer debtor when or after he amends his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt, under subsection (s) of section 75 of this act, but all such additional filing fees or costs of administration or supervision shall be charged against the bankrupt's estate. Conciliation commissioners and referees appointed under section 75 of this act shall be entitled to transmit in the mails, free of postage, under cover of a penalty envelope, all matters which relate exclusively to the business of the courts, including notices to creditors. If, at the time that the farmer debtor amends his petition or answer, asking to be adjuged a bankrupt, a receiver is in charge of any of his property, such receiver shall be divested of possession, and the property returned to the possession of such farmer, under the provisions of this act. The provisions of this act shall be held to apply also to partnerships, common, entirety, joint, community ownerships, or to farming corporations where at least 75 percent of the stock is owned by actual farmers, and any such parties may join in one petition.

"(5) This act shall be held to apply to all existing cases now pending in any Federal court, under this act, as well as to future cases; and all cases that have been dismissed by any conciliation commissioner, referee, or court because of the Supreme Court decision holding the former subsection (s) unconstitutional, shall be promptly reinstated, without any additional filing fees or charges. Any farm debtor who has filed under the General Bankruptcy Act may take advantage of this section upon written request to the court; and a previous discharge of the debtor under any other section of this act shall not be grounds for denying him the benefits of this section.

"(6) This act is hereby declared to be an emergency measure and if in the judgment of the court such emergency ceases to exist in its locality, then the court, in its discretion, may shorten the stay of proceedings herein provided for and proceed to liquidate the estate."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 8728) were laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 344, for the investigation of the operating methods of air-mail contractors from the standpoint of safety, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 344

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct a thorough investigation of (1) the air-transport operations of companies holding contracts for the transportation of foreign or domestic air mail for the purpose of determining whether adequate safeguards are provided and maintained for the security of air mail and passengers transported by said contractors; (2) the method or methods adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix and determine the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for the transportation of air mail by airplane pursuant to the authority of the act to revise the air-mail laws, approved June 12, 1934, as amended; and (3) the manner in which, and the extent to which, the companies holding air-mail contracts have reorganized and otherwise qualified in compliance with the requirements set forth in such act of June 12, 1934, as amended.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session), during the present Congress, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for such additional legislation (if any) as it may deem advisable, after consideration of the facts developed by its investigation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress, at such time and places along or adjacent to any of said air-mail routes as it may deem necessary, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman kindly explain the resolution?

Mr. MEAD. This resolution is a combination of three resolutions introduced during the present session of Congress. Two of these resolutions were presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] and one was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS]. The resolutions of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] asked for information with regard to the method of fixing rates for air-mail pay and also with regard to the reorganization of the air-mail companies.

The resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] would inquire into the establishment of a safety code for travel by air.

We believe these three resolutions are timely and that some thought and attention should be given to all three of the items included in this resolution of investigation.

No money will be required in the conduct of this investigation. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that our committee, with the assistance of the late lamented Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, conducted exhaustive investigations. We had voluminous hearings, and the only thing now necessary is time in which to give this material further study. Time is essential; it is difficult for us to get together during the sessions of Congress and devote such time as is necessary for this work.

The air-mail bill which passed the House a few weeks ago authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to review air-mail rates, and to make recommendations to Congress by next January. It is our desire, during the coming autumn, to cooperate with the Interstate Commerce Commission in the establishment of a uniform and standardized method of establishing these rates. It is our desire to go along with the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce in the enactment of a law with regard to safety in air travel; and in this connection I will say to the gentleman that such a law is essentially necessary at this time. An illustration of its necessity is the death of the distinguished former Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Cutting.

The regular order was called for.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless we are to have some discussion of this resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York is making a very fine statement. I think he should be allowed to continue.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked me to explain the resolution and why it is necessary under the circumstances. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice that the last paragraph of the resolution reads:

> For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress, at such time and places along or adjacent to any of said air-mail routes as it may deem necessary, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned.

How is the gentleman or his committee going to travel along these air lines without becoming obligated to the parties who want legislation passed if this resolution does not make some money available?

Mr. MEAD. There is not going to be any traveling on the Government's money or anybody else's money. It was thought that if a very serious crash occurred, such as the crash in which the distinguished former Senator from New Mexico was killed, it might be necessary for some member or members of the committee to accompany the Post Office Department or the Bureau of Air Commerce, which have their own ships, to make an investigation on the spot in connection with the accident.

Mr. McFARLANE. This thought occurs to me: We have enacted legislation at this session of Congress covering most of the things sought to be investigated under authority of this resolution.

Mr. MEAD. No. We have no legislation with regard to safety of air travel. We have such legislation with regard to the operation of steamships, railroad trains, and other types of transportation. There must be a law sooner or later with regard to safety of air travel. Until such time as there is legislation of that character, the progress of air travel will be impeded.

The Post Office Depatment favors this resolution. The committee desires only to complete its task. We have voluminous records; we will have the cooperation of the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Air Commerce, the Post Office Department, and the Interstate Commerce Commission; but we need time in which to get this information together, and it cannot be done unless we get authority from the House and do the work when there is no session of Congress.

We are asking for authority to work without pay and in cooperation with other governmental agencies.

Mr. McFARLANE. Has the gentleman ever thought about the proposition of combining about seven or eight of these different departments of the Government here which have their own separate branch in aeronautics, like the Agricultural Department, the Post Office Department, the Commerce Department, and the War and Navy Departments? Has the gentleman given consideration to combining them all into one department in which we might have a better picture of this proposition and a more unified situation? If we could unify our different departments having air forces, it would permit us to systematize and more efficiently and economically operate this division of the Government service.

Mr. MEAD. There is merit in what the gentleman says. The matter is covered in the report of the Aviation Commission.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman is not investigating that under the resolution?

Mr. MEAD. That is contained in the report of the Aviation Commission, which will be taken up and considered by our committee if we have the time and authority to do so. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman in his thoughts on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANASTASIA ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, FLA.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3327) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain portions of Anastasia Island Lighthouse Reservation, Fla., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, the bill is designed to cure a defect in title to certain lots on Anastasia Island, which were sold to and are now owned by private individuals. The Federal Government owns what is known as the lighthouse reservation, upon which the lighthouse is located.

In 1851 the Government caused a plat of that property to be made and later sold off certain fractional sections. The plat was recorded upon the public records of the county and the Federal Government conveyed the lands in accordance with that plat. In 1915 the Government caused a resurvey to be made and the same lines were again established and monuments erected to indicate the lines which are still standing. That plat is still of record on the public records of the county. According to that plat the adjacent lands which had been sold by the Government were subdivided and sold to private owners. Since then the Government has caused a resurvey to be made, and it has been discovered that the original plat was probably in error as to the location of the lines. In the meantime private owners have acquired the property according to the plat of 1915 and according to the lines as established by the Government. They have bought these lots in good faith and have paid their money and in some instances have built homes. They have been in occupancy of this land for several years, since 1915 in the case of some of these individuals. The subsequent plat, however, has never been recorded, and there is nothing of record to put the purchasers on notice that the Government still has a claim to part of this property.

In order to clear up the title to this land and to enable the Government also to convey a park to the city, the bill authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to make quitclaim deeds to that portion of the property which has been acquired in good faith and on which homes have been built in accordance with the Government's own plat, which probably was in error, and also authorizes the conveyance of a part of the tract to the city of St. Augustine for park purposes.

The Superintendent of Lighthouses of the Department of Commerce, under whose jurisdiction this matter comes, has agreed to the bill. He has filed a report and recommends that the bill pass, in order to do justice and to correct an error of the Government.

Mr. MAPES. How much property is involved?

Mr. WILCOX. Twenty lots, about 100 by 200 feet each.

Mr. MAPES. Are they all improved?

Mr. WILCOX. Practically all of them improved.

Mr. MAPES. Under the jurisdiction of what committee does this matter come?

Mr. WILCOX. Under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. They unanimously reported the bill.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman made the statement that the Secretary consented to this bill. Did he recommend it?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes. The Secretary of Commerce did not sign the report. The Commissioner of Lighthouses signed the report. The bill has passed the Senate and was reported unanimously by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. RICH. This involves no cost to the Government?

Mr. WILCOX. No; because it simply corrects an error in title caused in the Government's own survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey to the city commission of the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for public-park purposes, that portion of the Anastasia Island Lighthouse Reservation, Fla., which is not required to be retained for lighthouse purposes, consisting of Government lots 1 and 2, section 21, township 7 south, range 30 east, Tallahassee, Fla., excepting that part of lot 2 between the 5-acre lighthouse tract and the hard-surfaced road and that part of Government lots 1 and 2 to be conveyed as authorized by section 2 of this act, reserving unto the United States of America a perpetual easement for beams of light across any part of said lands that may be between the lighthouse and the sea. The deed of conveyance shall describe by metes and bounds the exact portion of the reservation transferred and the reservation of the easement heretofore mentioned.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey by quitclaim deed unto the following-named holders of record title thereto that portion of the Anastasia Island Lighthouse Reservation contained and included in the plat of Seaside Heights recorded in the office of the clerk of the circuit court in and for St. Johns County, Fla., in Map Book 2 at page 37 of the Public Records of St. Johns County, Fla.: To Annette Mathis, that portion of said reservation platted as lots 1 and 2, block A, Seaside Heights; to Mary A. Masters, lot 3, block A, Seaside Heights; to G. N. and Clara B. Weber, lots 4, 5, 6, and 7, block A, Seaside Heights; to Harry Hellas, lots 1, 2, and 3, block B, and lots 1 and 2, block C, Seaside Heights; to Robert H. Bailey, lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, block F, Seaside Heights; to Southern Real Estate Corporation, lots 4 to 7, block B, 3 to 7, block C, all of blocks D and E, Seaside Heights; all of which said lots and parcels of land, platted as aforesaid for a part of Government lot 4 based upon an erroneous Government survey are a part of and contained within Government lots 1 and 2, section 21, township 7 south, range 30 east, Tallahassee, Fla., according to correct survey of said lands.

SEC. 3. That section 3 of an act approved May 28, 1935 (Public, No. 81, 74th Cong.) (H. R. 7131), authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey the lands herein described, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request for the consideration of the bill (S. 3414) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, a similar House bill (H. R. 8657) having been reported by the committee.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE], I understand, has withdrawn his objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill S. 3414. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the first bill that was presented a while ago or the second one?

Mr. CELLER. No; this is the second one. This has to do with Brooklyn, the eastern district of New York.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman presented a bill calling for two judges?

Mr. CELLER. That bill was withdrawn, temporarily.

Mr. RICH. Has this bill been presented to the Judiciary Committee and reported by that committee?

Mr. CELLER. It has been reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee. I may say also the bill has been passed by the Senate. It saw the need, the urgent need, of an additional judge for Brooklyn and the entire part of Long Island, the so-called "eastern district." The bill in the Senate was sponsored by Senator WAGNER.

Mr. RICH. Why were not these judges included in the judges' bill that we passed a week ago?

Mr. CELLER. That was a different matter. That was a bill making permanent certain temporary judges. In the case of Boston, due to the death of Judge Lowell there was a vacancy that could not be filled, because he held but a temporary judgeship. Among other things that bill made permanent the judgeship he held. That bill also made permanent several other judgeships: two in the southern district of New York, one of which is being held by a resident judge, the other which was formerly held by Judge Winslow who died; one in Brooklyn now held by Judge Campbell.

I repeat, the judgeship bill which we voted a week or two ago was to make permanent 15 temporary judgeships. Without such a bill no vacancy could be filled after death or resignation. This bill, however, provides for an additional, new judge in Brooklyn.

Mr. RICH. Cannot the judges you have in Brooklyn now take care of the work?

Mr. CELLER. I may refer to the testimony of Judge Campbell before our committee, as well as that of Judge Maxton, chief judge of the United States circuit court of appeals at New York. Both testified to the utter necessity of an additional judge, because the present judges cannot cope with the avalanche of new cases that arise out of the many new statutes we are passing. All the calendars—equity, patent, copyrights, admiralty, criminal, civil—are congested. Judge Campbell wrote to 19 outside judges from various States asking them to help and come to Brooklyn to bring the calendar up to date. Not one judge agreed to come. Why was that? The answer is plain. We only allow judges $5 a day for living while in New York or Brooklyn. That is woefully insufficient. They cannot afford it. Small wonder, therefore, they will not come to Brooklyn.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how far are they behind in their work in this district?

Mr. CELLER. The common-law calendar is wellnigh a year behind. It is well to remember that justice delayed is justice denied. The equity and admiralty calendars are about 6 months behind, but the tardiness grows worse daily. Seventy-seven B proceedings have fairly swamped the court, and each case of reorganization is intricate, involving intricate motions and ex parte proceedings that last for days. Many of these 77B cases involve millions of dollars, affecting thousands of bondholders, preferred- and common-stock holders, and embrace security committees of all sorts. Oftttimes the court rooms are filled with several thousand persons, all financially interested in the proceedings. Frequently these cases take months to dispose of, requiring daily attention and many nights of research. Then, too, our judges are not allotted any law clerks to help run down cases and help prepare decisions.

Mr. TABER. How many judges have they there?

Mr. CELLER. We have five judges covering a population of something like 5,000,000 people.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How long a vacation do they take?

Mr. CELLER. The courts are never closed. They are open all summer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. About how many decisions or opinions do they hand down?

Mr. CELLER. In this court they closed 1,337 bankruptcy cases in a period of 6 months.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Those were referee cases?

Mr. CELLER. All kinds of bankruptcy cases. That was in addition to cases on the law, equity, admiralty, and criminal law calendars. On those calendars they tried 172 cases. In addition, there were 1,473 bankruptcy motions and many hundreds of motions involving equity, common-law, criminal, and admiralty causes.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that I recall very distinctly that he stated if we would do away with prohibition we would have fewer cases in the courts. Now the gentleman finds they have more cases today than they ever had before, and the cause was not prohibition at all.

Mr. CELLER. That may be so. Other laws passed have taken the place of the Volstead Act. We have now 77B proceedings, A. A. A. proceedings, processing tax, gold-clause cases, which we did not have before.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman the condition of the docket now with reference to pending cases?

Mr. CELLER. They are way behind. Here is some of Judge Campbell's testimony—Judge Campbell is an able, painstaking, conscientious, righteous judge—as of March 6, 1935:

We have tried more than 40 cases a month—that is, the 4 judges—working on the average, because there are only 22 trial days to the ordinary term and the average case takes more than 2 days. Of course, there are cases which take less and many of them take many more, but striking an average, 2 days is the very shortest time for the average, and you cannot do on an average in an average month more than 10 cases a man. That is the best. That gives you 40 cases a month, and with 9 months that is 360 cases, and during the summer if you disposed of, say, 30 cases, we would be disposing of 390 cases a year, and we have had over 400 cases added to the calendar since the 1st of July, with 5 of the busiest months of the year ahead, so that shows you that we are going backward instead of going forward.

There being no objection, the clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill were laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT OF 1918

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 191) to amend the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 611 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (relating to the tax on still wines) (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1300 (a) (1)), as reads:

"On wines containing not more than 14 percent of absolute alcohol, 10 cents per wine gallon, the percent of alcohol under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight;

"On wines containing more than 14 percent and not exceeding 21 percent of absolute alcohol, 20 cents per wine-gallon;

"On wines containing more than 21 percent and not exceeding 24 percent of absolute alcohol, 40 cents per wine-gallon;

"All such wines containing more than 24 percent of absolute alcohol by volume shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall be taxed accordingly."

is amended to read as follows:

"On wines containing not more than 14 percent of absolute alcohol, 5 cents per wine gallon, the percent of alcohol under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight;

"On wines containing more than 14 percent and not exceeding 21 percent of absolute alcohol, 10 cents per wine-gallon;

"On wines containing more than 21 percent and not exceeding 24 percent of absolute alcohol, 20 cents per wine-gallon;

"All such wines containing more than 24 percent of absolute alcohol by volume shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall be taxed accordingly."

SEC. 2. Section 612 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (relating to the tax on grape brandy and wine spirits withdrawn and used in the fortification of wines) (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1301), is amended by striking out "20 cents per proof-gallon" and inserting in lieu thereof "10 cents per proof-gallon."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 611 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1300 (a) (1)), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 611. (a) Upon all still wines (including imported but not domestic vermouth), and all artificial or imitation wines or compounds sold as still wine, which are produced in or imported into the United States, after the date of enactment of this amendatory section or which on the day after such date are on any winery premises or other bonded premises or in transit thereto or at any customhouse, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, taxes at rates as follows, when sold, or removed for consumption or sale:

"'On wines containing not more than 14 percent of absolute alcohol, 5 cents per wine-gallon, the percentage of alcohol under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight.

"'On wines containing more than 14 percent and not exceeding 21 percent of absolute alcohol, 10 cents per wine-gallon.

"'On wines containing more than 21 percent and not exceeding 24 percent of absolute alcohol, 20 cents per wine-gallon.

"'(b) All such wines containing more than 24 percent of absolute alcohol by volume shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall be taxed accordingly.

"'(c) Any such wines may, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, be sold or removed tax free for the manufacture of vinegar, or for the production of dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 percent of alcohol by volume.

"'(d) The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply to dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 percent of alcohol by volume.'"

SEC. 2. Section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1300 (a) (2)), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 613. (a) Upon the following articles which are produced in or imported into the United States, after the date of the enactment of this amendatory section, or which on the day after such date are on any winery premises or other bonded premises or in transit thereto or at any customhouse, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, taxes at rates as follows, when sold, or removed for consumption or sale:

"On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 2½ cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

"On each bottle or other container of artificially carbonated wine, 1¼ cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

"On each bottle or other container of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy or containing citrus-fruit wine fortified with citrus-fruit brandy, 1¼ cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

"(b) Any of the foregoing articles containing more than 24 percent of absolute alcohol by volume (except liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds), made with tax-paid distilled spirits at rectifying houses, shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall be taxed accordingly.

"(c) The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to remit, refund, and pay back all distilled-spirits tax on such liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds paid by rectifiers or assessed prior to the date of the enactment of this amendatory section."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

This bill has been before the Ways and Means Committee and the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] has offered a complete explanation of it in committee. I am sure the gentleman from California would not be presenting the bill if it were not a suitable measure for us to consider at this time.

I wish therefore to use the few minutes that are available to me in referring to the services of a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

We have had a very strenuous session, and as we are approaching the close of the session I want to take it upon myself to express a word of praise and thanks to our able chairman. [Applause.]

I have served on the Ways and Means Committee longer than has the gentleman from North Carolina. I have served on the committee a good many years now and I can honestly and fairly and sincerely say to the House that in all the years I have been a member of the committee, it has never been presided over by a gentleman whose heart was more in sympathy with his fellow man than the distinguished Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. DOUGHTON. [Applause.] We have had a good many differences in the committee room, and when the door of the committee opened for the adjournment of the committee, after these differences had been taken up, they were forgotten and no man was more responsible for the high regard with which the members of the committee treated each other than was our fair and kindly chairman. He is a partisan, and I am proud of him for being a partisan—I am one myself—and the more loyalty we show to the party to which we belong, if we do this in a sincere and honest and upright manner, the better Congressman we are here. This is the type of service BOB DOUGHTON has given our committee. I also want to compliment the chairman upon his unflinching support of the administration which at times may have been somewhat trying. He also has used discretion and good judgment in directing the proceedings and deliberations of the committee.

I cannot say anything that would add to the glory or the reputation he has made as our chairman, but I do wish to add just this one personal word in praise of his service and the hearty cooperation he has had from his fellow majority members; and we in the minority, in our modest way, have tried to go along to the best of our knowledge and ability. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I appreciate the kind and gracious words of my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] more than I can adequately express. He is the ranking minority member of the committee and was a patriarch on the committee when I took my first lesson and took my place at the foot of the class. We have served together for 12 years, and if there has ever been an unkind thought between us I have no recollection of it. I have never worked with a man who was more agreeable, and more dependable than the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. [Applause.]

He is a partisan, of course, but he is a fair partisan. It has been largely through his splendid cooperation and that of the minority of the committee that we have worked along so harmoniously and agreeably.

I also appreciate the kindness of the Democratic Members of the committee. There has been nothing, so far as I know, of the slightest ill-feeling among the membership of our committee. I have the highest consideration and regard for the greatest confidence in each member of that committee.

May I express the hope in these closing days of this Congress that when we go to our several homes that each member of the committee as well as each Member of this House may have a happy vacation and return here at the next session vigorous in mind and body. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I arise to a question of personal privilege and of the privilege of the House and I move to strike out the last two words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In view of what has just been said, this seems the appropriate time to call the attention of Members of the House to certain newspaper articles reflecting upon the House and its Membership. We should not sit here and permit to go unchallenged, in the absence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the ever-ready, competent, and earnest defender of the integrity of the House, of the faithful, self-sacrificing service and independence of thought of its Members, and who when here so frequently calls to the gentlemen of the press the error of their ways, the following statement in the Washington Herald of a few days ago. Let me read:

> Unwept, unhonored, and generally unsung—as Sir Walter Scott would put it—the Seventy-fourth Congress is preparing to make its getaway as quietly as possible from Washington, for 8 months the scene of its unparalleled folly and extravagance.
> Gifted with hindsight to a superlative degree, it has no other claim upon the fame of history. It has socked the harrassed American people, struggling out of depression, to the incredible extent of $9,000,000,000, which they will have to pay back in the sweat of their brows. It has made the most abject surrender of the purse into the unrestricted hands of "the crown", since the Stuart kings of England.
> It has revolutionized the social structure of America by enacting legislation in which it has not believed. The sins of this Congress will endure for a long time. The half-baked laws it has placed upon the statute books by a mere majority vote can be repealed, in years to come, only by a two-thirds majority over a possible Presidential veto.

The foregoing statement is slightly inaccurate if considered as a statement of conditions as they exist.

The Chairman of the great Appropriations Committee, Mr. BUCHANAN, told the House yesterday that the total appropriations for this Congress were a matter of $10,250,000,000, an all-time record.

The writer of this newspaper article is also in error when he intimates that the laws passed by this Congress are "half-baked" laws. The dough in many of them has never felt heat, unless by "dough" we mean money that has felt the heat of the administration in more than one instance before the Members of this Congress voted it out of the Treasury.

In a newspaper, reference to this Congress as "crawling Congress" is made. That charge is made by those gentlemen who sit up there on their air-cooled thrones away from the "hot air" that goes rolling up from the House floor, and they make these, as Mr. BLANTON would say, unfounded charges, day after day and broadcast them to the people. I hope they were here yesterday and that they witnessed the conduct of this House in demonstrating that it is under the control of no man, no group of men; and especially that it is not under control of the administration.

Three times, I think it was, the administration, through its Cochranes and its Cohens, through its officeholders and job hunters, by hope of reward, by fear of punishment, has exerted its force and endeavored to drive this House into supporting certain provisions of the public-utility bill, the "death sentence" being one, and as many times the House arose in its might and indignation and asserted its independence and freedom of thought. It resisted that effort. It remained firm and unchanged, uninfluenced by this exhibition of power, and so it stood until we learned from the Speaker of the House and from the Chairman of the Committee on Rules that we were in error, until, by their logic and by their convincing arguments, at least some Members on the Democratic side learned, and were convinced, that they were in error in opposing this legislation.

Certainly no one changed his vote because it was the Speaker of the House who made the argument. From the beginning of the session we have all admired the firmness, the fairness, and the kindliness of the Speaker in assisting the House, especially the new Members, in finding their way amid the mysteries of legislative procedure. When wayward and unruly we have been reproved kindly and patiently and through every difficult and trying situation he has asserted a tremendous power in a manner of which no one can complain. Partisan, he has been, but no more so than a good party man should be. No one would suggest that the great power of his office influenced the judgment of any Member in casting his vote yesterday.

Well do I recall the words of our Speaker as cautioning us not to "permit ourselves to be carried away by eloquence or logic of our distinguished friend from Alabama", and telling us that so far as he could remember from the time the legislation first appeared, down until the time of taking a final vote, no one had said there should not be some legislation looking toward the control of holding companies; he told us quite truthfully that we could not, I rather think he meant, should not, "go back to our constituents and admit our inability to pass some kind of legislation looking to control of holding companies."

He frankly stated that he would not discuss the merits of the bill and then appealed to the House, and particularly to the Democrats, to adopt the motion and to approve the compromise, stating that the conference report was a victory for the House. He in thought but reiterated the statement of the gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, one of the conferees, who stated in substance when the Senate bill was first passed that the House would take the "death sentence" or nothing. Had I my way, we would have told the gentleman from the other end of the Capitol to take his playthings and go home if he could not play the game.

This statement of our Speaker, of one of the conferees of the other body, that we could take it or leave it, accompanied as it was by a reference to the folks back home, is not an argument to convince some Members on the majority side. That is, it convinced them of what they must do, rather than of what they should do; but, being convinced by such an argument, they should not be referred to as "rubber stamp", they yielded not to the will of another but to the logic of the argument.

Now, the Chairman of the Rules Committee made much the same arguments. Both of these gentlemen told us that the conference report was a victory for the House. Strange as it may seem, the gentlemen of the press, those accurate, sensitive gentlemen who are experts at giving us the things which actually happen from day to day and who are so accurate in their news reports that we accept without question their daily offerings, have all without exception, I think, characterized yesterday's vote as a "surrender" on the part of the House. I hope never again, after witnessing the courageous fight and the exercise of an independent judgment, shown on three occasions by the House Membership, will these gentlemen, after yesterday's exhibition, be tempted to say that the Democrats of this House ever yield because of anything except argument based upon facts and reason.

It has been said that the arguments of these gentlemen were inspired by a gentleman politically prominent from the other end of the Capitol, who had stated the preceding night, we changed our views; that unless this report was adopted, the Democrats could not win the next election. I think that statement must be false.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know whether the gentleman has been gazing into crystal balls——

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I have never been in New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Or has been down on the Avenue listening to fortune tellers. And if the gentleman has never been in New York, he has not seen anything yet.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But I have kept my shirt.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Nothing like what the gentleman says was ever said to me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Because I can shout just as loud as anybody else.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman had a sudden conversion. Up until just a few days ago, if reports are correct, he had not seen the logic of voting the way he did yesterday, but that is all right. That is his business. I do recall that on roll call 114 the Chairman of the Rules Committee voted for the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill, insofar as this provision was involved.

I am only paying my tribute to the manner and method, the logic, the argument, he used to convince the Democrats, and to call attention to the fact that it was not pressure from the administration which caused the sudden conversion, the change of heart, the votes. The gentleman arrived at that conclusion himself, without any help, and he passed it along to the other boys, and they accepted it not because of any pressure from the administration, not because of the hope of patronage, not because they expected a part of that $4,000,000,000 would be expended in their districts, not because they desired the favor of the President or of Mr. Farley, not because they thought it would bring the party success, for many times they have expressed their desire to go to the country on this issue; they did not accept it and vote contrary to their former records because of the Speaker descending from that high office, second only to the Presidency itself, and requested them to vote for the report, nor because the Chairman of the great Rules Committee, Democratic leader second to none, urged them to vote for that report. Oh, no; none of these things appealed to them. They voted for this report because they were convinced that they had previously erred in their conclusions, that the report was a victory for the House, and hence they must embody their ideas, so they changed their votes and accepted the "death sentence" because they discovered that that was just what they had wanted to do all the time.

And so it is hoped that these gentlemen of the press will never again charge this Congress with being a "rubber stamp" Congress. Let the newspaper boys awaken and realize that here is a Congress asserting always its independent judgment, uninfluenced and unswayed, unable even to listen to any suggestions from a "brain truster", a Cabinet member, or even the President himself.

Never again should they charge the President with violating any of his campaign promises; surely, the President, because he is President of these great United States, intended to carry out every plank of that platform. He intended to reduce the number of bureaus, to cut down the expense of government 25 percent, to give us sound money, to maintain the integrity of the United States, and to support the Constitution, because they know he took an oath to support the Constitution when he was inaugurated.

Let newspaper boys remember rather that it is the Membership of this House which possesses the legislative power; that the President can get money only by independent legislative action; that the almost $5,000,000,000 given him early in this session was given to him not because he desired to assume the great responsibility, not because he thought he could spend that money to better advantage than could the Congress, not because he did not trust Congress or the various governmental departments to spend it, not because he thought this Congress would play politics with it; it was given him because, and only because, this Congress, after great deliberation in which all possible angles were considered, finally determined that it wanted him to have it.

Is it not preposterous to even suggest that this is a "rubber stamp" Congress?

True, some of us who have been here believe that this Congress does nothing except at the suggestion of the administrative department or through its Cohens or Cochranes or some "brain truster" or through a mind who prepares the legislation and hands it over for adoption, but that may not mean it is coerced. These thoughts for action come to us merely, it is said, as suggestions, and it is the House which appropriates the money.

How can the House be a "rubber stamp" Congress; how can it yield itself to the domination of the administration, when it has no other wish than the one to serve the President? A body which does not do its own thinking, which has no thought of its own, cannot yield anything. It has nothing to yield. It is not even a rubber stamp—rubber, though it yields, resist. Judge for yourself the resistance of this Congress. If in doubt, ask any man upon the street and be convinced.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. A distinguished member of the majority party, Mr. SUTPHIN, of New Jersey, is seriously ill and unable to be present on the floor. He is the author of a bill, drawn in January, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, the provisions of which would cancel the interest on the veterans' compensation certificates. I feel quite sure that 90 percent of the Members of the House are in favor of those provisions. I might point out that when the Ways and Means Committee approved the Vinson bill, and when the Rules Committee approved a rule to allow consideration of both the Vinson and the Patman bills, both of those Committees approved the principles outlined in the bill introduced by Mr. SUTPHIN for the cancelation of interest on the veterans' compensation certificates.

I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution which I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time.

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I think the resolution better be reported before the gentleman objects.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution in the time of the gentleman from New York as a part of his remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That prior to the close of today's session consideration be given by the House to H. R. 1421, a bill to provide that no interest shall be charged on loans secured by veterans' adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state there is a bill from the Ways and Means Committee now pending before the House. Of course, the resolution is not in order. Neither is the request at this time.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That being the case, I will ask the Speaker to recognize me for that purpose later on.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill?

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF PRICES OF COMMODITIES BY FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 316.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 316

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 9, a joint resolution authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of a Senate joint resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the prices of commodities, especially as to the middleman's profits. I trust that when that Commission enters upon this investigation that it does so as speedily as possible, and it will first take up the prices of meat, about which there has been a great deal of commotion in Detroit, New York, and other places.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced by me in January. A companion resolution was passed by the Senate several months ago and was reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. At the last session of the Congress on the eve of adjournment the Senate passed a similar resolution, but on account of the short time remaining it could not be considered in the House.

As the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] said, this is an investigation to determine middlemen's profits. I think the House generally knows the attitude I have taken in the past on investigations, and if this were a House investigation, as is proposed by several resolutions already introduced, then I would oppose it. I think the Federal Trade Commission is the body to do this job and that it can do it.

This investigation has been approved by the Department of Agriculture. It has been approved by the Federal Trade Commission. It has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget. Finally, it has been approved by the President of the United States, and is one of the measures that he desires to have passed before we adjourn.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman have any information he can give us as to how nearly caught up with its work the Federal Trade Commission is, so that it can be determined when they will be able to go to work on this proposition?

Mr. WARREN. I can inform the gentleman that the Federal Trade Commission has stated that if this resolution is passed they are ready to undertake it as early as possible.

Mr. McFARLANE. Well, what does that mean?

Mr. WARREN. This fall, I am quite sure.

Some experts have said that processors and distributors receive $11.50 out of each consumer's $19 food bill. This inquiry is merely to ascertain the facts and find out who gets the consumer's dollar. I think it is proper and I think the House ought to pass it.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. In addition to protecting the consumer's interests, the gentleman is also interested in protecting the producer?

Mr. WARREN. Of course, because all investigations show that the producer gets an infinitesimal part of what is finally charged the consumer. We wish to be told the reason for the terrific spread, and why commodities produced below the cost of production are sold to consumers at excessive prices.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. Will this investigation be broad enough to ascertain the difference between the price that the farmer receives and the price that is paid by the ultimate consumer?

Mr. WARREN. Absolutely.

Mr. FULMER. In other words, today we are shipping vegetables and fruits to the various centers of the country and in a great many instances the farmers are not getting the actual expense of gathering the fruits and vegetables, and in the meantime the consumer is paying extremely high prices.

Mr. WARREN. I am familiar with the situation that the gentleman from South Carolina is now describing. I can assure the gentleman there is full provision for that investigation under the terms of this resolution.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SIROVICH. The Federal Trade Commission at the present time is doing the finest kind of work of any commission, but the Budget Director as well as Congress has cut the appropriation of the Federal Trade Commission from $2,000,000 to $1,400,000. Have we given them enough money to be able to do the work which this bill will require?

Mr. WARREN. They think they can do it with this $150,000. As I stated before, it is one of the few instances where the Director of the Budget has approved funds for an investigation of this nature.

Mr. SIROVICH. I am in full sympathy with the resolution, but I should like to see sufficient funds available so that the work can be properly done.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. Has the gentleman received any assurance from the Federal Trade Commission when they will take up this work? They are so far behind in their other work that by the time we get this information it will be of no value to us.

Mr. WARREN. A member of the Federal Trade Commission told me he was sure they could begin work in a few months.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. I understood the original resolution called for $50,000. This calls for $150,000.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct. After further investigation it was found that it would require $150,000, and the Senate passed it in that form, and I accepted it with that modification.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this proposed investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. I introduced a similar resolution demanding in particular an investigation by a select committee of the House of Representatives of the high prices of meat and edible meat products and the spread in prices between the producer and the consumer. I want to insist that the Senate resolution be amended so we may lay special emphasis upon a condition that is quite apparent to us all. In other words, I believe that since the pot is boiling in connection with the meat question the Federal Trade Commission should go into this question first and do so immediately; I propose to offer an amendment to the Senate joint resolution which will direct the Federal Tradè Commission to comply with the dictum of the House.

There is very little question about the fact that the spread in prices at this time is not justified. I want, moreover, to make clear to the Members of the House that we are all interested, that unless this thing is stifled immediately these meat strikes and disturbances on the part of housewives, who justly rebel against being gouged, will spread to your own localities, and to the principal cities in this country. It is manifestly clear that there has been a price differential between some of the smaller cities and towns as compared with the large industrial cities. This is so because there is an opportunity for gouging the residents, the consumers of the metropolitan areas. So I feel it is timely for me to state, Mr. Speaker, that this spontaneous uprising, this rebellion against this unconscionable price rise is not confined to any one element, faction, or group, or nationality. It is not a question of communism or paid agitators, as was intended to be conveyed to the House by the speech made by the gentleman from Missouri in the Well of the House. But, regardless of who the objectors are, regardless of whether Communists have joined in protesting against the high prices, the fact remains that Communists like the rest of us eat meat and other food products and, therefore, have a right to object when they believe prices are excessive. I hold no brief for communism, make no mistake about that.

I think this matter should be considered very carefully and entirely upon its merits. I am sure the Members of the House will agree with me that the amendment I intend to propose should be adopted, that is, placing particular emphasis upon the needs of the moment and special and immediate treatment of the meat question. The investigation should begin in Detroit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. This is a Senate joint resolution and if we adopt any amendment it will have to go back to the Senate and there is the danger that perhaps the bill may not be passed.

Mr. DINGELL. I agree with the gentleman, but I believe that the Senate conferees will accept the amendment and the resolution in its amended form will pass in both Houses.

Mr. SABATH. Still, it will have to go back to the Senate for further action.

Mr. DINGELL. The Senate, I am certain, will agree to such an amendment.

Mr. SABATH. That may be so, but time is getting very limited.

Mr. DINGELL. If my amendment is adopted I understand, of course, it will require a conference, but I am sure the Senate will agree to accept the provisions of the amendment I have in mind.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. I think what the gentleman has in mind will be accomplished by the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DINGELL. It will, but it will take too much time, to satisfy me. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM].

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allowed to me I desire to call to the attention of the Members of the House the facts concerning this proposed resolution.

I am reliably informed that no hearings were held and no testimony was introduced before the Senate or the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House relative to this measure. Not a single witness appeared nor a scintilla of evidence offered in support of this proposal. This rule was preemptorily issued. The only statement that was given before the Rules Committee on the adopting of this rule was made by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who said the potato industry demanded this investigation. Since that time potatoes have been made a basic commodity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the urgency and necessity for such a resolution as herein proposed has been eliminated.

What is the purpose of this resolution? It is true that there is a differential between what the farmer receives for his product and what the consumer ultimately pays, but it is also manifestly true that very many elements enter into this equation which must necessarily be considered before the price of any commodity can be definitely determined.

For a number of years, according to the report submitted by the committee, this differential has greatly increased. However, on due consideration and study we find many factors enter into this question which occasions this so-called "spread." During the last 15 or 20 years considerable developments and improvements have occurred in the handling and processing of food products. Transportation facilities have greatly increased. The highly developed refrigeration service which the industry today enjoys and the rise in wage levels and the improvement in working conditions play an important part in this differential. The increase in taxes are a major consideration in this computation.

This, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, is the cause for the difference between the price paid the producer of the raw material and the ultimate cost which the consumer is compelled to pay for the processed article.

I am as anxious as anybody in the Chamber to determine the real facts in this matter, and I suggest that this resolution be re-referred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee with the request to have a full and complete hearing. Summon the necessary witnesses; ascertain the facts, rather than on the eve of adjournment to present a resolution of this character asking the appropriation of $150,000 to conduct an investigation.

I desire to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that during this session just concluding we have passed measures necessitating the expenditure of huge sums of money in our attempt to break this depression and restore the country to normalcy. We have passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the work relief appropriation bill, the flood-control bill, and many others, and the gains we have made in the restoration of confidence and employment to the people of America must be maintained and held at all cost.

But the question which must necessarily be the concern of every Member of the House is, "Who is going to pay the taxes for all these tremendous projects?"

We must look to industry and business for this solution. The industries of the country must absorb the large army of the unemployed. We must take the people off the dole and return them to lucrative occupation if we are to restore prosperity to the Nation.

We have had 8 months of continuous session. The uncertainty which prevails during a congressional session, relative to the various enterprises of the country, will not be dispelled or dislodged if during the interim we are going to permit Federal investigations to constantly harass and annoy the industries of the Nation and prevent them from returning to their normal production in the flow and exchange of commerce.

We are going to erect a screen of hesitancy and doubt and impair in a great manner the progress we have already made.

Every lawyer knows that in the organic act creating the Federal Trade Commission the power to investigate was therein conferred. They need no appropriation of $150,000, such as this resolution contains. Why, then, the necessity of appropriating this large sum of money at a time when the Federal Treasury can ill afford to bear that burden?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the following paragraph, appearing on page 2 of the resolution:

> Whereas it is charged that said various middlemen, warehousemen, processors, manufacturers, packers, handlers, and others have violated the various antitrust laws of the United States; that they have burdened, restricted, and restrained interstate and foreign commerce and adversely affected the volume and price of farm products moving in intrastate and foreign commerce.

Since the N. R. A. Act was declared unconstitutional the antitrust laws on the statute books are back in operation and there is sufficient power in the governmental agencies which exist at the present time to investigate, if such an investigation is warranted. I submit they have ample power under existing law without the passage of this resolution and an authorization for $150,000.

I appeal to the Members of the House to stabilize business if we are to take up the existing slack in unemployment and get men off the dole.

We have to restore confidence to industry. We cannot continue to impede and restrain the industrial enterprises of the country by Federal investigations and Federal authorizations for inquisitions such as is attempted by this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, during the last two terms that I have been a Member of Congress I have found that the Membership of the House is made up of reasonable men. Men who are honest and sincere; men who have worked hard to bring about recovery to this whole Nation. I have found myself, together with my colleagues from other industrial districts, voting for corn bills, for hog bills, for bills to help the Indians, and the farmers who have suffered from fires out there in the West, and bills to help flood sufferers. We have voted for all those things that did not affect our district directly, but we had an interest in the whole country. The Members representing agricultural districts have likewise voted to help us in the industrial districts. We have tried to work together and I think we have accomplished something. We have increased the purchasing power of the farmer. The Members from industrial districts realize that is a necessary element to prosperity and recovery. They realize that we have to increase the purchasing power of the farmers and we have given full 100-percent cooperation in that respect.

What is happening now? The program of recovery, as far as the farmer is concerned, is liable to be destroyed. Why? Because of the legislation that we have passed? No. Not because of what we have done here but because of the profiteering and gouging of certain middlemen, processors, warehousemen, packers, and others on food, which is a necessity to the consumer. This is what is going to destroy the relief program for the farmer. The consumer is going to rebel.

Let us look at the facts and figures. The consumer in 1932 paid out over $19,000,000,000, of which the farmer received $7,500,000,000. Any reasonable man will say there is something wrong there. We have had a like experience during the war. We know that certain people who work in between the farmer and the consumer are interested in profits and unless you can regulate them or unless you can watch them and supervise their actions they are going to bleed the last dime out of the consumer. The farmer does not get it and the consumer knows he has been wronged.

Mr. Speaker, in my district I had 5,000 women meet out in the park just about three blocks from my office protesting against these high prices. There is no reason for these high prices on meat. I know and you know there is no processing tax on beef. The price of beef has not gone up unreasonably high so far as the price paid to the farmer is concerned. You can still buy cows at 4½ cents. There is no excuse for beef going up to 40 or 50 cents a pound.

The cost of marketing has not gone up so high. The price of meat has increased in some cases 350 percent to the consumer in these various cities. There is something wrong. For years we have tried to get an investigation of this kind, but always the packers and the middlemen have been able to defeat these resolutions. I was raised on a farm and I know something about a farm. I used to shuck corn, cut sugarcane, dig sweetpotatoes, milk the cows, and feed the pigs. I know something about the farmer's problem.

I represent an industrial district. I am representing the consumers today, and this is of interest both to the consumer and to the farmer. Their future is at stake under this bill.

The Federal Trade Commission is one of the most useful, most efficient, and hardest-working commissions in the Federal Government. Judge Ewin Davis, the Chairman of the Commission, spent 14 years in Congress, and is personally acquainted with the problems that face the Nation today. I know that you will agree with me that there is no department or commission that we would rather have look after this most important investigation than the Federal Trade Commission. There is no department in the Federal Government that can give us facts and figures on the amount of tribute that is levied by the packers and processors against the farmer and the cnosumer for handling food products.

It is true that the Agriculture Department can furnish us with reports on the packers; but of what value are they? How do they arrive at these figures? Well, I will tell you. The packers send their own reports to the Agriculture Department, made up by the packers' own auditors and attorneys. That report is then submitted from the Agriculture Department to the Members of Congress. We are entitled to know the facts.

Profiteering on luxuries is one thing, but profiteering on food, which is a necessity for every human being, is another. This cannot be tolerated.

The last appropriation bill passed by the House yesterday, of course, did not contain the appropriation for this investigation. The Appropriations Committee cannot make the appropriation until the resolution has been signed by the President. I sincerely hope that the House will speedily pass this resolution, and I shall make it my personal business to bring it to the attention of the President for signature, so that we can include it in the appropriation bill before it leaves the Senate and comes back to the House for final approval.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry we did not have hearings on this resolution, because I know the hearings would have been very illuminating, but to anyone who has been closely allied with the farm industry and the food industry of this country during the past 15 years, it is not necessary for that particular individual to have any hearings to realize the necessity for this resolution and for this investigation. There is a necessity for it for three reasons: One in the interest of the consumer, one in the interest of the producer and middleman group, and the other in the interest of the growers of agricultural, or what you may term "food" products.

If you will take the balance sheets and the operating statements of the food processors and distributors of this country you will find that without exception the lower in the scale of living the farmer goes, the higher the net profits of the processors and the middlemen handling the food products grown by the farmer. This is such A B C stuff to the man in the business who watches these things that it hardly needs to be questioned at all.

Our colleague the gentleman from Illinois asked the question a while ago, Who is to pay the taxes? Here is a little tax statement which was paid by a farmer just a short time ago, and his rate of taxation is $20.90 per $1,000, or $2.09 per $100. How do you expect this man to pay these taxes, and I am referring only to State and county and State school and university taxes? Where the property is worth $5,000, he is paying $533 a year, provided he can get it. This is an illustration of what our charges are going to.

If your municipalities are to be maintained and your States maintained and your counties maintained, the man on the farm will have to pay taxes. He must get the money with which to pay taxes from the sale of his labor in the form of the products which he delivers from his farm.

There is too much of the consumer's dollar going to the processor, the warehouseman, the commission man, and the broker. If you do not believe this, you come to my office here in Washington and I will show you my own records, where, as a processor and as one engaged in that part of our industrial activities, I can show you evidence you cannot dispute.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In just a moment.

Then, I will show you cost statements and financial statements of other processors who are competitors of mine, and I will show you some of the rigging done, and what is the reason I said awhile ago that this investigation should be made to protect the processor and the middleman and the warehouseman and the broker from some of the things that he is doing? Here is something for us to think about as Republicans and as Democrats. It is something I have thought about a great deal. Why is it that in 1930 and 1931 and 1932, when we had in this country the highest protective duties in our history, the scale of living of the agricultural worker dropped to its lowest ebb?

Somebody answer that for me—not now, but answer it next January or February or March. It is one thing to pass protective laws—and when I say protective laws, I mean tariff laws—it is another thing to make such tariff protection effective down into the pocketbooks and the living standards of the man in whose name the protection was granted, whether it be the farmer or the factory worker. This is something for us to think about.

Now, we may start an investigation of this kind and find that we have high protection on goods that might come in against the farmer, but we may find that all of the protection and all of the benefits are going to the processors and those who operate on the food products which the farmer grows.

Now, do not misunderstand me. The farmer must have factories in which his goods may be processed. He must have an exchange machine, and I am not one who believes in destroying the factories or who believes in destroying the exchange machine, but I am one who believes that the farmer is entitled to his fair share of the consumer's dollar paid for food.

I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am very much in sympathy with this legislation and I think we all agree that the differential is too great between the producer and the consumer, punishing probably everybody between, but will the gentleman tell the House, in the event that after this investigation is made the Commission finds all of the conditions to be as bad as the gentleman can imagine, what is then the process or the means that this House should take in order to correct this condition, after they find things to be in such shape?

Mr. CRAWFORD. What the means will be, I do not know. It may be a different political party in charge. It may not be the same group at all. If I can believe what a lot of farmers tell me, probably we will not be here and therefore I do not know what the future legislative bodies will do.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman understands that I am sincere in the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But if the farmers of this country are to continue to pay tribute to a machine of economics which does not leave them a reasonable standard of living, compared with the standard enjoyed by the other people of our country, then I think they should probably take steps themselves to correct the situation.

Mr. NICHOLS. The thought I had in mind was that the gentleman had considered the matter far enough so he could give us an idea whether we could by legislation control the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think we can control it, without any question whatsoever, within the provisions of our Constitution as it stands at the present time.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Believing that there is a wide differential, the point is this. We have enacted legislation for the processors and the manufacturing group Nation-wide. Why cannot we enact the same kind of legislation and give the producers of wealth an equal opportunity to live?

Mr. CRAWFORD. All the farmers want is a chance to earn and own. When his form of government, whatever it may be, will not leave to him the privilege of earning and owning, he will be down and out.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. What the gentleman is complaining about is the highway robbery that goes on between the producer and the consumer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think in a great many instances the processors are taking what might be termed "sheer loot."

Mr. FULMER. I understood the gentleman to say that he thought that the benefits of the tariff should go to the laborer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is my feeling about the matter if the protection is granted in behalf of the farm and factory workers. I have already directed the farmers in my district in this line of thought, that the protective tariff law is no good to them until the benefits of that protection are flowing into their pockets. We should not only vote for protective tariff laws but should vote and see that the benefits are carried on down.

No processor ought to object to that, because the protected industry lives by willingness of the people to let that industry be protected. When you remove the protection the protected industry is closed. If I am operating a protected industry, I should be willing that the farmer should have his fair share of the profits that come from it.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. The opponents of the resolution seem to be proceeding on the ground that the investigation might do some terrible harm to the processors. If there is nothing wrong with their operations they should have nothing to fear.

Mr. CRAWFORD. More for the benefit of the processor than the producer.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague a few minutes ago apparently seemed to be carried away by misinformation disseminated by the American Liberty League and a few other enemies of progress. He made the unfortunate statement that this and similar legislation will retard the progress of the Nation. For his benefit and for the benefit of the country I have had compiled a few figures to show that business and profits have increased from 100 percent to 500 percent since President Roosevelt was inaugurated. For instance, rails were quoted at 45 in 1932 and 87 now. Industrials 40 then and 99 now. Utilities that were so much abused 64 then and 98 now. Those figures are on bonds. In stocks, industrials were 17.5 and they are 65 now; rails were 8.7 and they are 27 now, utilities were 23 and today are 38.

Time will not permit me to direct attention to the many willful and malicious detractions on the part of a few specially organized associations, including the American Liberty League, who are expending tremendous sums of money which they have obtained from the avaricious vested interests, banking institutions, and corporations. They are continuously, in every conceivable manner, willfully and deliberately sending out misinformation, garbled reports, and misleading statements against the President and on legislation which he has been advocating. If they had the interest of the country at heart, they would be obliged to admit and concede that it was President Roosevelt who, determinedly and courageously, in the face of the utter collapse of our largest and foremost banking and financial institutions, of our leading railroads and insurance companies, and of businesses in every line, saved the country from complete destruction and financial ruin.

Mr. Speaker, the daily financial reports give the lie to the insidious propaganda that the President's policies and legislation are retarding business. The best proof of this can be found in the circular issued by the General Motors Corporation, which is in line with other circulars sent out by the big industrial leaders. In that circular they express great fear that the pending legislation, if enacted, will spell destruction. But, lo and behold, we scan the headlines of newspapers in every part of the United States and, in similar vein, read:

General Motors doubles dividends. Will disburse $32,000,000 to its stockholders.

Another headline reads:

Seven months' sales by General Motors expand 27 percent over same period in 1934.

The progress and recovery in many other lines of business is just as pronounced, as is evidenced by the headline which I quote:

Sears, Roebuck sales have 26-percent gain.

The same day an article appeared in the financial pages of one of our large cosmopolitan dailies, which I cannot take the time to read, but briefly it reported that 26 concerns, most of which suffered losses in 1931, 1932, and 1933, are on a pre-depression-dividend basis, namely, paying the same dividends as before the Republican crash of 1929.

Another heading:

Domestic rayon shipments during July rose 12 percent.

Most reassuring was the article itself, which stated that the increase in shipments was more than a seasonal gain, and that it was estimated the world rayon production during the first 6 months of this year increased about 24 percent over the corresponding period of last year.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote from 100 articles bearing on the progress in other lines appearing in the press daily recounting the wonderful progress that is being made under President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration. These articles are based on authentic financial reports and statistics, reported by licensed certified accountants, and therefore true beyond question of doubt. A comparison of these financial articles with the newspaper editorials and vicious propaganda published by these newly organized, vested-interest, antiadministration associations will strikingly show the baseless and deliberate distortion of facts and the too evident attempt to becloud in the minds of the masses the actual recovery and progress that has already set in.

I therefore repeat, it is to be deplored that these benefited industries and industrial leaders should be devoid of any honor or sense of fair play. How can they justify the expending of large sums of money taken from the treasuries of these large corporations, which belong to the stockholders, to continue their attacks against the President and the administration? They will awaken and realize that their dishonest efforts are foolhardy and will be resented and condemned by all fair-minded Americans. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, first I congratulate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM] on his statement a few moments ago with reference to condition of the Treasury, and what we should do in the conservation in expenditure of funds. I call attention to the statement made yesterday by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] chairman of Appropriations Committee that the House has appropriated during this session of Congress $10,300,000,000. Yesterday we appropriated in the deficiency appropriation bill $92,000,000, and then you know what an ordeal and scene we had in the House last night during the "pork barrel" Flood Control Committee bill consideration when we appropriated about $450,000,000 more. The fact of the matter is that we have appropriated close to $11,000,000,000 in this Congress, and when you consider the statement of the United States Treasury issued by Mr. Morgenthau, you will see that on August 15 our indebtedness was $31,000,000,000. That is $29,000,000,000 deficit plus the $2,000,000,000 that we charged off last year in gold devaluation. If the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois is not true, then I want the membership of the House to wake up, because we cannot afford to go on spending the money of the Federal Government when we have no money to spend, and when I think that the appropriations of this Congress are 50 percent more than the expenses of the Federal Government last year, I wonder what the people of the Nation think of us as Members of Congress; as a whole it must be very, very bad. Yet today there will be requests made for unanimous consent to spend millions of dollars more. If anybody is going to get away with it today, then he is going to be better than I am, because a few of us Members will stay here to stop these unanimous-consent requests, and I make this statement so that gentlemen will not come here and ask for unanimous consent for proposals costing great sums of money. I do not want to do anything detrimental to any one particular Member of the House. I have no desire to hurt any individual Member. I say that we can yet save this country from financial ruin if we will only do it. I hear Members of the House say that we have gone so far that there is no use trying to do anything to save our credit, to save our financial standing. God forbid that we have gone that far. We are going to stay here and fight to preserve it. We are going to fight until the last bell rings before we give up, and I am going to stay here every minute today and if anyone gets by with a unanimous consent request a bill that will cost the Government money that is not a worthy, meritorious project, he is going to be a dandy, unless he can give us a real honest-to-goodness reason why his bill should be passed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Where is the money coming from?

Mr. RICH. I have asked that question time and time again. There is no man in the House who will venture an answer. We put through a tax bill providing $250,000,000. The people back home are kicking on that. I say to the people back home that the Members of Congress ought to put in a tax bill here for three to five times that amount, and I warn the people back home that in 3 or 4 years it will be imperative to have a tax bill five times as great. I say to the Members of the House, for goodness' sake stop our ruthless expenditure and wastefulness in appropriation of the taxpayers' money.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that there is too much spread between prices paid to the farmer and prices paid by the consumer. All of us admit that. I believe that one of the chief reasons we have not enacted effective legislation to reduce that spread is because we do not have sufficient data and information on which to base such legislation. The Federal Trade Commission, with the adequate funds appropriated by this resolution, will be able to provide us with facts on which remedial legislation can be based.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true that during the last few years we have gone out and gathered in more information, statistical and otherwise, on which to base legislation of this kind than ever before in the past 50 years?

Mr. WITHROW. Probably so; but there is a great deal remaining to be done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LUCKEY. I am very much in sympathy with this measure. Does this resolution permit an investigation into the price of farm machinery?

Mr. WITHROW. I believe it does.

Mr. LUCKEY. The farm-machinery prices are just as high as they were during the war, and 100 percent higher than they were before the war.

Mr. WITHROW. Yes.

Mr. LUCKEY. And that is in this investigation?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes. The subject of high farm machinery prices is one in which I have been interested for some time; in fact, my resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate into that matter has been pending before the House for the past 5 years. I am hopeful that a thorough study of this matter can now be made under the resolution which we are at present considering.

With further reference to the necessity for action to protect the interests of both farmers and consumers I take the liberty of reading a portion of the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with reference to this resolution. I quote:

Under this resolution, it will be the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to analyze and allocate the costs of producing and distributing foods to the American consumer. One statistician has estimated that it cost the final consumer of five major American farm products in 1932, $19,021,000,000. That is the sum the consumer paid to the retail merchant. Of this total sum it is estimated that the farmer received but $7,566,000,000 and that it cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $11,500,000,000 to get the farmer's products to the consumer. The distressing part of this situation is that apparently the farmer is getting a smaller and smaller share of the consumer's dollar. For example, it is estimated that—

"In 1928 the farmer got 47 cents of the consumer's dollar; the distributor and processor 53 cents. It has been stated from all authoritative sources that in 1931, before the depression had gotten under full way, only 2 years later, the farmer got 38 cents out of the consumer's dollar, instead of 47 cents, while the processor and distributor got 62 cents. Stepping up again to 1932, just 12 months later, the farmer got only 33 cents, while the distributor and processor got 67 cents. In other words, from 1929 to 1932 the share of the farmer fell from 47 cents out of the dollar to 33 cents. Now, if you multiply that by billions, you get an indication of the colossal slump in agricultural income and the colossal increase in the distributor's share. This downward drift has been reversed to some extent in 1933 and 1934. In November 1933 the farmer got 36 cents of the consumer's dollar, while the distributor and processor got 64 cents. In January of this year, 1934, the farmer's share is again 36 cents of the consumer's dollar."

It is of interest to note that if the gross farm income is in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, each one of the citizens of the United States pays the farmer a little less than a dollar a week for his entire food supply. On the other hand, he pays to the distributors and processors of this food supply almost $2 a week.

Charges have been made that the processors and distributors of food supplies, now largely united in huge combines, have attained their present greatness in part by consistently watering their capital structure. Statements have also been made that some of these concerns could not show an original cash investment reaching company coffers of more than 10 percent of their present capitalization and that this position applies with equal force to the oldest and newest of the food combines, while the demand is insistent that dividends be paid not only upon the cash actually invested in the company but upon all watered stock as well. While the farmer got less, many of the food concerns handling his output paid larger dividends and larger salaries and larger bonuses to their officials throughout the depression.

It is the purpose of this resolution to study and ascertain the facts. The resolution calls for an explanation of the method and devices used by such corporations for obtaining and maintaining their alleged control of the farm commodities. It would expose the extent to which fraudulent and unfair methods are employed in the grading and warehousing of these products. It would study the question of whether there is price fixing and manipulation of prices as charged on the commodity exchanges. Finally, the resolution would call for a report upon remedies. It directs the Federal Trade Commission to report on the extent to which cooperative agencies have entered into the processing and marketing of farm products and to the extent which other countries have adopted or promoted marketing agencies of a public or cooperative sort for the simplification and cheapening of processing and distribution charges.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 9, authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I should like to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the 1 hour of general debate, and let the bill be read under the 5-minute rule. There will be plenty of time to discuss the bill under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 9, with Mr. ARNOLD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the decline in agricultural income and the unsatisfactory condition of agriculture and of those engaged therein is a matter of increasing concern to the Congress, and affects the general welfare of the Nation and its citizens; and

Whereas in recent years the agricultural income has decreased while the earnings and profits of concerns processing or dealing in certain lines of farm products have increased or declined only moderately; and

Whereas there has developed an increasingly large proportionate spread between the prices received by the farmer for his products and the prices paid therefor by the consumer; and

Whereas, according to the latest statistics of income published by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, 22 large corporations reported making over 45 percent of the gross sales of all corporations engaged in the processing and manufacture of food products in 1931, and 102 large corporations reported making 60 percent of the gross sales of such corporations; and

Whereas it is charged that monopolistic, oppressive, and unfair methods and practices of various middlemen, warehousemen, processors, manufacturers, packers, and handlers are in whole or in part responsible for the conditions above described, and that wasteful and uneconomic methods have contributed toward bringing about these conditions; and

Whereas it is charged that said various middlemen, warehousemen, processors, manufacturers, packers, handlers, and others have violated the various antitrust laws of the United States, that they have burdened, restricted, and restrained interstate and foreign commerce and adversely affected the volume and price of farm products moving in intrastate and foreign commerce; and

Whereas it is charged that many lines of processing, warehousing, and/or dealing in farm products are so dominated by a handful of large concerns as to impede the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce to the detriment of both the farmer and the consumer; and

Whereas it is charged that through the payment of high and excessive salaries and other devices said middlemen, warehousemen, processors, manufacturers, packers, and others escape just taxation by the United States, that said salaries tend unduly to diminish the tax revenues of the United States and tend to burden and restrain interstate and foreign commerce in farm products, and to divert and conceal the earnings and profits of the concerns paying said salaries, and that by various devices those receiving said salaries escape their just share of Federal taxation; and

Whereas it is believed that the Congress should consider whether new legislation should be enacted or existing legislation amended on any of the subjects hereinbefore described and in aid thereof should be informed on all of said subjects: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report at the next session of Congress—

First. (1) The extent of the decline in agricultural income in recent years, including the amount and percentage of such decline;

(2) The extent of the increases or decreases in recent years in the income of the principal corporations engaged in the sale, manufacturing, warehousing and/or processing of the principal farm products, and of the other principal sellers, manufacturers, warehousemen, and/or processors of the principal farm products, as compared with the decline in agricultural income, including the amount and percentage of such changes; and

(3) The proportion of total consumer cost of representative products manufactured or processed from the principal farm products which is represented by the proceeds received by (a) the farmer, (b) the manufacturers, processors, and warehousemen, and (c) the distributors and such principal farm products and such representative products manufactured therefrom.

Second. The financial position of the principal corporations engaged in the manufacturing, processing, warehousing, distribution, and marketing of the representative major products manufactured from such principal farm products, including—

(1) The capitalization and assets of such corporations and the means and sources of the growth of such capitalization and assets;

(2) The investment, costs, profits, and rates of return of such corporations;

(3) The salaries of the officers of such companies; and

(4) The extent to which said corporations avoid income taxes, if at all, and the extent to which officers receiving such salaries paid income taxes thereon.

Third. The extent of concentration of control and of monopoly in the manufacturing, processing, warehousing, distribution, and marketing of representative major farm products which is maintained or has been obtained by any corporation or other organization, including—

(1) Methods and devices used by such corporations for obtaining and maintaining their control or monopoly of the manufacturing, marketing, processing, warehousing, and distribution of such commodities, and the proportion of any such major farm commodity handled by each of the large units involved; and

(2) The extent to which fraudulent, dishonest, unfair, and injurious methods are employed in the grading, warehousing, and transportation of such farm products, including combinations, monopolies, price fixing, and manipulation of prices on the commodity exchanges.

Fourth. The extent to which the cooperative agencies have entered into the processing, warehousing, and marketing of representative major farm products and the general effects of such cooperative agencies upon the producer and consumer.

Fifth. The extent to which other countries have adopted or promoted processing, warehousing, and marketing agencies of a public, quasi-public, or cooperative sort for the simplification and cheapening of the processing, warehousing, and marketing of agricultural products, and other administrative agencies which may have been set up for the protection of the farmer-producer and the consumer.

Sixth. Any conclusions and/or recommendations with regard to increasing the income of farm producers or other recommendations with regard to the improvement of the economic position of farmers or consumers growing out of the inquiry.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have not taken a great deal of the time of this House in discussing measures that have been pending. I am interested in this particular piece of legislation and doubtless every Member of the House is. The home owners and the farmers are the foundation stones upon which we must build the future. Ordinarily I do not favor appropriations of this kind, because, as a rule, they result in a waste of the taxpayers' money, largely. But this is an important investigation, if it is effectively conducted, as I have no doubt it will be, in the interest of fairness to the producer and likewise to the consumer.

By way of parenthesis I want to agree with some of the things that have been said with reference to the expenses of Government in this present session of Congress. I share the conviction that we are spending too much of the taxpayers' money by virtue of the appropriations we have made. This should cease.

I wish to be permitted to call the attention of the House to a bill (H. R. 8385) which I introduced on the 6th of June, and upon which I have been unable to secure a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations up until this time. It is on all fours with the present proposed legislation. It affects the farmer, the manufacturer, the consumer, and every citizen of America. The bill would do nothing more nor less than provide a stabilization employment fund. The measure contemplates the setting up of such an agency by the President, in the sum of $1,000,000,000 of the $4,000,000,000 heretofore appropriated to loan to business and to private industry and to the farmers and others in America. It is germane in considering this particular resolution, because the farmers of America complain today that the relief measure takes from them many of the laborers they could otherwise employ. The passage of this bill would remedy that. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to be permitted to insert it in the RECORD at this point. It is a short bill, of only two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The bill referred to is as follows:

A bill to promote increased employment and stimulate industry

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Resolution No. 11 of the Seventy-fourth Congress (H. J. Res. 117) (making appropriation for relief purposes) be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"That $1,000,000,000 of the funds appropriated in the above-referred-to joint resolution be, and the same is hereby, allocated to the President of the United States to be used in the creation of a stabilization employment fund.

"SEC. 2. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to contract with any private employer or employers who meet the terms and agreements prescribed by the President to employ such additional employees at prevailing wages, with the express agreement that the said employer or employers shall be reimbursed by the President of the United States from the above-referred-to Stabilization Unemployment Fund, such financial loss as said employer or employers shall have suffered in the payment of wages, and which loss is proven to be directly accountable to said increased employment."

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Of this fund the money would be made available to the producers, to industry, to private business, and to anybody else engaged in business who would employ additional helpers or workers.

The President by the bill would be authorized to encourage industry of all kinds by taking men from the relief rolls and off the dole, putting them again into private business. It would result in taking the Government out of business. It would encourage the taxpayers, who are forced to bear the burdens and expense of government. The measure authorizes the President to set up a stabilization employment board and have the business men of America, the farmers, and all others who would avail themselves of its provisions, go to those in charge of the relief work and take from the rolls those now employed in such work as the Government has found for them to do, much of which is a complete loss, and to again employ them on the farm, in the store, the mill, or factory. It would enable these men to again earn their own living. They would be kept for a period of, say, 12 months, and paid the prevailing wage scale that others receive for similar work in that community; and if at the end of 12 months the employer, when he makes out his income-tax report or other sworn statement, shows he has incurred a loss by reason of the extra help employed, the Government would then reimburse him to the extent of the loss incurred due to such extra employment. If he makes a profit, then everybody would be happy and the taxpayers would be saved a loss they are now certain to sustain if this bill is not enacted.

Men who are again reemployed in private industry and business will become better and more useful citizens in the future. They will become once again independent and sovereign. They will have regained confidence in themselves. They will have acquired the habit of making their own living and be again free and independent from charity.

Many prominent business leaders throughout the country have endorsed the bill. A number of newspapers have advocated its passage. The chambers of commerce in different cities of the United States have requested copies of the bill and have by resolution endorsed its provisions. Prominent members of the Cabinet, leaders in both the House and Senate, have endorsed it. There seems to be universal approval of its provisions. The R. F. C. could be designated by the President to enforce its provisions and afford the mechanics of its enforcement. The cost would be small compared with the loss that will be sustained by the taxpayers if it is not enacted. I think the President has the authority, under the provisions of the unemployment-relief bill, as it passed the House and Senate, to direct at this time the use of these funds, or such amount as he sees fit, out of the $4,000,000,000 already appropriated. I do not think the passage of my bill is necessary except it would make it mandatory on the President to so apply the funds which I know would be most heartening and encouraging to the business world. I know it would help industry. I know it will improve business. I know it will encourage the taxpayers, and I am equally certain it will encourage the unfortunate men and women of America who are now forced to be on the dole and who would be happy to once again take their places along with their fellows in private industry and employment. They would again enjoy the fruits of their own labor. Nothing is so helpful or inspiring as the dignity of honest toil. It is in keeping with the Divine command, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work" and "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." Happiness alone comes as a result of honest toil in whatever field of endeavor we may be placed. Let us make this available to our unfortunate brothers in this hour of their distress and anxiety.

If, as a result of H. R. 8385, we increase manufactured goods, as will be the result, then I have introduced a companion bill, H. R. 7838, which seeks to provide a foreign market as an outlet for our products of all kinds. This bill would authorize the erection of suitable market places in which manufacturers, exporters, producers, and growers of American products may exhibit same, solicit and fill orders in foreign countries. These market places would be erected in such countries only as the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Agriculture agree there is a prospective export business to justify the same. Such market places, when erected, would be leased by the Government to the manufacturers and exporters where their products and the merchandise would be exhibited. The rental coming to the Government out of the stalls or booths so erected would retire the investment in a few years, and then suitable steps could be taken if desired by Congress, to convey the market places to those who had previously rented and profited by the same. The Government would then move out of the picture and private industry step in.

I think these two bills would be helpful to all America at this time and I am most anxious to have the provisions of same become the law. I regret that the committee to whom the bills were referred have refused to grant me a hearing on same after repeated efforts on my part to have them do so. I do not doubt that the passage of these measures would result in the saving of millions of dollars and the improvement of business generally throughout the country. Certainly they would be a relief to the distressed taxpayer, who has now become the forgotten man. He is entitled to our consideration, and we should come to his relief at this time.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, my good friend, Mr. BEAM, a few minutes ago. The gentleman from Illinois represents one of the largest meat-packing districts in the United States.

When we held hearings on the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the bill that I introduced in Congress, representatives of these packers appeared before the Agricultural Committee opposing the bill, especially the processing tax. Certainly everybody knows that the tax has not been paid by the packer or processor of hogs. Meat packers, cotton mills, and other processors, however, regardless as to whether they have made the producer or consumer pay these taxes, are now claiming that they have paid these taxes, and many of them are now suing the Government to recover millions of dollars that, if illegally collected, belong to producers and consumers, and not the meat packers, cotton mills, and other processors.

Not only the meat packers and textile industry but all handlers of farm products opposed the bill at the time of its passage, and they have continued to complain, keeping the newspapers full of propaganda against the processing tax, the farmers' tariff.

The people whom the gentleman from Illinois represents should be demanding this legislation, and their Congressman should be fighting for its passage, instead of trying to defeat the bill.

I have challenged the propaganda put out by the representatives of these processing industries and the statements made here on the floor of this House by the representatives of the New England textile mills, who have been making complaints, almost daily, in line with the propaganda carried in the press.

I quote from a speech made by me April 24, during this session:

> It has been charged on the floor of the House during the past few weeks by those representing the New England textile mills and by the gentleman who preceded me, Mr. FISH, of New York, that the processing tax is destroying the textile mills of New England and of the South. Prior to 1933 we had no processing tax, yet many of the textile mills of New England and of the South commenced to slow down and close their factories. I would be glad if the gentleman will tell me why these mills closed at that time.
> Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?
> Mr. FULMER. I will be glad to have the gentleman answer the question.
> Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I say to the gentleman that I will be glad to participate in any investigation which will go thoroughly into the cotton-textile industry as a whole, including the growing of cotton. I would not want the investigation to be so long delayed that when we get a report there will be no textile industry left. Does the gentleman not agree with me?
> Mr. FULMER. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to have a thorough investigation, and we should have it promptly.
> Mr. Chairman, the time has come for a showdown, and I am willing to go to the last ditch in a thorough investigation from every angle that applies to the whole problem. This administration is entitled to the facts in that, as stated, much misinformation is being carried to the country by the press, by form letters, and even books that are now being printed on this subject. I am sure that our great President, who is leading this country out of poverty and misery with every possible opposition against him by the very people that are responsible for the serious condition that was brought about under a Republican administration, wants the real facts. The Congress of the United States and the people of this country are entitled to know the facts.

I have been a producer of farm products all of my life and have been engaged in buying and selling farm products for many years. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the thing that producers need today more than anything else is an up-to-date marketing and distributing system. This would also be a tremendous help to consumers. It is my belief that the only way we will be able to get legislation to bring this about is by having this investigation. You need not worry about General Motors or any other well-organized and well-financed group. They have an up-to-date marketing and distributing system. They are able to properly market, distribute, and fix prices. They are able to secure fair prices and make profits regardless of what becomes of producers and consumers.

Farmers, many of them, know nothing about proper grading, where the demands are, or the responsibility of the handlers of their products in markets other than their home markets.

We have been passing agricultural legislation, largely emergency measures, since the election of Mr. Roosevelt. Many of these bills have been very helpful, but none of them can succeed and become lasting unless we have a proper grading, marketing, and distributing system.

I have been urging this for a number of years, and I am glad to see this move for an investigation to ascertain the facts in connection with this problem, so that the Congress may be able to pass legislation to remedy this sad and serious situation. When we talk about doing things for farmers in line with what all well-organized groups are doing to protect their interests, we find many Members in accord, but they state, "Let the farmers do it."

You know and I know that farmers have never been able to organize, and I venture to state that they never will be, therefore, they are unable to do these things.

All industrial and business groups are able to and they do increase or decrease their business in line with economic conditions and based on demand, for their products, but not so with farmers. All industrial and business groups are well posted as to the economic conditions, the trend of business, and, as stated, they govern themselves accordingly. This is not true with the great masses of producers. In the meanwhile, producers of agricultural products have everything beneath the earth, on top of the earth as well as above the earth to contend with, and are unable from month to month to tell just what will be harvested when the harvest period arrives. If farmers produce a short crop and prices are good, they have not the products and there is no way on the face of the earth to increase their output like industry and business. If farmers are blessed with a good crop, prices are usually low and these products pass on into the hands of processors, speculators, and middlemen and they are unable to reap the reward that belongs to those who sweat blood during long hours to feed and clothe the world. In the meantime, as stated, the shorter the crop, the higher the price to the helpless consumer, and when farm prices are low, because of a good crop, it means but little to the consumer, who has to pay the price fixed by processors, speculators, and middlemen.

There are many things that can be done along constructive lines that would help farmers and that would tend to cut the price on farm products to consumers. However, as stated on many occasions on the floor of the House, those of us who are interested in doing these things cannot get by on account of so many Members apparently being more interested in these well-organized groups than they are in farmers and consumers, and, as stated, we are always confronted with the advice from many Members, "Let the farmers do it."

For a number of years I have been trying to pass a "net-weight bill" which would save millions annually for farmers producing cotton in freights and other waste. This legislation would permit the using of cotton bagging instead of old jute bagging that is imported from India, but we have too many Members from the South not concerned and too many Members representing the Jute Trust opposing this legislation. This legislation is endorsed by farmers, agricultural commissioners, co-ops, cotton merchants, textile mills; and this week the President's committee appointed to investigate the complaints of the New England textile mills, in their report, endorses "net-weight basis" in selling cotton. I am wondering what you are going to do about this next January, when I call upon you to support the passage of this bill.

I have a bill pending with the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and it has been pending for several years, proposing to bring about high density gin compression in baling cotton. This would cut freight rates and warehouse charges considerably, all of which would help producers and consumers; but I am unable to even get a hearing thereon. I am hoping that this investigation will cover all of these matters, including discriminatory freight rates against the South, and that the report will be so convincing that it will enable me to get favorable action on these important bills.

I tell you, gentlemen, the position of producers and consumers is pitiful, and it is a disgrace on the part of the Congress and the Government of this country to permit the highway robbery that is now going on somewhere between the producer and the consumer that has been and is forcing producers and consumers into such circumstances that they are not able to enjoy the many good things that they are entitled to or even live on an American standard of living.

I want to tell you, my friends, that something will have to be done to remedy this unfair and intolerable situation. We have had many labor strikes, and farmers and consumers are going to follow suit unless they are permitted to receive that which they are clearly entitled to—that is, fair prices, fair returns for their labor, their rightful place in the picture. If this, which appears to be their last resort, is the only means whereby they will be able to get a square deal, you can rest assured that serious problems are facing those of us who are entrusted with passing legislation, both State and National.

My people have been and are producing not only major crops but the finest quality of fruits and vegetables, but why should they continue under the treatment that they are now receiving at the hands of those who operate between them and the consumer? I constantly receive letters from producers and shippers of farm products complaining about unfair prices and that in a great many instances, instead of receiving a check, they are called upon to pay the freight. I know what I am talking about; as stated, I am a producer and a shipper. With all the experience I have had in shipping farm products I find myself just as helpless as any other farmer or shipper under the present marketing and distributing system.

Let me give you just one example. I want to refer to a shipment of beautiful honeydew melons shipped to a commission merchant here in Washington.

You know what honeydews have been costing the consumer here in Washington. Many of you know from your own experience in buying for your own homes. Take a look at these invoices:

[Specialists in fruits and vegetables. Quick sales and prompt returns]

Received, Washington, D. C., 10:30 a. m. July 24, 1935.
Sold for account of H. P. FULMER, 110 Maryland Avenue NE.

35 crates honeydews		$22.75
Charges:
Express	$18.20
Commission	2.28
		20.48
Net proceeds (check enclosed)		2.27

Important: Always mail us notice the day you make shipment.

[Specialists in fruits and vegetables. Quick sales and prompt returns]

Received, Washington, D. C., July 25, 1935.
Sold for account of H. P. FULMER, 110 Maryland Avenue NE.

45 crates honeydews		$29.75
Charges:
Express	$23.40
Commission	2.98
		26.38
Net proceeds (check enclosed)		3.37

Important: Always mail us notice the day you make shipment. Practically no demand for honeydews now.

These 80 crates contained 12 nice honeydews to the crate—960 honeydews. You know that they have been selling for from 15 to 35 cents apiece to the consumer, but let us say an average of 20 cents. At 20 cents, this shipment would have amounted to $192. You will note that the express on 80 crates amounted to $41.60 and the commission $5.86, a total of $47.46. In other words, I paid $47.46 for express and commission charges on these shipments and received only $5.86 net, while the consumer paid $192 for the 960 honeydews.

We grow the finest watermelons to be found anywhere; but when the freight and commission for selling are paid, the farmer very often does not receive enough to pay him for gathering and loading the melons, and, as stated, in some instances he is called upon for a part of the freight.

No wonder farmers are losing their homes, their religion, and filling untimely graves. In the meantime, no wonder the consumers are going on strike.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, 7 years ago Professor Dodd, then of Chicago but now in the Diplomatic Service, wrote an article that created quite a stir in this country. The article was entitled "Must the American Farmer Pass to Peasantry?" It was published in the Century Magazine and was thoroughly read and discussed by those interested in farm problems. At that time he pointed out that the processors, the transportation lines, and the men who controlled the avenues through which the products flowed to the consumers were increasing the amount of money taken for these services and that ultimately the farmer would arrive at a point where he would be a peasant. Then he pointed out that the profits of the middleman had been constantly increasing, year by year. His predictions have come true. Many fear the American farmer is on the road to peasantry.

The most astonishing current statement we have is an article appearing in the August number of Harper's, entitled "Chemistry Wrecks the Farmer." I am wondering if the predictions there made will prove as true as those made by Professor Dodd 7 or 8 years ago.

Undoubtedly the farmer is sinking, largely, I think, because the fellow who controls the marketing of his product, the transportation lines, the taxgatherer, and the middlemen are constantly exacting a larger share of the consumer's dollar spent for agricultural products.

The figures given in the report on this bill showing the number of cents out of the consumer's dollar given to the farmer and to the middlemen will be found to vary somewhat from the figures of other statisticans, but it is admitted generally that the amount of money the farmer is getting out of the consumer's dollar has been constantly decreasing. For the last 2 years his share has been advancing, owing to the operation of the A. A. A.

I am very anxious to see this resolution passed and this money appropriated for this investigation. I am an actual farmer living on my farm. I have seen the cost of transporting a bushel of wheat from my ranch to tidewater increase since the boys went into the World War from 9 cents to 15 cents. I have seen warehouse charges on wheat increase from 50 cents a ton to $1 a ton. Everything the farmer buys has gone up; especially and most inexcusably, farm machinery. There has been a constant advance in freight rates on railroads until the freight rates are now 60 percent higher than at the time of the World War. No investigation is more strikingly necessary than this one at this time.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What section are we on?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 1.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the adoption of this resolution. On January 23 of this year I introduced a similar proposal in the House with the hope that we could have a thorough, complete, and unbiased investigation of this particular problem on the part of the Federal Trade Commission. I was certain this House desired facts with reference to this particuluar problem.

Mr. Chairman, it happens to be my privilege to have a close personal knowledge of the problems of the American farmers. One of the greatest difficulties that exists for them today is the fact that they are faced with walking through the city streets of America witnessing an excessive price for farm products after they have been processed and realizing the tremendous spread between the price they receive and what the consumer is compelled to pay for them. There may or may not be anything wrong between the two points, but at least it is worthy of an investigation that it is represented will cost $150,000, and it is a matter in which millions of people, both the producers and consumers, are vitally interested. We are entitled to know if there is anything wrong. I think we will find a lot of startling things. I do not believe that the present price of farm products is sufficiently high to warrant the present price of the processed products which the consumer has to pay. In fact, the price to the producer could, and should, be higher if his purchasing power is to become sufficiently potent. At this point I will insert some figures to indicate the fact that the spread between producer and consumer has rapidly risen in spite of a decreasing price to the American farmer during the past few months. The farm price for 100 pounds of beef in May was $6.80, retail price $14.48; spread $7.68, or 53 percent. Similar figures for June are $6.55, $14.47, $7.92, or 54.7 percent, and July $6.20, $14.06, $7.86, or 55.9 percent, according to the Department.

Thus, while the farmers' beef price declined 60 cents per 100 pounds from May to July, the distribution cost jumped from 53 to 55.9 percent of the consumer's dollar.

I would remind the Members of this fact: The statement has been made on the floor by one of our distinguished colleagues today that the consumer will normally take care of the spread between the producer and the cost of processing. That is exactly the contention and the great difficulty that has arisen, in that the consumer is having to take up too much spread. The difficulty is the fact that if he takes care of it through a reduced buying power; then it is immediately reflected in a reduced price to the American farmer. It has been evidenced in the recent demonstration of strikers during the past few days that has occasioned a little stir in the market in connection with the drop in the price of hogs and cattle. That brings up the question of the processing tax and this investigation will undoubtedly reveal some interesting facts with relation to that matter.

One of the distinguished Members of this House has already pointed out the fact that there is no processing tax on beef, yet beef is higher than pork today on the American market. Intimation that the price of meat over the block is unduly high because of the processing tax comes with poor grace from food processors who have been realizing a profit during depression years while processing the products of the producer who was going bankrupt because of excessively low prices for raw products. That will be an interesting development that should occur in this investigation.

I would remind the Members of the House also that the American farmer today is faced with the problem of an increased cost the same as the consumer. That is reflected in the price of the products he has to buy with which he produces the raw products on the American farm.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Department of Agriculture, the National Recovery Administration, the Department of Justice, and other agencies of the Government are directed to cooperate with the Commission in such inquiry to the fullest extent possible.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOEPPEL: On page 6, line 10, after the word "possible", add new sections, as follows:

"The President is authorized to cause to be made, by any agency or agencies of the United States which he shall designate, a comprehensive investigation of man-displacement by machines and equipment used in mass production. The agency or agencies so designated shall make such investigation with a view to obtaining and furnishing data which will be useful (1) in formulating plans for the purpose of providing greater opportunity for employment in industry and commerce, assuring continued employment, equalizing distribution of available employment, and stabilizing industrial and commercial progress; and (2) in preparing legislation to carry out such purpose, including legislation imposing graduated taxes on mass-production machines and equipment. Such agency or agencies shall report the results of the investigation to the President and the Congress as soon as completed or not later than January 10, 1936.

"SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. WARREN. I reserve it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I have observed ever since I have been a Member of the House that there is a great deal of sympathy expressed here on the floor for and in behalf of the farmers. I approve that attitude on the part of the Members of Congress. At the same time I have been impressed with the fact that there has been more than a sympathetic attitude on the part of Congress for and in behalf of the bankers. I must disapprove of that attitude which is so evident in the Congress today.

The only concern evidenced toward the middleman, toward the individual in the industrial centers of America, is in the C. W. A., the P. W. A., and the W. P. A., all of which are, in a sense, a part of a more or less camouflaged dole system. We appropriate billions of dollars for "relief" and continue to pin our hopes for remedying the situation on the lavish expenditure of the taxpayers' money, instead of on sound, basic recovery legislation.

Much has been said for the farmer. I am for the farmer, but how can we help the farmer unless the consumers in the cities have consuming power?

Mr. Chairman, I know the amendment I have offered is technically not germane, but it is decidedly pertinent to the problem of unemployment with which we are today confronted. Machines are putting the American workers on the streets, and we are doing nothing to combat the continued increase of unemployment through this means.

Only last week a lady visited me at my office and stated that the Pacific Finance Co. in Los Angeles, where she was employed, installed one machine and as a result of such installation 30 girls lost their positions.

Why should we be so concerned about the farmer and so especially concerned about the banker, if we disregard the man in between? We have failed to do our duty to the American people. We are closing the Congress today or tomorrow and we are going back home to our constituents with the distressing knowledge that we have nothing real, definite, or tangible to report in the way of legislation enacted in the interests of the great middle class.

We devalued the dollar, and as a result of the gold devaluation and because of the fact that England produces 70 or 75 percent of the gold of the world, we are paying tribute to Great Britain each year to the extent of $225,000,000. We give Great Britain $225,000,000 more in American dollars than the gold is worth, and after we secure this gold we bring it to America and bury it in the ground and spend millions of dollars to guard it. Such stupid imbecility!

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman's statement with regard to machines and what they are doing in industry with respect to putting people out of work; but I do not think my friend from California would want to say we have not done anything for the great masses of the people, because more legislation for the benefit of labor has been enacted at this session than has been enacted by Congress during the last 15 years.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the gentleman from Massachusetts, whom I recognize as a friend of labor, and with whom I have always cooperated in the interest of labor, I wish to say that the purchasing power of labor has not been increased under the new deal above the increased price of commodities; and, aside from the millions who have been put to work at the direct expense of the taxpayers through the appropriation of billions of dollars, we cannot point with pride to our accomplishments in respect to labor, as the number of the unemployed today, if the millions were taken from "relief" work, would be equal to if not greater than the number of unemployed when we Democrats took office.

We have helped the banks, the railroads, insurance companies, and big business generally, but the security of the American citizen thus far has not been appreciably improved, except through the huge expenditures of the taxpayers' funds, as I have just described.

WHERE IS THE ABUNDANT LIFE?

Only yesterday on the floor here the gentleman's distinguished colleague from Massachusetts pleaded that we approve a bill passed by the Senate, which would authorize citizens not on relief to go to work in the C. C. C. camps at $30 per month. Think of it! Worthy American citizens offered a wage of only $30 per month! This is indeed lowering the standard of living, and I was very glad to see that this bill was opposed and failed of enactment. Does the gentleman maintain that Americans earning only $30 per month are enjoying the abundant life? We should be ashamed of ourselves for endeavoring to put men not on relief into C. C. C. camps at such an insignificant wage!

OUR BROKEN PROMISES TO YOUTH

We have, out in California, transient camps for youth, where the transient young men of America are herded in camps and forced to perform certain labors at a wage of only $6 per month while in such transient-youth camps. We are now providing $6 a month for boys and girls under the Youth Administration, ostensibly to permit such boys and girls to continue their education. This grant is only given where the family head is on relief. What a contrast to our lavish generosity with the bankers and other privileged classes! It may possibly buy noonday lunches, and yet we broadcast over the radio and print volumes on what we are doing for the youth of America!

I am concerned as to what thinking individuals among the young Democratic organizations must think of our penury to the youth of our land! Speaking in the interest of the youth of our land and as a word of warning to our young Democratic organizations, I appeal to them to insist that the Congress enact legislation which will bring about real recovery. We owe everything to the youth of our country, who will be the citizens of tomorrow, and we are not dealing fairly with them in the Youth Administration program to which I have referred. Youth asks for nothing but its rightful heritage of opportunity, and youth has every right to protest against a system of profligate, inordinate, and absolutely unnecessary spending by the bureaucrats here in Washington, which is inevitably piling up crushing burdens of taxation for future generations!

BARNEY BARUCH'S WALL STREET REPRESENTATIVE CRACKS DOWN

According to the press, "Windy Crackdown" Johnson threatens to puts heads of families into jail in New York City because they refuse to work on W. P. A. projects at less than prevailing wages. According to my viewpoint, procedure of this kind savors of peonage or serfdom and should not be tolerated in our country. It is indicative, however, of the caliber of some of the "new dealers", who apparently have little or no interest in the Democratic Party, or even in the people, but who are primarily concerned in proving their own synthetic theories of economy.

George W. Wickersham, former Attorney General, is recently quoted as stating that the United States will eventually become a nation of paupers or vassals under our present bureaucratic procedure, the tentacles of which are increasingly encroaching upon every avenue of American life.

Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, as quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, appeals for less government in private business and more government in the business of government.

FUTURE PROSPECTS

I am personally satisfied, or at least hopeful, that the lavish spending of the administration will soon reflect itself in improved business conditions. In my opinion, this is inevitable as long as the spending continues. I am very hopeful, as I say, that conditions will improve, but I am satisfied, beyond a question of doubt, that we cannot have real, permanent recovery until the Congress of the United States follows the precepts of the Constitution in respect to the coinage of money and the regulation of the value thereof. Why should we, a sensible people, permit the monopoly of our money and credit to rest in the hands of a few private bankers who, through the subsidy granted to them, continue to extract from the American people interest rates approximating from $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 per annum.

Everywhere we are confronted with increased taxation. In fact, the tax burden is becoming so onerous that we may, indeed, soon become, as Mr. Wickersham fears, a nation of paupers and of millionaires who evade their legitimate tax responsibilities through the medium of tax-exempt securities.

Congressmen WRIGHT W. PATMAN, of Texas, GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland, CROSS of Texas, SWEENEY, of Ohio, and other able Representatives have introduced bills and presented arguments showing that if the Congress would follow the precepts of the Constitution, take over the Federal Reserve System and make other necessary changes in the banking structure, and take the profits of our own credit unto ourselves, recovery would be positive and taxation could be reduced.

Mr. PATMAN claims that the bankers control Congress. I made a similar statement when I was a novice in the Congress. I am satisfied there can be no real recovery and that economic liberty of the people cannot be attained as long as the international bankers in Wall Street can control the circulation of currency and the extension of governmental credit, on which they charge us inordinate interest rates.

Under our present procedure, we continue to grant subsidies to the bankers and to entrenched wealth by permitting investments in tax-exempt securities while, at the same time, we enact legislation increasing the taxes of the producer and the consumer, thus restricting their purchasing power. We are piling up billions of dollars' worth of wealth in the hands of a few people, which wealth is tax exempt, and the honest producers and consumers are thus forced to carry additional burdens of taxation because tax-exempt wealth does not bear its just share of the load. How positively the Congress proves its interest in Wall Street by its refusal to enact legislation taxing all wealth in America on a basis of equality! The motto over the new Supreme Court building is—"Equal Justice Under Law."

The motto of Congress should be—"Equal Taxation to Every Dollar of Wealth in America."

Personally I am in favor of every individual in America having a tax exemption on a home or farm which he himself occupies, up to a value of approximately $5,000. I would even exempt James Pierpont Morgan and Barney Baruch $5,000. There should be no favoritism to any dollar of wealth above a specified exemption figure.

I would also, if it were in my power, change the income-tax laws to provide that no individual, regardless of his income, would be called upon to pay an income tax on profits or earned income which he could show had been actually expended for goods and service. Money which is fluid, and not hoarded, adds to the wealth of all citizens. Money which is sterile, such as the $9,000,000,000 in gold which the Treasury proposes to bury, and wealth such as tax-exempt securities, does not contribute to the general welfare.

TOWNSEND PENSION PLAN SENSIBLE

One of the reasons I became such an ardent advocate of the Townsend pension plan is the requirement that the pensions paid to our aged worthy citizens must be spent each month. It is an axiom of economics that volume and speed of circulation of currency determine the prosperity of a country. We do not have sufficient volume of currency in circulation and the rapidity of circulation is far below normal. The bankers have more money on deposit today than ever before, but less credit money in circulation.

The Townsend pension plan would increase the volume as well as the rapidity of circulation, and as a result sound recovery would be realized and unemployment would be a thing of the past. The bureaucracies here in Washington could be folded up and the "brain trusters" could return to their colleges to dream further dreams of socialism or communism while the happy American citizens, once again employed, would thank the Democratic administration—if this were brought about through the Democratic administration—for having had the vision of bringing economic liberty to our country, which is a natural paradise.

Under the plan proposed there would be no necessity for the continuance of the insane practice of restricting the production of agricultural products, including cattle and hogs. There would be an abundance for all. In fact, our Nation would become so prosperous that it would be necessary to curtail the hours of employment and tax the production of industry to act as a balance to prevent the development of an excessively high standard of living for the entire Nation. Contrary to our present theory of restriction to raise prices, it would be necessary to reduce the hours of labor and place a tax on production to prevent the depletion of the resources of our Nation.

To be more specific, the standard of living established would be predicated on a stipulated income of approximately $400 per month per family. The official Government records indicate that $4,700 per annum is the ideal income for a family, thus attesting to the wisdom of Dr. Townsend in specifying $4,800 per annum pension for a family.

ORGANIZED LABOR PARTIALLY RECOGNIZES OUR PROBLEM

Organized labor has advanced a 30-hour-week plan, which the Congress of the United States strenuously opposed and would not enact into law because of administration pressure. Instead the capitalists of the country prevailed upon the administration to adopt the N. R. A., which has since been discarded.

Organized labor sought to reduce the hours of employment in order that more individuals might be employed. I personally advanced the technotax, which has more or less the same objective through taxing the machine according to the number of workers which it displaces.

The proposal of organized labor has considerable merit. I also believe that my plan of taxing the machine according to the number of workers it displaces has practical merit.

I am in favor of both of these plans—but neither of them, in itself, will be sufficient to solve our unemployment problem. Until we, as a people, observe the tenets of the Constitution and take from the private banker the monopoly of money which he today holds; until we take from him the right to coin money with a fountain pen, on which he charges us high rates of interest, I am inclined to believe that all our plans, while they may be partially successful, will fail to solve our economic problem on a sound basis of permanency. Economic liberty for the people, in my opinion, cannot be attained as long as we permit the international bankers of Wall Street to control the volume of money in circulation and exact interest from the people on the credit which they themselves establish for their own private use through the medium of a fountain pen.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I admit the point of order, but I would like to have the amendment put in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the Membership in the consideration of this resolution. I simply wish to say that during the discussion of the Guffey coal stabilization bill I quoted upon the floor of this House certain lines which I believe apropos to the legislation which we were then considering. No one cried me down at that time, so I shall take this opportunity to try it again, believing that perhaps the lines which I shall repeat may be of interest:

The doctor heals and the lawyer pleads,
And the miner follows precious leads;
But this or that, whate'er befall,
The farmer, he must feed them all.

[Applause.]

I believe this to be a statement not alone in poetry but in the very heart of the American people. A question has been raised here this afternoon that would lead us to believe there is a conflict between the interests of the consumers in the cities and the metropolises of this country as over and against those who produce upon the farms the products which are sold in the great metropolitan centers.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman let me submit another poem in keeping with the thought and the subject under consideration.

Princes and lords may flourish and may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath hath made.
But a bold yeomanry the country pride
When once destroyed can ne'er be supplied.

[Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman; and in this connection I may add that perhaps the deliberations of this body might be a little more pleasant for Members here and the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD if in the very seriousness of the debates we interspersed these gems of thought expressed by Members and just now quoted by the gentleman from Texas.

I should like to add that for many, many years I was very close to the livestock industry of my State. Simply as a matter of record and to bring myself very close to the discussion, I recall that my father, now deceased, was the largest independent livestock shipper in the State of West Virginia over a long period of years. I know the problem of purchasing livestock in the hills of West Virginia, shipping them over the B. & O. Railroad tracks into Baltimore, Jersey City, and the New York markets. I myself have been in the caboose on the rear end of many of these trains in the years gone by. I have followed hundreds and hundreds of droves of sheep and cattle from dawn until the noon and afternoon and twilight hours, 10 and 15 miles over dusty roads into the pens in the little towns of West Virginia, so that they might be shipped to the city. The price of meat to the consumer is today far too high, and the farmer has not received a proper price. The spread between the farm and consumer certainly warrants passage today of this resolution for the investigation which will surely bring help to the needy farmer. The discussion causes us to realize that the study of the price which is paid to the man on the farm for his products as over and against the price which the consumer pays for the commodity will bring about in a very few years corrective measures which will be valuable and which will give us a fair knowledge and understanding of the distribution of farm products to the ultimate consumer. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution the Federal Trade Commission shall have the same right to obtain data and to inspect income-tax returns as the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Congress or to either House thereof.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the Federal Trade Commission, the Attorney General, and the courts of the United States shall have and may exercise all of the powers and jurisdiction severally conferred upon them by the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes", approved September 28, 1914.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000, which shall be available for expenditure as the Federal Trade Commission may direct, for expenses and all necessary disbursements, including salaries, in carrying out this resolution and prosecuting litigation necessary in aid of the powers conferred hereunder.

SEC. 6. The Federal Trade Commission is directed to present an interim report to the Congress on January 1, 1936, describing the progress made and the status of its work hereunder, and a final report with recommendations for legislation not later than July 1, 1936.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Page 7, at the end of line 12, insert the following: "The interim report shall include a full report of the results of its investigation of the causes contributing to the spread between the price paid to the producers for hogs, cattle, and sheep, and the price paid by the consumer for meat and edible meat products, as to whether such spread is unreasonable or unjustified, and as to whether any monopoly, conspiracy in restraint of trade, or unfair methods of competition among the large packing concerns is the cause of such spread of prices; and the Commission shall give precedence and emphasis to this part of its investigation."

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I realize that in offering this amendment there need be some delay, but my impression is that this investigation can be of great deal more value if emphasis is placed and precedence given to the question of investigating the spread between the producer and the consumer as regards meat prices.

I want to warn the committee, each and every member, that you are faced with a rebellious electorate on the question of meat and the excessive prices which the consumer is forced to pay for it.

This is relatively a simple amendment. I know that Senator WHEELER will accept it without question and immediately. I know, too, that the House conferees can act immediately, and the bill can be brought back with the amendment without any trouble whatever.

It is timely and essential that this amendment go into the bill. The pot is boiling, and we must lift the lid and pacify the justly rebellious strikers who are the suffering consumers.

The meat consumers must be convinced that the House has recognized this extraordinary condition and means business.

There is no expressed opposition to the price of flour and canned goods, but there is a definite objection, as we have all witnessed in the meat strike in Detroit. This condition must be attended to as the first objective of the resolution.

I am told that within the next week or so we can logically expect a similar strike at Chicago and other metropolitan cities.

Let me tell you, this meat strike is ruining the small retail meat dealer and the small wholesaler. He cannot continue taking losses occasioned by the strike.

This strike may be directed at the wrong party, but unless you do something here to convince the people and show that you are interested in the problem that has been brought to the poor, this trouble is going to spread.

Therefore, I think that this amendment should be accepted and the bill go to conference. It will be back here tomorrow afternoon, and we can pass it without any trouble.

The amendment is worth while, and I know that every Member of the House is interested in it. It does not detract from Senate Joint Resolution 9, but it strengthens it.

The housewives are fighting the packers, but in this war on prices they have to go through the innocent and helpless meat dealers who face ruin. The women, as purchasing agents in our households, are concerned about their families. The losses to the dealers are secondary; they are the casuals of war. The women can see only their objective and are headed straight for it.

Mr. HEALEY. Is not the resolution under consideration broad enough to cover an investigation into the question of meat?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; but if they go into all questions in the resolution and play with it for 6 or 7 months, we will not be getting at the trouble which is on the surface at the present time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This resolution is all-inclusive. It has been carefully drawn and it includes practically verbatim everything contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]. If we want to take a chance on killing this resolution, when we all know that we are going to adjourn tomorrow, just tack on any amendment, and let the thing get lost over there in the Senate. The Federal Trade Commission has full authority under the present terms of the resolution to give all due emphasis to everything mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan, and I hope the committee will vote it down.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to know if my friend could assure the House, if this amendment went into the bill, that Senator WHEELER would not accept it immediately?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think the gentleman can assure the House that if this amendment is adopted the resolution would be lost, because of the urgency of time.

Mr. WARREN. I think that is quite probably so.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to reiterate what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has said relative to the danger of tacking on amendments at this time. I hope the House will reject this amendment, not because it is not a meritorious proposal, and I am confident that the Federal Trade Commission will look into this situation in Detroit and see to it that it is adjusted properly, but I feel that the adoption of any amendment at this late hour would be equivalent to throwing this resolution into the waste basket, and I know that the House does not want that to occur to this very worthy resolution which would mean so much to the farmers and consumers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, this is a good resolution, and I shall support it, and I think it touches upon one of the principal problems, one of the main issues before the people today. I call attention to one of the major factors in bringing on the so-called "depression." It has been the profiteering prices that people engaged in manufacturing and distribution have been permitted to charge the people engaged in the basic industries. When I speak of the basic industries, I refer to agriculture, mining, and lumbering. Monopolistic practices are permitted by legislation that was enacted by the Congress in the last several years. The big industrial organizations of the country are permitted to charge profiteering prices to the people engaged in the basic industries of farming, lumbering, and mining. We have seen the prices of the necessaries used in those industries go up skyhigh, and we have seen the people permitted to charge these prices take such big profits that their earnings in some cases in 1 year almost equaled their total capitalization. And all of the time they were taking away from the people engaged in the basic industries every dollar received for their product and thereby lowering the standards of living, and bringing financial distress to the thousands engaged in farming, mining, and lumbering.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman complains of legislation enacted in the last couple of years?

Mr. WHITE. I refer to that legislation which was enacted by the opposite party since the World War, during the administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, or rather a failure to enforce existing laws provided to protect new enterprises and small competitors, which would have worked to prevent profiteering and establish and maintain a parity between the price of products of those engaged in the basic industries and the products of those engaged in manufacturing.

Mr. CULKIN. And the gentleman commends the effect of the N. R. A.?

Mr. WHITE. I think the N. R. A. was a step in the right direction, but it did not reach the main trouble.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think the gentleman's chief complaint is that the present economic competitive system is working too efficiently.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think so. I think every piece of legislation passed in this Congress and the preceding Congress has been designed to kill off competition and stifle competition and do away with the small competitor. We must encourage competition to bring about a parity between the prices of the producer and the prices of the manufacturer, and eliminate the profiteering by manufacturers and distributors in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ARNOLD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 9; and pursuant to House Resolution 316, he reported the resolution back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GOLD RESOURCES

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in the efforts we are making to devise plans and follow a program to restore prosperous business conditions, I desire to bring to the attention of the Members of the House and the people of this country the importance of developing our mineral resources and increasing the production of gold. We know from experience and from watching developments in Canada, our neighbor on the north, that the production of gold will contribute more to stabilize and promote prosperous business conditions than anything that can be done at this time.

Many of us have overlooked the fact that we still have in the United States vast undeveloped mining resources in the mineral deposits of our western States. Much of this mineral wealth, particularly our gold deposits, is situated in the rugged and isolated mountainous sections of our national forests located in these western States. The mountains of this region are seamed with gold-bearing veins—veins that were eroded in remote geological periods to supply the deposits of gold that produced so abundantly in the 60's and 70's. These lodes contain vast deposits of gold yet to be mined when the necessary roads are provided to penetrate these mountain fastnesses so that machinery and supplies can be moved in and ore and concentrates can be moved cut.

Mr. Speaker, no man in our State of Idaho has a more intimate knowledge of the mineral deposits in our State than former State Mine Inspector Robert N. Bell, a geologist and eminent mining engineer, who has penetrated and personally inspected every mining section of our State in his long term of service in charge of the State of Idaho mining department. I include herewith an article by former State Mine Inspector Robert N. Bell as a part of these remarks on gold resources.

[From the Boise (Idaho) Capital News of July 20, 1935]

ROBERT N. BELL TELLS OF GOLD RESOURCES

By Robert N. Bell

With little danger of an overproduction of either gold or silver from the remaining resources in the world, any suggestions for increasing the present supply of these essential money metals should be timely.

The recent increase in the price of gold has so stimulated interest in the search for the metal as to provide employment already for thousands of men that would be otherwise on the relief rolls at this time. This new price is the first decent break the gold-mining industry has had, as compared to the base-metal industries, which have been favored repeatedly in price, both by the Government and by the manipulations of the vested interests during the past generation, while gold, remaining at a fixed price, has had to carry the burden of the excessive mining costs periodically induced by base-metal market movements.

Most of the plums of bonanza gold values in the Western States have been picked, and the chances are rather remote in this region for a repetition of such noted occurrences as Cripple Creek, Goldfield, or Klondike.

If the Government wants a permanently increased domestic gold supply, it can probably be obtained by giving the gold-mining industry the present increased price advantage, without additional exacting taxes, as this increased price is necessary to stimulate interest in the development and beneficiation of the vast resources of low-grade gold ore which our western mining States are known to contain, the treatment of which will involve large capital risk with the promise of only a narrow ton margin of profit, even at the new price.

I know of one gold-bearing ore basin in the Southwest that contains a thousand billion tons of submarginal ore at the old price which should have a value of around 80 cents at the new price of gold, and is such a nature that it can be mined and reduced to minus 30-mesh pulp for 10 cents a ton. This statement sounds like the vaporings of a wild optimist, but as a matter of fact it has the substantial support of broadly experienced technicians in both geology and engineering. However, that is another story. The purpose of this article is to exhibit the gold-ore potentialities of Idaho.

Gold as well as all other metallic ores, including iron, occurs the world over in or in close relation to bodies of granitic magma, known as batholiths, with their attendant satellites, stocks, domes, plugs, and cupolas. This relation of granite magmas to metallic ore deposits has been elaborately studied and illustrated by W. H. Emmons of the University of Minnesota, and other noted authorities, and while their contention is that the ore is derived from a deep-seated, cooling, siliceous end phase of granitic magmas, there are some sound practical reasons for the assumption that the real source of gold and other metals is a deeper and more basic magma phase of the earth's structure than granite.

If granite formation is accepted as the mother of gold rather than the stepmother, as above suggested, then the State of Idaho is one of the most favorable fields in the United States for the further search for this desirable money metal, as the State carries one of the two largest granite batholiths in the United States; the only other one comparable in size is the Sierra Nevada batholith, whose flanking fissures in California and Nevada have been responsible for more than half of the gold production of the United States.

This Idaho granite batholith has an exposed surface area of 22,000 square miles, occupying the central axis of the State for a strike length of 250 miles by 50 to 100 miles broad. This formation was classified by the early geologists such as King, Becker, Eldredge, and Russell as Archean granite. During his extensive reconnaissance in this State, starting in 1895, Dr. Waldemar Lindgren was, I think, the first authority to fix the age of this great magma as recent as Triassic time, due to his discovery of the contact metamorphic effect of the granite on the upturned edges of the sedimentary formations of that age.

Clyde P. Ross in a recent Government bulletin on the Idaho batholith fixes portions of its development as rupturing formations as recent as Pliocene time. The chances are that this great magma is of stage development and that its consequent periodic mineralization ranges from Archean time to the present.

This great granitic area in Idaho was first mapped in detail by members of the State bureau of mines and geology under the direction of Dr. Francis A. Thomsen then dean of the Idaho School of Mines and now president of the Montana School of Mines. This interesting index map of the geology of Idaho, which also shows the vast accumulations of sedimentary strata that flank the batholith on all borders, is available, I think, at the University of Idaho.

The gold deposits of Idaho, including both placer and lode, are credited, at the most conservative estimate, with a production since discovery in 1860 valued at $150,000,000, of which probably $100,000,000 was derived from placers and $50,000,000 from lode deposits scattered over the State from one end to the other.

Most of the rich placer deposits were confined to the eroded surface of the main central granite batholith and a few of its major satellites.

U. S. G. S. Professional Paper No. 62, page 138, quotes Dr. Waldemar Lindgren as expressing the belief and conception of shallowness in value range of the ore-bearing deposits in the batholith due to its assumed deep erosion and the large production of placer gold. This idea crept into the text books and has been a retarding influence in the development of ore bodies in the batholith. However, recent studies of Government geologists have proven this to be unwarranted:

Over 20 years ago the writer pointed out in a practical comparison where the granite of a batholith is just as good a host rock as other formations, if preconditioned and accompanied by sufficient later magmatic differentiates in the form of pronounced belts or zones of porphyry and other intrusive igneous rock, and used as an example the richest hill in the world, for its area, in the granite formations of Butte, Mont., and its accompanying igneous differentiates in the form of dikes. The Butte mines occur in the Boulder batholith, a satellite of the Idaho batholith.

Similar porphyry zones to the Butte district are exhibited in the Idaho batholith in several localities, some of whose accompanying ore deposits have recently been classed by United States geologists as of the intermediate temperature type and in place of post Miocene age. These deposits have received such substantial development as to justify the forecast of comparatively deep-seated persistency of their accompanying gold-ore values and warrant further development and investigation for both rich ore courses and bodies of low-grade, mass-production promise.

In the discussion of the genesis, and especially of the paragenesis of ore, the leading geological authorities of the United States are about as sarcastic of one another's views as are some of the leading exponents of national political issues of the day, and at the risk of lese majeste to these high geological authorities and their opinions as to the ultimate cooling point of a granite magma being the source of metals, especially of gold, I would call attention to some pertinent facts in an effort to stimulate more serious consideration of this extensive Idaho granite ore and its accompanying basic differentiates for development and investigation.

The lode gold mines of Idaho, entirely within its granitic areas, are all intimately in contact or closely associated with very basic dikes as one of the end phases of intrusive igneous activity that preceded the mineralizing ore solutions, and while these deposits are also invariably associated with a vastly greater display of acid dike invasions in the granite, the ore courses are almost invariably younger than the basic dikes which gives the inference of their ultimate derivation from a basic rather than an acid magma, more deeply seated than the granite itself.

In the great gold-bearing lodes of lower Canada, especially at Kirkland Lake, Porcupine, and the Rouyn districts, basic dikes are conspicuously associated with the largest and most persistent ore courses. According to the annual report of the Ontario Department of Mines for 1924, the ore gangue of the Hollinger mine consists predominantly of basic carbonates, with an alkaline rather than an acid end phase of gangue deposition, followed by the gold solutions which seem to have been the last accessory to the mineralization of the lode, indicating an alkaline rather than an acid source of primal differentiate.

According to Horwood, a noted British geologist and former prominent operator on the Witwatersrand outcrop and deep mines at Johannesburg, the gold in this richest of all the world's gold deposits, producing annually more metal than all the other gold mines in the world combined, is derived from a diabase magma and the conduits through which the solutions were carried to the then pervious Rand banket conglomerate were the diabase dikes which so intimately interlace the Witwatersrand sedimentary series to the exclusion of all other kinds of dike rocks.

This authority found appreciable quantitative results in gold, pyrite, and hydrocarbon residues in the walls of these intrusive dikes, identical with the richer concentrations of these minerals in the matrix of the banket conglomerate.

These feeding dikes are believed to represent the end phase of differentiation and cooling of the body of diabase that closely parallels the Witwatersrand formation for many miles and is known to be 5,000 feet thick, while the nearest granite formation to the area has been classed as of Archean age and is 30 miles distant from the nearest outcrop mines and probably has little relation to the origin of the gold in this famous deposit.

These outstanding examples of the relation of basic magmas to the most important gold-ore deposits of the gold and the intimate association of this type of differentiates in the Idaho batholith leads to the suggestion that this great geologic unit of Idaho may prove an attractive field for prospecting for a source of new gold supply

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in extending my remarks of yesterday, I called attention to the importance of the undeveloped mining resources of this country, which included an article from the pen of Robert N. Bell, former State mining inspector of Idaho, a noted geologist and mining engineer.

Mr. Bell, in a subsequent article, describes one of this country's richest gold mining districts which is entering a new era of development, and will contribute in a large measure to the financial and business recovery now getting under way in this country. I include as a part of these remarks Mr. Bell's article.

ROBERT N. BELL VIEWS ATLANTA ORE BELT

ATLANTA DISTRICT

By Robert N. Bell, former State inspector of mines

The Atlanta mining district is at present the most productive lode gold district in Idaho. It is situated on the middle fork of the Boise River, 80 miles above Boise and about the same distance from Mountain Home by the present main truck route from the railroad.

This Mountain Home highway to the camp passes over a high mountain divide at an elevation of 8,200 feet and is closed by deep winter snows for 6 months of the year, but during the past 4 years the camp has been made accessible from Boise by airplane for visitors and light express, an airline distance of 50 miles, which is negotiated by the plane in 30 minutes.

Thanks to the support of the Boise national forest authorities and C. C. C. activities, a new watergrade highway is expected to be completed this fall from Boise to Atlanta which, due to the growing activity of the district, is likely to be kept open for truck travel throughout the winter season.

The rich ores of the Atlanta district were first discovered in 1863 as the result of an overflow of placer miners from the Boise Basin. These industrious searchers for placer values found rich bar pannings at the forks of the Yuba and Boise Rivers, which they traced up Quartz Gulch to the bold outcrop of the Buffalo and Monarch mines, with increasingly coarse gold as the vein outcrops were approached. Nuggets are reported to have been found under the present position of the Buffalo dump that weighed several ounces.

The Atlanta district is situated in the heart of the broadest expanse of the Idaho granite batholith, 30 to 40 miles in from its nearest peripheries. The camp is in a pretty intermountain basin, about 1,000 acres in extent, at an elevation of 5,200 feet above sea level, while the surrounding bold granite summits reach an elevation of 9,000 feet.

The area is well watered and timbered. Its batholithic granite is extensively faulted and intruded with acid and basic dikes. In approaching camp on the present highway down James Creek Canyon these great acid dikes can be observed standing out above the crumbly granite surface like Chinese walls, while the smaller basic dikes are found in close relation to the most important ore courses.

The early day operators who discovered the ore deposits were rewarded by very high-grade mineral, due to shallow secondary enrichment. These crude shipping ore values were first packed out by mule trains and later hauled by bull teams to Kelton, Utah, and shipped to Omaha for treatment, the shipping values ranging up to $2,000 per ton in gold and silver.

This very rich secondary ore was succeeded at a comparatively shallow depth by the primary values of the district which, while in sizeable bodies, are of a complex nature with average values of $10 to $15 per ton and difficult to treat. There has been half a dozen different mills built in the district, but recoveries of 60 to 70 percent by amalgamation and gravity concentration did not leave much profit on this grade of ore and most of these enterprises were gradually abandoned with the exhaustion of the richer shipping ores.

The best recoveries made on these ores prior to the present St. Joseph Lead Co. operation was by Marcus White, an experienced Boise metallurgist, who, in association with the late Daniel Kirby, had a lease on the Monarch mine dump. These great dumps totaling 150,000 tons were more or less mixed with development waste; 20,000 tons were treated on this lease that is said to have averaged $5 gold per ton treated by careful vanner concentration in the Monarch mill and a sweet roast on the concentrates, which were then treated by cyanidation with a recovery of 90 percent of the head values. The administrators of the estate thought they were making too much money and canceled the lease after a summer's operation.

About 1903 the district attracted the attention of a prominent figure of the oil world, T. N. Barnsdale, of Pittsburgh, who purchased the Monarch-Buffalo group and sunk a 600-foot vertical shaft on the Monarch with five extensive levels under the management of Daniel Kirby. The old mill on the property was rebuilt to 100 tons daily capacity under the direction of a well-known metallurgist of Park City, Utah, but in spite of the expensive equipment the recoveries proved poor.

Mr. Barnsdale spent $1,200,000 on this enterprise which after his death tied it up for several years as his estate managers held for that figure in a resale of the property, but finally and only recently turned its operating control over to the St. Joseph Lead Co., of Missouri, the largest lead-producing institution in the world.

The Pettit group of claims, having a common endline with the Monarch, covers the eastern extension of the lode to Montezuma Gulch and was extensively developed with adit tunnels to a vertical face depth of 600 feet by the Bagdad-Chase Co. in about 1907. This company whose activities were engineered by high-grade technical talent, including Wayne Darlington and C. S. Verrill, built a 40-stamp mill on this property and attempted shrinkage mining, which resulted in a severe dilution of the available ore values. This, together with an adverse and expensive undertaking on the Mother Lode in California caused the company to fail and the property was transferred to the Boise-Rochester Co., a Boise organization, who carried on the development under the management of the late Stanley C. Smith, a McGill graduate.

In 1917 this company was recovering $9 per ton in gold from their operations on this end of the lode, which runs better to gold than the Monarch and other mines farther west, but due to milling difficulties, in spite of some initial flotation attempts, and lack of adequate capital for improvement the enterprise was simply swapping dollars when the deposit attracted the attention of I. H. Cornell, chief field engineer of the St. Joseph Lead Co. Mr. Cornell figured wisely on the future use of the property for the company with the advance in metallurgy of gold ore. In 1927 the company developed a timidity in regard to this holding and endeavored to sell it to a prominent New York operator, who selected Frank H. Skeels as examining engineer. Mr. Skeels turned it down at the price then offered, but did the job with such thoroughness and suggestiveness as to attract the attention of the St. Joseph Lead Co.'s manager, who employed him, put him on a Montana deposit, where he displayed distinctive ability, and later sent him to another of the company's big acquisitions in lead-zinc ore in the high Andes of western Argentine.

Mr. Skeels came to Idaho in 1931 with instruction to build a 200-ton mill and clean out the 2 years' supply of $8 gold ore from the company's holdings at Atlanta. He brought nothing with him but a checkbook, and used machinery from the company's plants in Missouri and Montana. He picked up the old crew that he had trained to his ways at the Ramshorn Mine in Custer County, Idaho, during the war, including muckers, miners, mill men, and truck men, and from a flat start in August by the following January he had the power turned on the 200-ton mill, whose small hydroelectric plant was supplemented with a 360-horsepower German Diesel engine. The timber and available material in the old 40-stamp mill was used in the new construction at the portal of the 900 tunnel level.

MODERN FLOTATION

The principal improvement of this plant over any other in the district is the advantage it carries in ample power and a modern flotation plant.

Since that time this mill has treated 200 tons a day on an average, with the exception of 1 month's shut-down due to a break in the big engine. The mill feed is said to vary between a quarter of an ounce and an ounce gold per ton, and has probably averaged fully half an ounce.

The mill is of the normal amalgamation and flotation type, capable of treating up to 230 tons of ore a day. The ore as it comes from the mine is shattered quartz and is easy rock-breaker work. It is handled entirely by gravity methods. It is passed through a tube mill with a fairly coarse screen, over amalgamation plates and amalgam traps to a flotation circuit, where very fine grinding is involved to release the extremely fine sulphide values. The recoveries have been about 50 percent of the values in free gold and the balance as a high-grade flotation concentrate. The concentrate ratio is said to vary from 1½ to 3 percent, and the concentrate values, depending upon occasional runs of lean pyrite in the feed, range from 6 ounces to 30 ounces gold per ton, with the rather low silver ratio increasing as the Monarch ore is used. The recoveries are said to be plus 90 percent of the mill feed values.

TWENTY PRIMARY MINERALS

Careful microscopic studies of the concentrates from the Monarch ore by Marcus White revealed 20 different primary sulphide minerals, half of which were silver sulphides in various forms and the balance sulphides of the base metals, which would indicate at least a subepithermal type for these ores, which are doubtless of recent geologic age, as evidenced by big hot mineral springs along the Boise River Canyon nearby.

With the acquisition of the operating control of the adjoining Monarch property and the purchase of the Yuba group, the company now has control of approximately 3 miles of the main Atlanta lode lying between Montezuma Gulch and the Yuba River, and is in a comfortable position from the standpoint of proven ore reserves said to be sufficient to last the present milling capacity for 5 years.

Extensive development of the lode has been carried west at the no. 6 level and has already been extended beyond the Buffalo shaft. This new underground work, according to the last report of the State mine inspector, totaled 19,750 feet.

COMPARED TO COMSTOCK

The Atlanta district was visited over 50 years ago by a then noted independent geologist of the West—Professor Clayton—who compared the Atlanta lode in strength and persistency to the Comstock lode in Nevada.

This great mineral-bearing earth fracture is 50 to 150 feet wide, and it was forecasted by this old authority that it would some day make a mass production low-grade gold ore producer, but it is likely that the present method of selective mining is better fitted for the treatment of ore of this class.

This great shear zone of quartz and silicified granite stands nearly vertical, strikes north 60° east, and carries segregated bodies of better ore varying from a foot to 40 feet in width along its north wall, with occasional transverse features and rich ore occurrence along the south wall.

During the extensive shaft development on the Monarch mine, as State mine inspector I had access to this work down to the sixth level, and according to Mr. Kirby's carefully kept daily sample sheet, the ore disclosed averaged $9 per ton in gold and silver, principally gold, and the best values throughout this extensive development occurred in close contact with a small parallel basic dike.

NOT SHALLOW

That all of the rich ore in this lode is not shallow secondary enrichment is evidenced by the occurrence of high values in the present deeper levels. In 1932 I assisted in an attempt to interest the Consolidated Goldfields in the purchase of the Monarch property when I had an opportunity to sample one of the cross sections of the vein where it was 12 feet wide and averaged $12 per ton in gold, after carefully avoiding a definite pay streak 4 inches wide of heavy sulphide ore that assayed $800 gold per ton.

This point in the lode was on the no. 4 shaft level of the Monarch at a vertical depth of 700 feet below the outcrop at that point and it is said that these sweetened streaks of high grade have played an important part in the production of the mine during the past 3½ years.

The Atlanta district was reviewed in a pamphlet published by the State bureau of mines and geology in 1928 under the authorship of S. M. Ballard.

CROSSED BY FISSURES

The main lode is crossed by an oblique set of fissures that strike east and west and are believed to be older than the main lode and faulted by it. These transverse fissures include the Greenback, the Last Chance, Minerva, Brick Pomeroy, Benton, Big Lode, Tahoma, and Frankie, each of which have considerable shallow development and had small milling equipment and have produced more or less rich ore from their oxidized horizons. These old properties and several other attractive prospects are now being resampled and investigated by responsible Portland and San Francisco capitalists and a deal has recently been consummated for the retreatment of the quite extensive mill tailings pile at the old Monarch mill, said to average $6 to $8 gold per ton.

According to Captain Innis, who operated the Benton mine for 3 years around 1907, one of these transverse fissures has as bold and wide a quartz outcrop as the main lode itself, and at that time had exposed a well band of pay ore with drift widths and $10 gold values.

REGIONAL FAULT

The extension of the Atlanta lode on its easterly course seems to terminate at Montezuma gulch, which may prove to be a regional fault that has displaced the lode to the south, as on the Yuba slope of the mountain on the Mays-Davis group, there is a bold quartz outcrop traceable for a long distance to the northeast that is 100 feet wide and carries a central crushed zone 30 feet wide that is said to average $6 a ton and is certainly worthy of more development investigation in such a situation. This great quartz zone also has a parallel basic dike.

From the viewpoint of responsible engineering observers, it seems likely that other important gold discoveries may be found along this Atlanta mineral belt, which is believed by these observers to be practically continuous in conspicuous rusty-colored, sheared granite rock, together with accompanying acid and basic dikes and great quartz veins from Atlanta to the opposite slope of the main Sawtooth Range at Vienna, a distance of 18 miles.

Vienna is an old silver camp with several prominent fissures in the granite and igneous dike contracts that was extensively developed during the 80's, and is credited with a production of 3,000,000 ounces of silver.

NEW PROSPECT

Four miles east of Atlanta, along this high rugged mountain spur that forms the narrow divide between the Middle and South Forks of the Boise River drainage, at the head of LeMoyne Creek, in the edge of a glacial circle 9,000 feet high, the Vrenon prospect is something new brought to light within the past year; is described as an ore shoot in altered porphyry that is 200 feet long, varies from 2 to 6 feet wide, and in half a dozen cross trenches gives an average value of $18 in gold, with occasional high silver values, the richest ore being at a point on the shoot where two small basic dikes intersect the fissure, one of them paralleling it for 100 feet. At this point on the vein course, visible gold has been found in the ore in particles as large as a match head.

This locality also exhibits some immense quartz veins of low-grade ore, with occasional banded segregations of commercial values. This new discovery was made by Jack Vrenon, a veteran Castillian prospector, who, in true pioneer form, made the discovery by tracing out some very excellent placer gold pannings on LeMoyne Creek to the source in the vein. These placer values in shallow trenches at several points along the creek gave pannings indicating several dollars per cubic yard. The gulch, however, is narrow and steep and very rocky, and while not attractive as a placer deposit, its pannings of rough gold was a positive indication of the course of the metal in the parent vein, now being investigated by responsible capital with the prospect of its substantial development.

GOOD SHOWINGS

Along this belt and in the immediate section south of the summit of the Sawtooth Range, where the granite elevations are 10,000 to 11,000 feet high, recent discoveries include other rich ore showings and quartz veins up to 100 feet wide, with average values of 12 ounces silver and $2 gold in one instance, 40 ounces silver and $20 gold across 20 feet in another, according to recent optimistic reports of prospectors, and in still another instance a porphyry dike 50 feet wide carrying up to 2 percent molybdenum.

The Sawtooth Range, extending for 40 miles northwest between the drainage channels of the Boise and Payette Rivers, is a rocky, snowslide country with an open season of about 4 months, but nevertheless one of the most attractive fields in the Idaho granite batholith for investigation with a number of interesting prospects already located, but with much virgin unexplored surface. The rugged topography is probably not duplicated anywhere this side of the San Juan Mountains in Colorado. The completion of the new highway up the Boise River to Atlanta will greatly facilitate the exploration of this interesting mineral field.

ADDITIONAL CLERICAL SERVICE IN ENROLLING ROOM

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 366

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives during the remainder of the present session not exceeding $200 for additional clerical services in the enrolling room.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sinclaire, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 531. An act granting compensation to Walter F. Northrop;

H. R. 8598. An act to provide for the inspection and regulation of vessels engaged in the transportation of inflammable, explosive, and like dangerous cargoes in navigable waters of the United States;

H. R. 8652. An act to levy an excise tax upon carriers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9116. An act to extend the provisions of veterans' laws and regulations to persons who served in Russia during the World War, and their dependents.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9100) entitled "An act to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2652. An act to authorize the President to attach certain possessions of the United States to internal-revenue collection districts for the purpose of collecting processing taxes; and

S. 3002. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 175. Joint resolution to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934; and

S. J. Res. 178. Joint resolution to authorize the appointment of certain officers and employees of the United States Texas Centennial Commission, without regard to the civil-service laws.

THE NEUTRALITY BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 364.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 364

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order for the Speaker to entertain a motion to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 173, as amended, a joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution making in order the so-called "neutrality bill" under suspension of the rules. It is a matter that has been of deep concern to a great number of Members of the House. There is somewhat of an emergency in the situation and some of us hope it will be passed as speedily as possible.

I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, this neutrality matter is a subject which is close to my heart, because I know something about war and I do not want the young men of America, including my own son, to go away to war. God forbid. [Applause.]

NEWSPAPERS SAY WAR

Looking at the newspapers today we see a situation which is one of the most serious that the world has ever known. It is similar to the World War, probably worse, because many of the nations of the world are now physically and morally depleted. I know we are all tired and worn out, but we face a tragic world-wide situation. Let us try to work this out. We read in the headlines of the News of Washington (Scripps-Howard) today:

"Italy is on the march and cannot be stopped by anybody," says Il Duce.

Caesar talk. And someone may think that I, as an old soldier, think this march talk is all glory, flags, and bugles. Like hell! I say that literally. All I can think of is blood and guts; rotting, stinking bodies; mud.

Then we see another headline from London: "United States will go into next war, asserts Senator POPE." He is over in London. It is by cable; it brings memories of the World War. Remember who had the cables? The British. And it seems to me they still have them. Will they use them again to get us into war?

Then we see in another paper that Ethiopia is trying to settle this question with Italy. I fear, however, there is not a chance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the resolution which is presented today is, in my opinion, not a very good one and does not cover the situation fully. It is by no means complete; I believe it better than nothing. The rule provides that it be adopted without amendment. I am generally opposed to those rules, but I believe we should go home now and that we should do something before we leave. Therefore I hope we will vote for this rule and vote for the bill and put the whole thing over. It will at least be one step ahead.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to my good and liberal friend from the State of Washington. He is a credit to his State.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If we vote down the previous question on the rule, then we can amend the rule so that we can amend the resolution.

Mr. MAVERICK. Oh, it might never come up. Let's go ahead and put it through. This Senate amendment provides an embargo on arms. That is not anywhere near enough, but it is something.

But I submit, Mr. Speaker, there are three features that concern this resolution which should be in any future legislation we should pass.

PRESIDENT SHOULD NOT HAVE POWER TO GET US IN WAR

First, we should not delegate the power to the President of the United States. [Applause.] When I say we should not delegate this power to the President of the United States, I am looking at the President as an institution and not as an individual, because I certainly would say that if Mr. Hoover were President, I would not want a lot of power delegated to him. Therefore, it should not be delegated to any human being. If the President is delegated optional powers to declare embargoes, why is he, in effect, given the power to declare war? We should never surrender such a power to the Chief Executive.

I want Congress to enact definite legislation and not to delegate and abandon to any Chief Executive the duty to keep our country out of war. Let us do our own duty.

POLICY OF NEUTRALITY SHOULD BE PERMANENT

The second point is that the policy of neutrality in this country, the policy of staying out of war, should not be up to the 29th of February, but it should be permanent. We should have a permanent policy of staying out of war. This resolution only provides until the 29th of February. I am willing to agree to that, though reluctantly, because we will be back here in Washington by that time and will have a lot of experience by that time, but when we come together again this should be made permanent. All I can say is that the resolution before us is not complete. It does not go into contracts and loans, which is very important. It does not go into many, many other features, but I am willing to vote for it as the best we can get.

Now, my third point is that when we return we should then go into this fully and enact far-reaching, comprehensive, clear-cut legislation, and not be afraid of crusty advisers of the State Department or noisy admirals. We know that by precedent nothing has been done to stop war, so let us break some precedents, and next year let us not wait until the last minute and vote for some more incomplete legislation. Let us all resolve to study the question in the meantime and come back in January and do our duty promptly.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

CONGRESSMAN ASHBROOK A COURAGEOUS CONGRESSMAN

Mr. ASHBROOK. I should like to say that I served in Congress during the World War and there is not a vote that I then cast that I regret today as the vote I cast against the McLemore resolution. I am happy to vote for this resolution.

Mr. MAVERICK. That is a courageous statement to make. I am only a new Congressman, and a soldier of the war. We all erred, and you deserve great praise for your statement, which at least proves a Congressman can think. You cannot be blamed for the way you voted then; all I can say is that I am proud to be your colleague. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is dedicated to the worthy purpose of keeping the United States out of war. When the World War was ended everyone rejoiced and hoped the United States never again would be confronted with the danger of war. Unfortunately, we realize the age-long dream of peace is still far from a reality. We are again confronted with a war spirit. I am going to vote for this particular legislation because this is all that can be obtained at the present time. I am quite in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK]. I regret to see this legislation, which is so vital to every American, brought here under a gag rule that makes it impossible for Congress to give real expression to its desires. In this it is in complete harmony with the policy of the House the greater part of its last 3 years. I am sure if we had an opportunity to offer amendments there would be no limitation upon this legislation.

I believe if Congress had the opportunity for fair expression, this legislation would be made mandatory and permanent. We all must realize, if we are to keep the country out of war, we cannot make this type of legislation discretionary. We cannot leave it to one man or any group of diplomats to determine when an embargo shall be applied. This would be extremely dangerous and be worse than no legislation. Instead of a move for peace it would be a possible breeder of war.

Legislation of this character can be passed much easier when war is in the distance. If by any unhappy chance there should be a war raging when the act expired on March 1 there would be far more difficulty in passing the bill than it would right now. Powerful and selfish interests could be depended upon to try and block the reenactment of the legislation.

For this reason I regret a parliamentary situation is created which prevents a vote on making it permanent legislation, as was done in the Senate by practically a unanimous vote.

I understand the situation thoroughly, however. The President of the United States is opposed to mandatory legislation. He would like to have it left discretionary, but we find that in the compromise he will accept the mandatory feature until March 1. At this late hour of the session we can do nothing else than accept the legislation. The alternative would be no legislation.

It is true if the House in its wisdom desired to vote down the previous question it can defeat this gag rule; it can then make this motion open to amendment.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Am I to understand from the statement of the gentleman that he is going to undertake to have the previous question voted down?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman would only wait for a few moments I would have explained that.

I repeat this course is open. Now, I am not going to advocate this because I know if we did we would not get any legislation at all. I am given to understand the limited mandatory law is as far as the President will go.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. The distinguished chairman of the committee is quoted in the press the other day as stating that he was opposed to the whole scope of this measure. Did the gentleman notice that?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The chairman can answer that question for himself.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I may state that I have not seen any such article. I will state to the gentleman that every provision in this bill was contained in the bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee last Saturday except one, and the only question involved in this provision is——

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman was treated rudely by the press.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I think the gentleman from Tennessee has been treated very nicely by the press despite what some other gentleman may say about it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CULKIN. The question is whether we want to make the bill mandatory or discretionary. As I understand it the gentleman wishes it discretionary; that is his real view.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is my understanding that the resolution made in order by the pending rule is exactly the same resolution that passed the Senate except the mandatory feature was limited to 6 months.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; not exactly that. The House bill contains a licensing feature for the sale of arms which, I understand, is acceptable to the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is in the Senate bill, I understand.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the paragraphs contained in the House bill are included in the pending bill and will be acceptable to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The essential difference is in section 2 of the bills, section 2 of the House bill providing that section 1 shall cease to be operative on February 29.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This limitation means we shall be obliged to fight the battle all over again next winter.

This is the best bill we can get now and consequently must accept it.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. But there is a limitation and the limitation is that he is going to have full power.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who will have full power?

Mr. FOCHT. The President.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not for the time it will be effective.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to have this bill for the present and work out other legislation at that time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We cannot do otherwise. We all know that if we had a chance to make this legislation permanent, that is what we would do. If we had time, I would say let us fight it out, but there is nothing to do now but accept the situation and support the bill.

Mr. MAVERICK. I feel somewhat the same way.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very earnestly in favor of the immediate passage of this rule, because I am equally earnestly in favor of the passage of this bill and of the bill as it is. It is not a case of a gag rule, because it is obviously unthinkable that we should attempt to legislate from the floor on a matter of this character which has been considered for months and months and months by both the Senate and House committees.

It is to be regretted that this bill comes here at this late hour, but that is water over the dam now. The thing for us to do, so long as there is the imminent danger confronting us, is to pass the best neutrality legislation possible and, in my opinion, this is the most important act of the present Congress.

I may say for the benefit of those who have not had an opportunity to examine it that this is the Senate bill. The issue as between mandatory legislation and permissive or discretionary legislation has been settled, at least for the time being, and I hope for all time in favor of mandatory legislation. I for one want to assure the gentleman from Massachusetts that if I am back here at the next and succeeding sessions I will use my voice and vote never to permit any President of the United States to become a dictator in reference to our foreign policy. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to elaborate on the statement I made that this is a Senate bill. It is the Senate bill with this exception which may or may not be an important exception. The legislation is temporary instead of permanent. Of course, all legislation in a sense is temporary because the Congress may change it at any time. There is also this important exception, that the House Committee on Foreign Affairs has added several provisions which somewhat improve the Senate bill. I want to compliment the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House in bringing to us a very fine piece of legislation to meet this emergency.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that a matter of such immense importance may not have a somewhat lengthier consideration than that which is permitted under this rule. At the risk of sounding what might seem to some persons a discordant note, I beg the indulgence of the Members of the House while I endeavor to make a few observations about this question of neutrality.

It is here proposed in effect to enact a statute of the United States providing mandatorially, at least until next March 1, that no national of the United States shall sell or offer for sale or transport to any belligerent country any arms, ammunition, or implements of war. As the thing will work out, upon the outbreak of war, and apparently only the President of the United States may decide when war breaks out at some point on the globe, he will issue a proclamation, whereupon this statute takes effect automatically to last for 6 months, which to my mind is an extraordinary proposal upon its face. However, I am speaking about the mandatory imposition or establishment of embargoes against the exportation of what is called the implements of war to belligerent countries.

I appreciate perfectly well the ideals which move the good people who support this measure. I respect those ideals myself, but at the same time it seems to me that we would better be fairly realistic when we begin to legislate about what America shall do with respect to its conduct in the future when trouble breaks out in the world. Let us be realistic and see if we can apply the provisions of this proposed measure to circumstances that may arise. Without intending to express any sentiment for or against any foreign nation, let me suggest that today there exists a situation which some people regard as threatening the peace of the world but which affects primarily and in the first instance only two nations, Italy and Ethiopia.

Italy is a great, powerful nation, equipped with industrial facilities and resources. Ethiopia is a small nation, utterly lacking in industrial resources. The philosophy of this legislation suggests that the weak nation shall not be permitted to purchase arms with which to defend itself. This brings up a very important vista that causes me to doubt very much indeed whether we should legislate mandatorily upon a question of this sort. No two wars are alike in their inception. No two wars bring about exactly similar consequent conditions. I am therefore wondering if it is wise for America, which, after all, is the hope of the peace of the world, to freeze its policy of neutrality in a statute. Is it safe? Is it wise?

The purpose of this legislation is to this effect: When two or more nations fall out and go to war, neither of them or any of them may purchase supplies from the outside; for surely if this purpose is sound, then it should become the law of the nations. It occurs to me that such a situation presents an open invitation to the great and the powerful to attack the weak, knowing that the weak is forbidden by the law of the nations, including the law of the United States, to purchase a weapon with which to defend itself. We have had instances of that sort within a very few years.

The Empire of Japan most certainly indulged in military aggression against China. China is a nonindustrial nation, ill-equipped, unprepared, although teeming with her millions in man power.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Japan, industrialized, armed to the teeth, ready, carried on that aggression. I am not discussing the merits of the controversy.

If I am not mistaken in my recollection, the Government of Great Britain declared an embargo against the exportation of munitions to both Japan and China. Japan made little or no protest against any such embargo, but poor China raised a wail of protest, called attention to the fact she must be permitted to purchase the weapons with which to defend herself and made such an impression upon the sense of justice of the whole world that the British Government withdrew its embargo order.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield.

Peace is greatly, greatly to be desired, but, Mr. Speaker, there is something even more precious than peace, and that is liberty. Looking back in our own history, can we forget what happened in 1776 and in the years immediately following that historic year? Had the principle of this bill been in effect in 1776 and had it been accepted by the nations of the earth, it is gravely, gravely doubtful that the 13 colonies could have achieved their independence. Remember our purchases from France!

So, Mr. Speaker, let us go a little slowly before we commit this great Government and this great country of ours irrevocably to a philosophy which may have the final effect of making it impossible for some oppressed, little people to gain its liberty or to defend it. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my distinguished colleague, Mr. SISSON, of New York, that from the standpoint of vital importance to the welfare of America the bill we are passing today, the so-called Senate mandatory "neutrality bill", takes first rank among the accomplishments of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. With the world in turmoil due to the activities of a dictator who seems to be hell bent on war, and with war already brooding over Europe, Africa, and the Orient, it is of the most extreme and pressing necessity that we shall do something to keep America from becoming involved. In these exigent circumstances this bill is a wise, salutary, and timely piece of legislation and it should pass this body unanimously so that the world may know by this significant action of the Chamber of the American Congress which stands closest to the people, and therefore is in a position to interpret the heart and conscience of this Nation, that in the event of another world war America is determined to remain neutral, attend to its own business, and keep its skirts free from the carnival of blood.

One of the wisest statesmen this country ever produced was a resident of the city I have the honor to represent in this Congress. I refer to Benjamin Harrison, the twenty-third President of the United States. He was a thinker, a man of high ideals, a devoted Christian, gifted with dynamic brain power, and a capacity for expressing a great deal of meaning in a very few sentences. He planted in my mind a thought that has ever since been the basis of my philosophy as to what America's relations should be with the family of nations.

The incident I shall relate occurred after he had been President and while he was still in the active practice of law at Indianapolis. I was a young newspaper reporter, working on an Indianapolis paper, and was carrying on a side line of correspondence with some outside newspapers, including the New York World.

One day the World telegraphed orders to me to interview General Harrison on the propriety of the United States Government intervening in an imbroglio in some foreign country—I have forgotten the exact incident—and I went to his home on North Delaware Street to execute the commission. I found him in his study, and when I asked his opinion on the question at issue he shot back an answer that still rings in my ears. He said:

We have no commission from God to police the world.

In that sententious remark is compressed a world of meaning. It is a reaffirmation in a more concise and forceful way of the immortal but more or less disregarded admonition of Washington against America's involvement in entangling alliances. It was Harrison's idea, with which I humbly voice my complete agreement, that America can best fulfill its magnificent destiny by maintaining friendly relations with all nations, cultivating the spiritual values and walking upright in the sight of the Lord rather than by mixing in the brawls of other nations where wars have been a pastime for a thousand years. I commend this expression of a wise man, "We have no commission from God to police the world", as a meaningful utterance, worthy of the best consideration of those who are anxiously contemplating the menacing world situation that exists today. If the world breaks out in flame let us remember the words of Washington and Harrison and let us not throw our fine young manhood into the holocaust.

This neutrality bill is one form of manifestation of the philosophy to which I have referred, and, in my opinion, it reflects the heart and soul of America. If there is one thing on which the people of America are determined it is that our boys shall not be sent to far distant lands to mix in quarrels that are not our own, to kill other boys, and to be killed by other boys who have no personal grievance against us as we have none against them, and who do not speak our language.

For a long time I have been doing my poor best to assist in promoting neutrality legislation, working shoulder to shoulder with such devoted lovers of peace as Representatives FRED J. SISSON, of New York, MAURY MAVERICK, of Texas, FRANK L. KLOEB, of Ohio, THEODORE CHRISTIANSON, of Minnesota, CHARLES W. TOBEY, of New Hampshire, H. P. KOPPLEMANN, of Connecticut, HARRY SAUTHOFF, of Wisconsin, and FRED BIERMANN, of Iowa. On Wednesday of this week we went to the White House, where we were most graciously received by President Roosevelt. In the discussion of foreign affairs that ensued no one could have failed to be impressed by the close attention the President is giving to the world situation, by his intimate knowledge of every development and by his stern determination to protect the peace of America.

The neutrality bill that is before us today is not a perfect measure. It leaves much to be desired but it is good as far as it goes and it will erect substantial safeguards to keep us from becoming involved in the war that already is beginning to blaze across the eastern horizon. As we approach what appears to be a world crisis, whose ultimate vast dimensions no living person can now envision, it is of the utmost importance that this history-making neutrality legislation shall be enacted.

I congratulate the President of the United States on his wisdom in consenting to the enactment of this bill for mandatory neutrality, rather than the State Department's plan for permissive neutrality—that is to say, a bill that would make the President of the United States the sole judge and authority as to the kind of neutrality measures that shall be employed and when and against what countries those measures shall be made effective.

The State Department's plan would be a colossal mistake, and in the far stretch of the years to come it might lead to the most tragic consequences. What we need is neutrality by law and not by Presidential edict. If we were to give to the President the power to prescribe neutrality measures and the time of their application we might just as well sponge out of the Constitution the authority now given to the Congress to declare war and write in its place:

"The power to declare war is hereby vested in the President of the United States."

The one grant of authority would be tantamount to the other. I once heard a President of the United States say that under existing laws he could maneuver the country into war within 2 weeks. He had no intention of doing so, of course, but he was stating what he could do, and he spoke truly. Given the tremendous additional power and authority of a "permissive neutrality" law, and the President would be supreme in his power to wage war.

This would make a situation that would be ripe for a dictator, but which, thank the Lord, would be violently repellent to every peace-loving American who loves and wishes to cherish the traditions and institutions of his country. As long as President Roosevelt is in the While House "permissive neutrality" would not be abused; but when we enact such laws, we do not enact them for one particular President but for all of the Presidents of the years to come. I can imagine a President of a type and mentality who, in order to pursue his ideas of national aggrandizement or to satiate his lust for power, might use the authority conveyed to him in a "permissive neutrality" law to plunge the Nation into a horrible war. Then, too, he might bring on the most dreadful consequences by acting in perfect good faith; for the judgment of no man is infallible, even though that man may be the President of the United States. "In multiplicity of counsel there is wisdom", says an old proverb, and it is not best to centralize authority in one man.

I am one of those who believe that the power to declare war should be decentralized instead of becoming even more centralized than it is at present. When the present Congress opened I introduced a resolution—House Joint Resolution No. 167—which is designed to keep America from being dragged into unjustifiable wars. It provides that, except in the case of invasion or attack, war shall not be declared until the question has been submitted to the people and approved by a majority of the citizens in a national referendum. It is predicated on the theory that those who have to suffer and, if need be, to die, and to bear the awful burdens and costs of war should have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. That, it seems to me, is elemental justice. I believe with all my heart in decentralizing the war-declaring power down to the people who comprise the warp and woof of America and not in further centralizing it upward to one individual, the President of the United States, and for that reason I am unalterably opposed to such "permissive neutrality" laws as the State Department advocates. The Senate mandatory neutrality bill is one that fits in well with America's relations with the world in these troubled and portentous times, and I would like to see it pass without a dissenting vote. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I am approving of this resolution for the reason I believe it is the best we can get at this time.

The world stands at the brink of a very grave crisis. Europe is once more threatened by the grim specter of war, and any step that the Congress of the United States can now take that will keep America from becoming embroiled in that bloody strife is a step which I, for one, am willing to support. [Applause.]

I repeat, I am going to vote for this resolution, although it is not as drastic as I had hoped it would be. One defect in this resolution is the leaving out of the provision barring loans to or the sale of the securities of the warring nations in the United States.

That is not as fatal, however, as it would seem at first blush. The Johnson resolution, passed by the Seventy-third Congress, barred loans and the sale of the securities of all nations now in default of the debts due to the United States.

That resolution bans the principal European nations from securing credit in this country, and it is my conviction that it will be a very effective check until such time as Congress sees fit to so strengthen its provisions as to bar, for all time, the making of loans for war purposes to all nations. Such a policy, with the curb on the sale of munitions, as provided in this resolution, will do more to keep us out of war than any other I can conceive of, and for that reason I am heartily in favor of it. No loans for war purposes to anyone. That is my policy.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from New York who stated that this particular resolution would work to the disadvantage of the small or weaker nation, let me draw a rapid comparison.

Before the war of 1914 we had no such policy as this. The war started and we supposed we were going to sell munitions to both nations, but almost immediately it became impossible for us to sell to Germany and then we could not change our policy because it would look as if we were sympathetic to the German cause.

The same thing would be true if we are on the verge of a difficulty between Italy and Ethiopia. We might now start selling to either nation, but if war starts, the time will rapidly arrive when we cannot sell to Ethiopia and we would be selling to Italy only.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, for one, I was in favor of trying to have adopted a resolution which would have fixed for all time a permanent policy rather than fixing it up to February 29, 1936. However, as Senator CLARK has stated, it is better to have a little bit of something than to have a great deal of nothing; and fully realizing that unless we can have harmony on this particular resolution, and fully realizing that it is more than likely that if we offer amendments or attempt to vote down the previous question, we may get into such a legislative jam at this late hour of Congress that even this resolution might be defeated and lost. I prefer to go along with the previous question and support the resolution.

However, I cannot let this opportunity go by without making two criticisms which I respectfully submit to the Members of the House.

First, why should we place any limitation of time at all?

If this is a just policy, if this is a policy which will keep us out of war, why should we terminate such a policy on February 29, 1936?

I believe that a neutrality policy is not a policy which should be determined by the State Department, influenced by intricacies of diplomacy, but a policy of neutrality should be determined by the representatives of the American people who will have to do the fighting in the event we are thrown into a conflict.

A neutrality policy should not be left to the discretion of the Executive or any branch of the executive department. A neutrality policy should be legislated by the House and by the Senate, legislated by the representatives of the American people, and that policy should be fixed permanently by us. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I think the more important question is that of loans. They do not care anything about a neutrality policy if they can get credit.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I was coming to that. This bill leaves a loophole through which the policy can be evaded. An embargo on arms is ineffective unless you have an embargo on loans. I do not want to fight the last war over again, but I think we all know that a great deal of the propaganda against Germany, a great deal of the poison injected into the schools, into the churches, and into the public forums of the Nation was instigated and paid for by private bankers who had a great financial stake in a victory for the Allies.

If there should be any prohibition at all, the most important of all should be a limit on the extension of credit to belligerent nations. No credit should be given to any of the belligerent nations by any individual, organization, or any financial institution of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SISSON. I agree with the criticism of this bill, if it was a complete program and not a mandatorial neutrality. However, we can, at the next session, make this a permanent work of securing an emphatic declaration of neutrality of credit.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As far as I am concerned, I am going along, but we have a splendid opportunity today to do something real to keep us out of war. Why not do it now, intead of waiting until next year?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I have profound respect and admiration for the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I believe under most circumstances his judgments are sound. He based his objection to the neutrality resolution entirely on the plea that if this becomes a national policy the weak are to be subjected to the oppression of the strong. It occurs to me that the gentleman's contention inevitably requires a determination as to which nation is weak and which is strong. It inevitably means, if we follow the reasoning of the distinguished gentleman from New York, that a national policy of America must be dependent, first of all, upon an arbitration or determination of the question as to which of the belligerent or contending powers is the stronger and which is the weaker, and immediately thereafter there must come, inevitably, a position on the part of this country by which it shall determine to which of two contending forces aid through the sale of arms and munitions shall be given.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was furthest from my thought that the Government of the United States should ever be called upon to make a decision as to which of two contenders might purchase. If any is to purchase, all must purchase. Otherwise, we are unneutral and guilty of an act of war.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the Membership of the House that the largest part of the gentleman's appeal was based on the possibility of an injustice being done to the weak at the hands of the oppressor. He recited, in support of his claim, the conditions prevailing at the time of our own war of independence, and it seems to me that if there is any justification for the plea of the gentleman from New York, it inevitably means that we are going to provide an aid for that group which is supposed to be weak in order that it might contend against the strong.

The position that I take today is that the neutrality resolution will provide to America an assurance that we shall maintain a spirit of neutrality for the welfare of America. Our first duty is to America. I have stood here on the floor of the House and supported and contended for those measures for the armed forces of America which I believe were justified and necessary. I shall continue in that policy, but I do believe and believe most sincerely that the policy of America should be such that you and I can go back to the districts which we represent and tell our people that we have done everything possible to prevent a recurrence of the conditions that prevailed in 1917–18. I ask on the part of the Membership of the House the same degree of care, the same degree of thoughtfulness, the same grave consideration of this situation as the distinguished gentleman from New York asks, but I ask at your hands, and ask today, a realization of the consequences we face unless a neutrality policy, absolute neutrality, is established by the Nation. This policy will not invite difficulties. It will prevent disasters. It will provide a continuity of the spirit of friendship with other nations. It will lessen the possibility of the development of commercial rivalries and the consequent involvent in international financial problems. But above all, it will assure the mothers of America that the flower of American young manhood will not be led to the carnage of destruction on foreign battlefields. God grant that the threatened disaster may be avoided and that we may have the courage to do our duty to minimize the possibilities of war. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN.]

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely in accord with what has been said for this resolution. In case there are any of you who have any doubt, I want to mention the statement made by General Smuts, that this crisis between Italy and Ethiopia may lead to a race war. Already within our own boundaries, we have seen evidence of race warfare in a small way. It is a hideous foreboding of what may come to pass in greater and more horrible degree.

If we pass this resolution, those who incite to race riots and who are perhaps looking to race warfare will realize that such activity will be of no avail. With the adoption of this neutrality resolution there will be an immediate end to race riots in this country, because those participating in them, because they feel themselves in allegiance bound to one or other of the belligerent countries, will know that the United States is without equivocation, neutral, and that the people of this country will not stand for any display of friendship for either Italy or Ethiopia, on the part of residents here, which friendship evidences itself in any sort of conflict. Race riots, unless they are immediately stopped, and their stopping backed by neutrality legislation which will keep this country absolutely impartial to warring nations, will lead to race wars.

This question of neutrality is not one of passive interest to the American people. They want neutrality, and they want neutrality legislation which will leave no doubt that the United States will in no way aid any nation at war. My mail in the last few days has not increased, but my telegrams have. Our people dare not take the time to write a letter. They dare not wait for the mails to bring us their pleas that we keep out of the impending war. They are afraid that we will not act, or act the wrong way, if they do not immediately and by the quickest route tell us that we must pass the strong neutrality legislation.

Not only are the so-called "peace advocates" wiring me. Mothers and fathers are wiring me. Young people—who are about to take their places in useful citizenship, and while their patriotism is above doubt, they feel they can best serve their country in peace, devote their efforts to our cultural and economic and scientific upbuilding—they are wiring me.

Here is a letter I received this afternoon from a veteran of the World War. If his letter were inspired by a lobby he would have demanded that I support the Senate resolution. But no. His letter was inspired only by his own strong feelings in the matter, by the horrible experience which was his during the World War, by the still more horrible experience which has been his during the past few black years during which we have been really paying the price for that treacherous prosperity which was ours during the World War.

This veteran tells me he would "appreciate my giving more thought to the resolutions drawn up by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee from recommendations offered by the Senate Munitions Committee" before casting my vote. And he recommends in addition even stronger provisions than are contained in the Senate resolution.

Ever since the last war there have been repeated efforts to bring about conditions which would prevent war. Still there has not been a time when some nation or other was not at war.

Yet they go on making gestures for peace. And behind these gestures what have they been doing? So adequately preparing themselves for war that they are ready on short notice, if need be, to put their armies, their navies, and their air forces into action.

War which has so often been discussed with an "it will never come to pass" attitude is starkly and horribly facing the world. If war were to be confined to two nations having differences, we might say, "Well, let them battle it out." But we have learned that war cannot be confined. It invites, and it tantalizes, and it provokes, and it spreads until another nation and another and another nation have signed up—it is like a tournament—and the world bursts into flame.

Even the United States, providentially cut off from other continents by thousands of miles of water, is not immune. There are any number of ties which bind us to the rest of the world. Any number of chance happenings can catch us off our guard and throw us unwillingly into war.

We must take every precaution. In the present threatened conflict between Ethiopia and Italy there is not the slightest reason why this country should assume more than an impartial interest.

The first step for the protection and security of the American people lies in our adopting this resolution. By leaving open the possibility of our taking sides with any belligerent nation, we have everything to lose and nothing to gain.

The threat inherent in a war between Ethiopia and Italy is not in itself so troublesome as the consequences to which such a war may lead. Africa is a continent of colonies subject to various parent European countries. All Europe is tense, anxiously watching developments, each nation jealous lest any blow be given to her prestige. That is where the danger lies, and that is just the danger against which the United States must guard.

Our neutrality policy must be changed and redefined. We dare not wait until after war has broken out. We will have become involved by that time. This resolution before us must pass today.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE SNYDER-GUFFEY COAL BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT AND STATEMENT

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement upon the bill H. R. 9100, to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a draw-back under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare; and for other purposes; and providing penalties, for printing under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9100) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 21.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 22, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"It shall not be an unfair method of competition or a violation of the code or any requirement of this Act (1) to sell to or through any bona fide and legitimate farmer's cooperative organization duly organized under the laws of any State, Territory, the District of Columbia, or the United States whether or not such organization grants rebates, discounts, patronage dividends, or other similar benefits to its members, (2) to sell through any intervening agency to any such cooperative organization, or (3) to pay or allow to any such cooperative organization or to any such intervening agency any discount, commission, rebate, or dividend ordinarily paid or allowed, or permitted by the code to be paid or allowed, to other purchasers for purchases in wholesale or middleman quantities."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9100) to stabilize the bituminous-coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: This amendment provides that not more than 3 of the 5 members of the Commission shall be members of the same political party. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 2 and 4: These amendments insert in the proper place and clarify the provision of the House bill under which employees of the Commission may not be related to members of the Commission. The House recedes on both amendments.

On amendments nos. 3 and 5: The House bill provided that appointment and compensation of officers and employees of the Commission and of the Consumers' Counsel should be made and fixed without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act. The Senate amendments provide that such appointment should be made and compensation fixed "with due regard" to such laws. The House recedes on both amendments.

On amendment no. 6: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill expressly making the antitrust laws inapplicable to coal producers, marketing agencies, and boards complaying with the code section. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 7 and 8: The House bill provided that one member of each district board should be selected by the national organization representing the preponderant number of employees in the industry. Senate amendment no. 7 strikes out "national". Senate amendment no. 8 relates the ascertainment of preponderant number to the particular district for which the board is established. The House recedes on both amendments.

On amendments nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18: Amendment no. 9 excludes Illinois, Indiana, and Iowa from minimum price area number 1, and amendment no. 10 makes a new area (no. 2) which includes these three States. The other amendments renumber the other areas. The Senate recedes on all these amendments.

On amendment no. 19: The House bill provided that the minimum prices established should reflect the relative market value of various coals and be just and equitable between producers within the district. The Senate amendment inserts the additional requirement that such prices be just and equitable between producers in competing districts. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 20: The Senate amendment provides that it shall not be an unfair method of competition or a violation of the code or the act to sell to or through any bona fide and legitimate cooperative (including duly organized farmers' cooperatives) whether or not the organization grants rebates, discounts, patronage dividends, or similar benefits to members; to sell through an intervening agency to such cooperative; or to pay or allow to the cooperative or intervening agency any discount, commission, or dividend ordinarily paid or allowed, or permitted by the code to be paid or allowed, to other purchasers for purchases in wholesale or middleman quantities. The House recedes with an amendment which confines the operation of the provision to farmers' cooperative organizations and to intervening agencies in connection therewith.

On amendment no. 21: This amendment provides that not more than two of the three members of the Labor Board shall be members of the same political party. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 22: This amendment provides that the appointment and compensation of officers and employees of the Labor Board shall be made and fixed with due regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act. The House recedes.

SAMUEL B. HILL,
DAVID J. LEWIS,
FRED M. VINSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the conferees be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], and then I am going to move the previous question.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I fear it will be quite impossible to cover much of the ground involved in this bill in the 5 minutes allotted to me. I do not know how the membership of this House feels at this particular time with reference to this bill and what it portends. I am not in favor of the provisions of this bill. I am opposed to the bill; but the implications which this bill carries are far-reaching, implications challenging the self-respect and honor of every Member of this House. In a very short time now we will have lived under our present Federal Constitution for 148 years. Under the Constitution we have grown to be a great and glorious nation. We believe in our Federal Constitution.

It has been the ambition of peoples from all over the world to come here and enjoy the opportunities which have come to every person who has stood beneath the folds of our flag. One reason why we have had an orderly and safe government, a government that has given us opportunities, is that for practically 148 years people have been loyal to the Federal Constitution; but today we are invited by the administration in power to ignore any unconstitutional features that may exist in this bill, and to pass it regardless of them.

Every Member of this House has taken an oath of office to defend and preserve and protect the Constitution of the United States. Long ago the Supreme Court established the rule that when any legislation was presented to it by the Congress of the United States it would indulge every reasonable doubt in favor of the legislation, and it indulged those doubts in favor of the legislation because it was assumed that every Member of Congress would endeavor to carry out his oath of office and not transgress the powers and restrictions laid down in the Constitution. That has placed the burden upon Members of Congress to be very circumspect and to be careful and to endeavor to live up to their oath of office and not transgress upon the powers and restrictions laid down in the Federal Constitution. But the President urges that Members ignore their oath of office and disregard the Federal Constitution; that we are not to pay any attention to principles, convictions, and constitutional limitations but instead to pass the responsibility on to the Supreme Court.

What is the purpose of the President in demanding that Representatives violate the solemn obligation of an official oath? Is it not to create ultimately prejudice against the Supreme Court?

Permit me to quote the letter written by President Roosevelt to Hon. SAMUEL B. HILL, of the subcommittee in charge of this legislation:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 5, 1935.

Hon. SAMUEL B. HILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HILL: Your subcommittee of the Ways and Means has pending before it H. R. 8479, a bill to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce, etc., and I understand that questions of the constitutionality of some of its provisions have arisen in the subcommittee.

This industry, from the standpoint of the operators and the miners, has had many years of difficulty. The product is a great natural resource entitled to the consideration of the Congress both as to the conditions under which it is produced and distributed and as to measures which may be taken for its conservation. The deposits are limited to a few States, the consumption is Nation-wide. Competition and overexpansion have brought destructive price reductions, which have inevitably reacted upon labor standards with a resulting dislocation, restriction, and obstruction of interstate commerce and a recurring danger of industrial strife. Circumstances such as these present the strongest possible illustration of how conditions of production directly affect commerce among the States.

Admitting that mining coal, considered separately and apart from its distribution in the flow of interstate commerce, is an intrastate transaction, the constitutionality of the provisions based on the commerce clause of the Constitution depends upon the final conclusion as to whether production conditions directly affect, promote, or obstruct interstate commerce in the commodity.

Manifestly, no one is in a position to give assurance that the proposed act will withstand constitutional tests, for the simple fact that you can get not 10 but 1,000 different legal opinions on the subject. But the situation is so urgent and the benefits of the legislation so evident that all doubts should be resolved in favor of the bill, leaving to the courts, in an orderly fashion, the ultimate question of constitutionality. A decision by the Supreme Court relative to this measure would be helpful as indicating with increasing clarity, the constitutional limits within which this Government must operate. The proposed bill has been carefully drafted by employers and employees working cooperatively. An opportunity should be given to the industry to attempt to work out some of its major problems. I hope your committee will not permit doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

I quote also from President Taft's veto message, which indicates the danger of complying with such a request.

EXCERPT FROM MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT TAFT VETOING WEBB-KENYON BILL, AS REQUESTED BY MR. REED

But it is said that this is a question with which the Executive or Members of Congress should not burden themselves to consider or decide. It is said that it should be left to the Supreme Court to say whether this proposed act violates the Constitution. I dissent utterly from this proposition. * * *

The oath that the Chief Executive takes, and which each Member of Congress takes, does not bind him any less sacredly to observe the Constitution than the oaths which Justices of the Supreme Court take. It is questionable whether the doubtful constitutionality of a bill ought not to furnish a greater reason for voting against the bill, or vetoing it, than for the Court to hold it invalid.

The Court will only declare a law invalid where its unconstitutionality is clear, while the lawmaker may very well hesitate to vote for a bill of doubtful constitutionality because of the wisdom of keeping clearly within the fundamental law.

The custom of legislators, and executives having any legislative function, to remit to the courts entire and ultimate responsibility as to the constitutionality of the measures which they take part in passing is an abuse which tends to put the Court constantly in opposition to the legislature and executive, and, indeed, to the popular supporters of unconstitutional laws.

If, however, the legislators and the executive had attempted to do their duty, this burden of popular disapproval would have been lifted from the courts, or at least considerably lessened (63d Cong., 1st sess., S. Doc. 103, vol 49, pt. 5, p. 4291, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD).

Why is it that the Supreme Court resolves all doubts in favor of the constitutionality of acts passed by the Congress? I quote from Cooley on Constitutional Law on this point:

The constitutionality of law, then, is to be presumed, because the legislature, which was first required to pass upon the question, acting as they must be deemed to have acted, with integrity, and with a just desire to keep within the restrictions laid down by the Constitution upon their action, have adjudged that it is so. They are a coordinate department of the Government with the judiciary, invested with very high and responsible duties, as to some of which their acts are not subject to judicial scrutiny, and they legislate under the solemnity of an official oath, which it is not supposed they will disregard. It must, therefore, be supposed that their own doubts of the constitutionality of their action have been deliberately solved in its favor, so that the courts may with confidence repose upon their conclusion, as one based upon their best judgment. For, although it is plain, upon the authorities, that the courts should sustain legislative action when not clearly satisfied of its invalidity, it is equally plain in reason that the legislature should abstain from adopting such action if not fully assured of their authority to do so.

Respect for the instrument under which they exercise their power should impel the legislature in every case to solve their doubts in its favor, and it is only because we are to presume they do so, that courts are warranted in giving weight in any case to their decision. If it were understood that legislatures refrained from exercising their judgment, or that, in cases of doubt, they allowed themselves to lean in favor of the action they desired to accomplish, the foundation of the cases we have cited would be altogether taken away. (Cooley Constitutional Limitations.)

It is but a decent respect to the wisdom, the integrity, and the patriotism of the legislative body by which any law is passed, to presume in favor of its validity, until its violation of the Constitution is proved beyond all reasonable doubt. (Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213.)

It has been said by an eminent jurist that when the courts are called upon to pronounce the invalidity of an act of legislation, passed with all the forms and ceremonies requisite to give it the force of law, they will approach the question with great caution, examine it in every possible aspect, and ponder upon it as long as deliberation and patient attention can throw any new light upon the subject, and never declare a statute void, unless the nullity and invalidity of the act are placed, in their judgment, beyond a reasonable doubt. A reasonable doubt must be solved in favor of the legislative action, and the act be sustained.

Is the Congress prepared to destroy this century-old salutary rule by convincing the Court that it can no more rely upon Representatives to respect their oath of office and assume responsibility under it when formulating and passing legislation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 186, nays 150, answered "present" 1, not voting 93, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT AND STATEMENT—COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on House Resolution 348.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

THE NEUTRALITY BILL

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and to pass Senate Joint Resolution 173, providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war, as amended.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerant ships during war

Resolved, etc., That upon the outbreak or during the progress of war between, or among, two or more foreign states, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port of such belligerent states, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country.

The President, by proclamation, shall definitely enumerate the arms, ammunitions, or implements of war, the export of which is prohibited by this act.

The President may, from time to time, by proclamation, extend such embargo upon the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to other states as and when they may become involved in such war.

Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this section, shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States, or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and the property, vessel, or vehicle containing the same shall be subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 8, inclusive, title 6, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 223–225; U. S. C., title 22, secs. 238–245). In the case of the forfeiture of any arms, ammunition, or implements of war by reason of a violation of this act, no public or private sale shall be required; but such arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be delivered to the Secretary of War for such use or disposal thereof as shall be approved by the President of the United States.

When in the judgment of the President the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist he shall revoke the same and the provisions hereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "Board" means the National Munitions Control Board which is hereby established to carry out the provisions of this act. The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board; the Secretary of the Treasury; the Secretary of War; the Secretary of the Navy; the Secretary of Commerce; the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate; and the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, or some member of each committee whom the chairman of the respective committees may designate. Except as otherwise provided in this act, or by other law, the administration of this act is vested in the Department of State;

(b) The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia;

(c) The term "person" includes a partnership, company, association, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

Within 90 days after the effective date of this act, or upon first engaging in business, every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war referred to in this act, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports, or exports.

Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $500, and upon receipt of such fee the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment of each renewal of a fee of $500.

It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act to any other country or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other country any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act without first having obtained a license therefor.

Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this act or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

The Board shall be called by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

No purchase of arms, ammunition, and implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this act.

The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. It shall include a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this act, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder.

The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions.

The President is hereby authorized to proclaim, upon recommendation of the Board, from time to time a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section. This section shall take effect on the ninetieth day after the date of its enactment.

SEC. 3. Whenever the President shall issue the proclamation provided for in section 1 of this act, thereafter it shall be unlawful for any American vessel to carry any arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any part of the belligerent countries named in such proclamation as being at war, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country.

Whoever, in violation of the provisions of this section, shall take, attempt to take, or shall authorize, hire, or solicit another to take any such vessel carrying such cargo out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and the arms, ammunition, and implements of war on board shall be forfeited to the United States.

When the President finds the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation, and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 4. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States, or its possessions, men or fuel, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a foreign belligerent nation, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. ; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, or any of its possessions, for a foreign port, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or the cargo, or any part thereof, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation; and, if the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, or one of its possessions, has previously cleared from such port during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

SEC. 5. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States, or of its possessions, by the submarines of a foreign nation will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or any of its possessions, or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. When, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 6. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that the maintenance of peace between the United States and foreign nations, or the protection of the lives of citizens of the United States, or the protection of the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or the security of the United States requires that the American citizens should refrain from traveling as passengers on the vessels of any belligerent nation, he shall so proclaim, and thereafter no citizen of the United States shall travel on any vessel of any belligerent nation except at his own risk, unless in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to a citizen traveling on the vessel of a belligerent whose voyage was begun in advance of the date of the President's proclamation, and who had no opportunity to discontinue his voyage after that date: And provided further, That they shall not apply under 90 days after the date of the President's proclamation to a citizen returning from a foreign country to the United States or to any of its possessions. When, in the President's judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 7. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this act where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 8. If any of the provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. The sum of $20,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of State in administering this act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARTIN, has 20 minutes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution concerning a matter of vast importance, due to world conditions prevailing at this time, and it is here in the form of a compromise. The threatening war clouds of Europe make it imperative that we pass legislation before Congress adjourns for the session which will lessen the danger of our country becoming involved in war if Italy and Ethiopia engage in war, which now seems inevitable. War between these countries may involve others, and before we meet again next January no one can foretell how many of the major powers of the world may be involved in the conflict. The peace of the world is endangered and the outlook is as dark as it was in 1914 just prior to the beginning of the World War. It behooves us to set our house in order and eliminate every hazard which may tend to drag us into the vortex of war. The purpose of this resolution is to do that very thing.

We know from experience how difficult it is to maintain neutrality when major powers are at war, and our love of peace should prompt us to bury our differences as to the form such legislation should take and agree to pass now this resolution which we are assured may be enacted into law. The end of the session is too near at hand to jeopardize the passage of this important resolution by loading it down with amendments which would necessitate a conference between the two Houses and likely result in no legislation.

The Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, and members of the subcommittee appointed by him, of which I had the honor to be the chairman, have conferred with the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the other body, and also with the President, and as a result of conferences had, the terms of this bill have been written and we feel reasonably assured that if we pass it in its present form it will become a law.

It is a compromise bill and Members entertaining different views have, in view of the existing emergency, made concessions which otherwise they would not have done.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs have had many hearings at this session upon the subject of neutrality legislation, and the gentleman who stated that no consideration had been given the subject by the committee was in gross error.

The Senate bill which we are now considering is in many respects similar to House Joint Resolution 386 and H. R. 8788, both introduced by the chairman of our committee, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, at this session. H. R. 8788 is a bill to control the trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and which was favorably reported by our committee, is substantially section 2 of the Senate bill we are now considering. House Joint Resolution 386 was a neutrality bill, more comprehensive and in some respects a better bill than the Senate bill. It contained two features not in the Senate bill. One was a provision denying credit or loans by citizens of this country to governments engaged in war and the other prohibited the use of the American flag upon belligerent vessels. Both of these sections would greatly improve the Senate bill and, in my judgment, are most desirable in preventing complications that might involve us in war.

This bill, therefore, is a blending of the McReynolds and the Senate bills, and the chief difference is that section 1 of this bill, which prohibits the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to warring nations, makes it mandatory upon the President to issue a proclamation of inhibition, while the McReynolds bill left to the President the discretion as to when such proclamation should issue. We have amended the Senate bill so that section 1 will not be effective after February 29, 1936, and Congress will, at its next session, determine its permanent policy in this regard.

Section 2 creates a National Munitions Control Board, composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce. The Senate bill also designated the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House as members of this Board, but we believed that it was unwise, if not unconstitutional, to have Members of Congress serve in the executive branch of the Government, and we have amended the bill.

It requires those who manufacture, export, or import arms, ammunition, or implements of war—so as to eliminate them as members of the board—shall register and pay a fee of $500 and secure license for each shipment.

Section 3 of the bill provides that whenever the President issues a proclamation as to the existence of war between foreign countries thereafter it shall be unlawful for any American vessel to carry any arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any port of such belligcrent countries, or to any neutral port for transshipment to a billigerent country.

Section 4 provides that during a war in which the United States is a neutral, the President or anyone authorized by him shall have cause to believe that any vessel either domestic or foreign is about to carry out of the United States port, men, fuel, arms, ammunition, or supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a foreign belligerent nation, steps may be taken to prevent the sailing of such vessel or to require a bond conditioned that such vessel will not deliver same to such belligerent ship.

Section 5 authorizes the President to place restrictions during any war in which we are a neutral, governing the entry of submarines into any port or territorial waters of the United States.

Section 6 provides that during any war in which our Government is neutral the President shall find that the peace between the United States and foreign nations, or the protection of the lives of the citizens of our country, or the protection of the commercial interests of the United States requires that American citizens should refrain from traveling as passengers of vessels of belligerent nations he shall so proclaim, and thereafter no citizen shall travel on any vessel of a belligerent nation except at his own risk.

This is a brief outline of the terms of the resolution.

The subject of neutrality and legislation governing it is one upon which conflicting views always have been and always will be entertained. There are two schools of thought on this subject. There are those represented by the gentleman from New York, who believe that neutrality, as he expressed it, should not be frozen into a statute but should be left to the exercise of the President as conditions arise. On the other hand there are those who believe we should have fixed statutory regulations dealing with all warring nations. This bill is a blending of these two schools of thought.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I cannot in the time available undertake to discuss the subject of neutrality, vast as it is; I cannot even discuss the various provisions of the bill, and have only briefly referred to them. Section 2 of the bill is permanent. Any concern manufacturing arms for export is required to register and secure a license before it can ship arms, ammunition, or implements of war. This bill provides that the consignee and the destination of the arms shall be shown as well as who manufactures them. We have on the statute books at the present time a prohibition against the exportation of arms to Paraguay and Bolivia, but it has been violated with impunity because it is impossible to detect where the arms are going.

When the pending bill becomes law the Government then will know not only who is manufacturing the arms, but a license must be obtained before they can be exported, and the manufacturer is required to keep permanent records that can be inspected. The books are open to inspection and the Board is required to make an annual report to Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I am in hearty accord with the purpose of the pending resolution. But under the terms of this bill I am wondering if there is anything to prevent manufacturers in this country from shipping implements of war to a neutral country and their being reshipped from the neutral country to one of the belligerents? We know that has happened in the past.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The bill takes care of that situation, for it prohibits the shipment of arms to a neutral country for reshipment to a belligerent country.

I cannot talk longer, for there are other members of the committee who want to discuss this bill. Let me say in conclusion that, regardless of the conflicting views that may be entertained by the Members of this House as to the character of neutrality legislation that should be passed, I think we are all agreed that we have had enough of war and are resolved that our Nation must not again become involved in a war between foreign countries.

We are still paying the penalties of the last great war, and our children and the generations yet to come will continue to do so. The signing of the armistice and the subsequent treaty of peace ended hostilities, but it did not end the suffering and sacrifices of our people nor of the other peoples of the world.

I am glad, therefore, to vote for this resolution which is designed to and I think will materially reduce the danger of our country's becoming involved in war, if other nations should decide to fight.

The prevention of war is one of the highest duties that government owes society, and any nation that will not take every precaution and use every legitimate means to avert the holocaust of war is unworthy to stand among civilized nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, today, on the editorial page of a Washington newspaper, appears an artist's conception of the world going into a tail-spin, a tail-spin into chaos. Since that summer day in 1914, when a rash Serbian youth at Sarajevo fired the shot which set the world on fire, the nations have not been confronted with a more critical situation than that which they face today.

Already the forces of propaganda have been let loose; propaganda which may involve the United States in a war that is not its concern. The questioning of the present neutrality bill, the suggestion that Congress should leave the President with a free hand to apply economic sanctions against recalcitrant nations in cooperation with foreign governments, the plea for little Ethiopia, which strikes as responsive a chord today as the plea for Cuba did in 1898 and the plea for Belgium in 1914; these are all reminiscent of the influences, subtle at first, which moved the United States with irresistible force into the European conflagation in 1917.

We have appropriated unprecedented sums for the Army and Navy on the theory that overwhelming armaments will insure peace. I am pleading today for another form of preparedness, preparedness against war by the removal of as many as possible of the contingencies which might result in our involvement. The bill we are now considering is a step in the right direction. It does not go as far as I would like to go. I would prefer to see the provisions of section 1 made the permanent law of the land, and as a member of the subcommittee which drafted the House amendments I protested against the time limitation. I would also add a section banning all loans and credits to belligerent countries. [Applause.]

I call attention to the possibility that by March 1, 1936, when by reason of the limitation contained in section 1 the provisions thereof will be inoperative, Europe, Africa, and Asia may be aflame. The United States may at that time find itself confronted with a situation that will make it exceedingly difficult to maintain an entirely neutral position. Congress may also find itself confronted with a situation that will make it difficult, if not impossible, to pass a bill to continue the ban on exports. If, at that time, the world should be at war, our farmers would see before them the alluring prospect of 30-cent cotton and $4 wheat; industrialists, including manufacturers of munitions, would see opportunities to sell arms, ammunition, and implements of war at a profit of 400 percent; laboring men, 11,000,000 of whom are still unemployed, would see a chance to secure employment at $10 a day.

The newspapers would be under the pressure of alien influences. There would be emissaries from foreign countries all over the land, seeking to influence public opinion and to inflame the public mind. By March 1, 1936, we may find ourselves confronted by the same conditions which hurled us into war in 1917. We may feel today a fixed determination to stay out, but are we sure that we are made of sterner stuff than those who sat in these seats on Good Friday 18 years ago? We may have confidence in our President, but is that confidence, however merited, more justified than that of the voters who in 1916 reelected Woodrow Wilson because he had "kept us out of war"?

It is because I am one of those who believe in letting their feet be guided by the light of history that I feel that it would be a wiser policy to save ourselves against the possibility of being drawn into war after March 1 next year by eliminating the proviso placing an arbitrary and definite limitation upon the operation of the embargo provisions of this bill.

Mr. KVALE. We will be in session.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Yes; we will be in session, but we may be subjected to propaganda, and it may be so powerful that we shall be unable to resist it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, there should be a section banning loans and credits to belligerents, although I am frank to say that any attempt to add such a section would raise a highly controversial issue. It would require more time than we have during the closing hours of a dying session to draft proper provisions, and undertaking to do so might defeat the pending measure. It is only my desire to see some neutrality legislation, however deficient, enacted now that deters me from insisting upon an amendment. The Johnson law provides a ban on loans to nations in default, and constitutes a bar to extending further credit to most of the countries that may become belligerent; but I trust nevertheless that a measure will be adopted next year that will adequately guard against our involvement in controversies that are not our concern by the investment of American money in foreign wars.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder what the gentleman thinks of the proposition of the United States or any other great country severing all economic and financial relations with any nation that promotes a war anywhere in the world? My opinion is that such an economic and financial boycott will do more to stop war or prevent war, than anything else that could be done.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Severing commercial relations with one of two belligerent countries and not with the other might and probably would be construed to be an unneutral act, and as such might involve us in war. I believe that when it becomes necessary to apply economic sanctions they should be applied to both sides. Such a course would, of course, deprive us of markets we might prefer to retain, but it would keep us out of international pitfalls. I am as well aware as anybody of the desirability of profitable foreign commerce from an economic standpoint, but I would say that when we are faced with the choice of being deprived of the profits of trade or being drawn into a destructive war that might destroy civilization, I for one shall prefer the lesser of the two evils.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to a communication that was addressed by Robert Lansing, then Secretary of State, to President Wilson, in 1915. Secretary Lansing said:

> Doubtless Secretary McAdoo has discussed with you the necessity of floating Government loans for the belligerent nations, which are purchasing such great quantities of goods in this country, in order to avoid a serious financial situation which will not only affect them but this country as well * * *. To withdraw any considerable amount (of gold from Europe to finance the American war trade) would disastrously affect the credit of European nations, and the consequence would be a general state of bankruptcy. If the European countries cannot find means to pay for the excess of goods sold to them * * * they will have to stop buying.

From this communication it appears that in 1915 the argument that the Government should involve itself in a foreign quarrel to the extent of making loans to belligerents in order to protect private profits, was voiced by a no less influential official than the Secretary of State. Wittingly or unwittingly he permitted himself to be used as an instrument of foreign propaganda, and it would seem from the communication that the Secretary of the Treasury was in agreement with his proposal. The effectiveness of the financial procedure which Secretary Lansing recommended in getting us into the war appears from what Andre Tardieu of France subsequently said:

> From that time on, whether desired or not, the victory of the Allies became essential to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I was much impressed, as I am sure other Members were, with the argument just made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], whose ability and patriotism all acknowledge. With his statement that "peace is greatly to be desired, but liberty is even more to be desired than peace" I cannot disagree. I can only answer that it is our liberty, not that of other peoples, that must be our great concern. For our own freedom we would be willing to sacrifice the last drop of blood and the last ounce of treasure. But it is doubtful national policy to stand ready to spend our man power and our economic resources in behalf of any other nation, however serious its plight or just its cause, that happens to be oppressed. We waged a war for humanity in Cuba and inherited a Pandora's box of troubles. We made the world safe for democracy in 1918 and were so successful in our adventure that there is now not a single country in the world where democratic institutions are secure. The drops of blood we shed have grown into iron men.

The gentleman would not bind the hands of this Nation. He would wait until an emergency arises before acting. The trouble is that after an emergency has arisen, after a war has started, the declaration of an embargo becomes in fact a declaration of war.

In substantiation of that statement, I will quote the words of Woodrow Wilson.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I quote from what Woodrow Wilson, then President of the United States, said in reply to Germany's request to bar allied war trade in 1915:

> This Government holds—and is constrained to hold in view of the present indisputable doctrines of accepted international law—that any change in our laws of neutrality during the progress of a war, which would affect unequally the relations of the United States with the nations at war, would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States.

The fact that a Senate proposal for such a ban late in 1914 was protested by Great Britain and disavowed by the State Department shows how impossible it is after an emergency has arisen, after the belligerents are already at war, to make a choice of policy. Such a choice would inevitably force us into an unneutral position. We should have to choose either to impose an embargo or not to do so. If the imposition of an embargo or the refusal to impose one operated to the advantage of one belligerent and the disadvantage of the other, necessarily either our failure to act or our decision to act would constitute an unneutral act which might involve us in war. [Applause.]

It has been urged in opposition to this bill that it received but little consideration in the body in which it originated. It is true that there was only one-half hour of debate, but before the debate there was prolonged and thorough investigation of the subject with which the measure deals. The inquiry disclosed the means used by those having a financial interest in wars to force nations into them. The disclosures aroused the conscience of the American people, who are determined never again to carry the flag to foreign soil except to rout an invader.

It has been said that we should not tie the hands of the President. Let me remind you that the Constitution gives to us, and to us alone, the power to declare war, and it is inconsistent with the Constitution to leave in the hands of the Chief Executive discretion, the unwise exercise of which will lead to war. A prudent President would not want the sole responsibility of life and death for millions of our young men, and a rash and indiscreet President should not have it.

I recognize that no mandatory measure can be framed that will fit every conceivable future situation, but that should not deter us from writing into the permanent law of the land provisions that will protect us against obvious pitfalls. It should not prevent us from putting into formal legislation a definition of our policy which all men and all nations may read, on which they may rely, and by which they may be warned.

We are enacting the most important measure of the session. We are passing a bill that history will note. We are serving notice on the world that as we renounced war we are willing to renounce its profits, and that when we gave our adherence to the Kellogg-Briand Pact we did not take the name of peace in vain.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB].

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Speaker, since the inception of the Seventy-fourth Congress there have been many Members who have been active and assiduous in their efforts to establish certain neutrality policies by law. I have been one of them, and I desire to say to my friends who have collaborated with me that I feel that this bill today, while not all that we might desire, yet constitutes a distinct gain. I am for it. I hope that it passes, and it should pass the House unanimously.

To my friend the distinguished Member from New York let me address myself for just a moment. I have the highest regard for the logic of his thought and the strength of his character. I have admired him since I have been a Member of this House. He is solicitous about the welfare of the small nations of the world. He is solicitous over the peace of the world. So also was I solicitous back in 1917 over these same problems. So am I solicitous today, but the lessons taught me prior to and during the World War have changed my mind to the extent that today I am solicitous first for the peace of America [applause], and I think in being solicitous for the peace of America I am solicitous for the welfare and the future of white civilization.

This bill is not all that I would have it. In March of this year I introduced a bill providing for a ban on the making of loans and extension of credits to any nation at war—a mandatory measure. This bill, I felt, would attack the spearhead of the whole neutrality problem. Let us get back to the sinking of the Lusitania. When she went down there were established in our minds three principles of neutrality: First, she carried munitions of war in her hold. Had there been a law prohibiting that, perhaps we would not have become embroiled in the war. Second, those munitions were sold upon credit. Had credits been banned, perhaps, the sale of those munitions and their shipment in the hold of the Lusitania would never have occurred. Third, she carried American citizens bound for joy rides in a country engaged in war. Had there been a law prohibiting this, perhaps we would not have become embroiled.

So I feel that a law banning loans and credits to any nation engaged in war, followed by a law prohibiting the issuance of passports to any citizen of this country to travel in any nation engaged in war, and an embargo on the shipment of arms would constitute a neutrality policy that would help to keep this country from war in the future. [Applause.]

The bill before us is a compromise. It is the Senate bill with slight modifications. It provides for a mandatory embargo on the sale and shipment of munitions of war to all nations engaged in war. It does not permit the selection of a so-called "aggressor" nation. It provides for the registration of all makers of munitions and the licensing of each shipment. It provides that American citizens travel on belligerent vessels at their own risk. With these provisions I agree. This is not all that I desire. It is, however, a distinct gain. With the hope of taking further steps in the future, I go along.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be one of two Members of the House who voted against war in 1917. [Applause.] I make this statement simply to show that I prefer peace to war when war can be honorably avoided, but I am wondering where we would be today if France had had such a law upon her statute books in 1776.

As I see it, if all the great powers of the world enact legislation similar to this, it will mean the end of all small countries within the next 50 years; and I am speaking more particularly of agricultural countries, because they will not be in a position to maintain their independence.

Mr. Speaker, there is more than one angle to this question. Indeed, over in Africa today there is every prospect of an early war; and we will refuse to sell, to a people who are threatened with having their liberties taken away from them, the means with which to defend themselves and to preserve their independence. Yet we say we believe in democracy.

I am wondering how carefully this legislation has been considered. Is it not about time that Congress stop legislating by hysteria and get down to brass tacks and legislate in a practical manner? I would not do anything, knowingly, to bring on a war, but I would do everything in my power to help another country retain its independence; and I cannot agree with my distinguished colleague from Minnesota when he says that he prefers peace to liberty. I do not want to be a canary bird in a gilded cage. I would rather be a soaring eagle, free and untrammeled.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I believe the gentleman unintentionally misquoted me.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sorry.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I was quoting the gentleman from New York as having said that liberty was more to be desired, even than peace, and was making some observations upon that statement.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sorry. I was not here when the gentleman from New York made his statement, and I ask that the RECORD be corrected.

I come from a people who have sailed the seas for thousands of years. They have never been slaves or serfs, and I would rather die than give up my liberty, and so would you, and we would not be true to those who made those great sacrifices at Valley Forge and at Gettysburg and at Soissons, if we took any other position. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of bringing this resolution in and jamming it through in the closing hours of the Congress is, to my mind, a very serious indictment of the administration. I believe this to be the most important bill that we have considered in the Congress this entire session. I shall vote for the measure because I feel it is better than the measure introduced by the chairman of our committee, which would have given the President power to determine which was the belligerent nation, and therefore it would be an act of war. The people of America do not want another war. We must do everything in our power to avert war. I could not help thinking there was much in the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I could not help thinking that in the days to come we may regret our action of today, but I feel under all the circumstances it is the best thing that we can do.

Tomorrow in my home city the Massachusetts American Legion will hold their convention. We should arrange it so that their sacrifice shall not have been in vain. We are not a country of weaklings. If the security of our country is in danger, there is not a young man in the whole United States who would not fight for it, but we want to protect those young men. Every Member of Congress ought to have a chance to express himself and vote upon the different paragraphs of the bill. The men and women upon the floor at this moment represent the people of this entire Nation. We have a solemn duty to perform. Think of passing something that may so jeopardize the future of our country, in 40 minutes. I hope that every Member here will study the international question, will talk with the members of the State Department who have been there for years.

This is not a political question. It involves the welfare of our country. Much of the economic distress in the United States today is due to the great World War. We know of the mistakes that were made at that time, and those of you who were in Congress when war was declared and who voted for war will never forget it, and why did you do it? Because you felt that you were making this country safe for the people of this country, as well as safe for the entire world.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to explain the reasons why this bill came out in this form. There is no one here or elsewhere who abhors war more than I do, and as Chairman of your Foreign Affairs Committee of the House,

I shall always use every honorable means to prevent and to keep this country out of war. There seems to be a misconceived idea as to what neutrality is. You can pass neutrality laws, and then undertake to enforce them and put yourself into war. I do not approve of the mandatory provision of this bill, I am frank to say. I introduced a bill on August 17, which would give the President discretion, including the provisions of this bill, excepting the second section, which was reported out of the House in a separate bill, that was exercised, in this country, from 1898 to 1912. The President of the United States has a greater responsibility to prevent war and to sustain peace than any of you, and I am always willing to leave it to that office.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have not the time. No other great country has a mandatory provision of this character, and when you put a mandatory provision in, you absolutely destroy this great country's efforts for peace, and you know it. The only reason that your committee has agreed to this amendment, taking it to the first of March, is on account of present conditions, and the present demand for some character of neutrality legislation. Rather than stand in the way of that, your committee has brought this out and placed a limitation thereof, as we will be in session some 2 months before it expires. With this mandatory provision, suppose a foreign country should attack Mexico or Canada, or should attack any of the South American countries. You could not ship any of those countries arms. Your President would have no discretion. The bill makes no exception. Then where is your Monroe Doctrine? That is the situation.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have not the time.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is the gentleman for this bill or against it?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am not yielding to the gentleman. He will please keep his seat. I am for this bill. It is a compromise measure. I wanted to explain the reasons why I am for it, merely as a compromise, knowing that at this late hour we could not pass another bill in the Senate, and so anxious were we for some neutrality legislation that we were willing to compromise our views to this extent and send the bill to the Senate, and we feel that they will agree. That is the reason your committee has reported out the bill. For that reason I ask you to pass the bill in this form. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the Senate joint resolution, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock tonight.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House met at 8 o'clock p. m.

PUBLIC-UTILITIES BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the conferees on the public-utility bill to file their report at any time, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House, and that it may be in order at any time thereafter to consider said report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to filing the report when it is ready, but I do not want to give unanimous consent to have that considered this evening.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, it will not be considered this evening.

Mr. SNELL. Then why does the gentleman make his request?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am telling the gentleman it will not be considered this evening. It will not be called up before we meet tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, you could not call it up before we meet tomorrow, but the gentleman does not need unanimous consent to call it up tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Why not?

Mr. SNELL. You have a conference report.

Mr. RAYBURN. The trouble about it is, I will say to the gentleman from New York, if that request is not granted, it will have to be printed in the RECORD. It will take until 2 or 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning to get this report ready.

Mr. SNELL. Well, we want to know what the report is.

Mr. RAYBURN. It will be presented tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to waive any rights, because I propose to have a vote on this conference report.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman will have that. I will ask for it myself.

Mr. SNELL. It will not be called up regardless, until after we meet tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. It will not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, the effect of the gentleman's request, as I understand it, is that the conference report may be filed tonight too late to get in the RECORD?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is right.

Mr. MAPES. And that the House may be asked to vote upon it tomorrow before it is printed and the Members have an opportunity to study it. That is the effect of it?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct. There is no question about that.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman try to have enough copies made so that the Members may have an opportunity to read it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say this: I will do my best to do that. Whether I can or not, I do not know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

There was no objection.

STAY OF DEPORTATION OF ALIENS OF GOOD CHARACTER

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 350, requesting that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation in the cases of aliens of good character in which deportation would result in unusual hardship until Congress had had an adequate time to consider proposed legislation, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object—a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. What is the status of this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has called up House Resolution 350 and asked for its immediate consideration.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To save time on the rule, there is an hour on this resolution, and it is perfectly agreeable to give the gentleman and those opposed to the resolution half of that time to oppose it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is that the resolution calling for an investigation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is for the postponement of deportation of aliens of good character.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, that will only give us 1 hour to discuss the whole proposition?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope we will not have to take up anything that will require longer tonight. We have several rules to act upon. We spent 3 days in Rules Committee on this matter, and Rules Committee was unanimous in reporting it out, after thorough hearing.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The members of the committee are insisting that they should have more time than that.

Mr. FOCHT. We want more time than that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You have a whole hour on it.

Mr. FOCHT. No; we do not have an hour.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then, Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 362.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Resolution 350, a resolution requesting that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue to stay the deportation in the cases of aliens of good character in which deportations would result in unusual hardship until Congress had had adequate time to consider proposed legislation. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendment thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman give us some time on the rule?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thought we had an understanding that these rules could be passed tonight by unanimous consent. Now, if an hour is going to be had on each rule, an hour on each bill, and if each bill is to be read for amendment, that is not according to the agreement we had.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, we had no agreement so far as I was concerned.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the House has some rights. As a matter of fact, important legislation cannot be brought in by agreement between two or three people and be put through by unanimous consent; that is not the consent of the House; these bills should not be passed without consideration.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then we will consider it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The only agreement I had with the Chairman of the Rules Committee was that we would let the rules go through without opposition to the rules, but that we would want time for consideration of the bills. We did this in the interest of getting through at a reasonable time tonight. Now, if this is not satisfactory, we will adopt the rule in the regular way and take the time we need on it.

Mr. MICHENER. I think that is fair. Regardless of the time it takes, let us give proper consideration to important legislation and not rush it through.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Can we not adopt the rule and start debate on the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. That is all right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of House Resolution 350, requesting that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation in the cases of aliens of good character in which deportation would result in unusual hardship until Congress had had an adequate time to consider proposed legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANSLEY and Mr. MCFARLANE) there were—ayes 119, noes 37.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, in view of the apparent misunderstanding on this side, could not the proceedings by which the rule was voted on be vacated?

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to that.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that business has intervened since the vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-eight Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Seargeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 211, nays 83, not voting 136, as follows:

ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR EXTRA LABOR AT NAVY YARDS

Mr. RAMSPECK submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 872) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims.

STAY OF DEPORTATION IN CASES OF ALIENS OF GOOD CHARACTER

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House Resolution 350, requesting that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation in the cases of aliens of good character in which deportation would result in unusual hardship until Congress has had an adequate time to consider proposed legislation, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the 1 hour general debate provided for in this resolution be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 350) requesting that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation in the cases of aliens of good character in which deportation would result in unusual hardship until Congress has had an adequate time to consider proposed legislation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 184, noes 8.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently a quorum is present.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Resolution 350, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 350

Whereas during the past 2 years the Department of Labor has stayed the deportation of some 2,600 hardship cases of aliens technically subject to deportation whose deportation would involve the separation of many families, leaving approximately 7,000 dependent relatives here, of whom approximately 5,000 are wives and minor children, pending consideration by Congress of certain proposed legislation; and

Whereas the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on June 18, 1934, unanimously adopted a resolution urging the continued stay of deportation in such cases pending such time as the Congress required for a further opportunity to study the problem: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in order that the Congress may have adequate time to consider the proposed legislation, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation until March 1, 1936, in the cases of aliens of good character, excepting those involving a question of moral turpitude, in which deportation would result in unusual hardship; and be it further

Resolved, That on or before January 15, 1936, the Commissioner submit to the Congress for its consideration a list of all cases, excepting those involving a question of moral turpitude, stayed up to and including December 31, 1935, and to submit a list of the names of all cases, together with the full and complete file of each name and case, and all facts pertaining to same.

Mr. PARSONS (interrupting the reading of the resolution). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the resolution may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk continued the reading of the resolution.

Mr. McREYNOLDS (interrupting the reading of the resolution). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the resolution may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the resolution.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the ranking Member on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. Chairman, at this time I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, last year the Department of Labor was authorized to stay the deportation through August of this year of 2,026 hardship cases of noncriminal aliens who were technically deportable.

These deportations would have meant the breaking up of a great many families. It would also mean leaving here in this country approximately 7,000 dependent relatives, mostly boys and minor children, who would be left in this country on relief. This resolution asks for the extension of the stay through March 1936 in order that the Commissioner of Immigration, Mr. McCormack, may file with the committee a report of all these cases, which may then be presented to the Congress for final disposition. We also hope that by that time the committee may have worked out some sort of definite policy to cover these cases in the future.

Mr. Chairman, in asking for the passage of this bill the committee and the Department have kept in mind the fact that there are no criminal charges against any of these people. There are no charges of moral turpitude. The men and women involved have lived here for many years—8 or 10 years, or perhaps longer. They have established themselves in this country, and in the years they have been in this country they have lived decent, upright, industrious lives. They have married native-born American citizens and have raised families of American children.

Mr. Chairman, all of us in this House are descendants of aliens who settled this country. These aliens and their descendants have made this Nation what it is today.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, whether our ancestors came over in the Mayflower or in the steerage, we are descendants. The aliens whose cases we are considering tonight have lived all these years in America and have lived up to our laws, to our ideals, and to our standards of living so far as they have been able to do so. They cannot be treated as cattle. They must be treated as human beings, because they are human beings, as you and I. To deport them now would break up their homes and would break all of their family ties. I cannot believe that the Members of this House will approve of so inhuman and cruel a thing. Nevertheless, if this resolution is voted down tonight, the homes will be broken up next week when the deportations begin.

I ask you to vote for the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly with a great deal of reluctance that I find myself in opposition to the chairman of my committee on this piece of proposed legislation. I recognize the human appeal expressed so eloquently by the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY], but in these immigration matters we have got to disregard human appeal and get down to brass tacks, if we ever expect to relieve this country of the undesirable alien element.

This resolution concerns about 2,600 or 2,700 aliens who are in this country in violation of our immigration law. The Labor Department could have deported these aliens heretofore, but it seems they are trying to shift the responsibility; in other words, trying to pass the buck to the Congress.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield; yes.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman surely does not want to apply the blanket epithet of undesirable to all of these aliens of whom he speaks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not know who these aliens are. The Labor Department has not seen fit to advise the Immigration Committee as to the facts and circumstances surrounding each individual case and this is one of the main objections to this resolution.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not a fact that many of these aliens are of a very objectionable and criminal type and have been convicted of crime?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. We do not know just what types of aliens they are because we have not had the information from the Immigration Bureau.

Mr. DICKSTEIN and Mr. TARVER rose.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I cannot yield because I have only 30 minutes to be used on this side.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield for one question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does not the resolution specifically provide that the persons who are to be benefited by this resolution must be persons of good moral character, and is it not a further fact that no person convicted of crime is involved in any of these cases?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Of course, they have violated the law by coming in here in violation of our immigration statutes, but the resolution does provide that they must not have been convicted of any crime involving moral turpitude; but they are here in violation of our immigration laws, and while it is all very nice to talk about humanity and all those things in respect of these matters, yet we have such widespread unemployment in this country now that we ought to get rid of these aliens, many of whom are holding jobs which would otherwise be occupied by native or naturalized Americans.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I have so many requests for time and that the time allotted me is so limited, and in view of my reputation for self-abnegation, I reserve the balance of my time, and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state at the outset that this is no attack on my part upon the desirable aliens who have come to this country. I realize the debt the American Nation owes to the many sons from foreign soil who have come here and helped us to build up this great Nation of ours. I have every admiration for the alien who comes here, becomes an American citizen, and takes his oath to support the Constitution of the United States, but I do not look with the same respect upon that class of people who come here, perhaps illegally, stay here and get the benefits of our country and do not apply for citizenship in this country of ours. [Applause.]

I am opposed to this resolution. In the first place, I want to make this clarifying statement. Under this resolution, you would get the idea that the Immigration and Naturalization Committee is 100 percent for this resolution. I say this inferentially because in the second paragraph it is stated—

Whereas the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on June 18, 1934, unanimously adopted a resolution urging the continued stay of deportation in such cases.

And so forth.

That was 1934, and they say nothing about this year and the present Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which I am a member.

A resolution just exactly like this came up before our committee and there were 5 votes for it, 4 against it, and 1 member voting "present." The same day this resolution was filed it came before our committee, and by a vote of 7 to 4 it was reported out. So this is not a unanimous committee proposition.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to secure some information if I can.

Mr. BLACKNEY. I am sorry, I cannot yield.

The question of immigration here has become very important. I notice by the Commissioner's report he admits there are 4,922,000 aliens in this country, and if we deduct from that number 1,500,000 who have applied for citizenship, either directly or indirectly through their parents, this leaves 3,422,000.

The resolution states they want a stay of proceedings. For what reason? According to the report, so they can have adequate time, and yet in the preamble to their resolution they say, "Whereas during the first 2 years the Department of Labor has stayed the deportation of some 2,600 hardship cases of aliens", and so forth. They have already had 26 months, and now they are coming in here and asking you for a continued time in order that Congress may have time to study this matter.

The problem that the gentlewoman from New York suggested is growing more acute month after month, the longer we let this period lapse. If what the gentlewoman states is true, then the longer we put this matter off the worse our problem becomes.

I also want to call your attention to this phase of the matter. Do you notice what they are asking this Congress to do? They are asking Congress to request the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to discontinue the stay of deportation of aliens who, under the law, are illegally here. They are asking the Commissioner to violate the duties of his office.

The resolution has no legal force. We cannot by resolution set aside the laws of the land. This Congress has passed so many unconstitutional laws that some Members think that we can set aside laws by resolution.

I am opposed to this resolution because it endorses the nonobservance of the law. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have just discovered that this is a simple House resolution. It is an absolute shame to take the time of the House at this time in the session to pass a House resolution of this character. You may just as well bring a resolution here saying that the moon is made of green cheese as to pass this resolution at this time. It has no effect in law, and simply puts the House on record as favoring asking the Commissioner of Immigration to do something that is against the law. I think it is unfair and absolutely a crime to bring such a resolution into the House at this time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as the gentleman has said, that this resolution has no legal status. It simply appeals to the moral sentiment of this House and to the sentimental side of our nature which impels us to do justice to a great many poor people who, unless this resolution is passed, will have to be sent out of the country.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Is it true also that it is simply asking the Commissioner of Immigration to violate the law on the statute books?

Mr. KERR. We are not asking any such thing. The gentleman is mistaken if he takes that view.

Mr. SNELL. I do take that view. Does the gentleman tell me that I am wrong?

Mr. KERR. We are not asking the Commissioner of Immigration to violate any law. We are simply asking him to hold in abeyance the matter of whether these particular people shall be deported. Some of them are not deportable. Give him time, and give Congress time to investigate and see whether they ought to be cruelly and wantonly sent out of the Nation.

Mr. SNELL. The law at the present time says that they shall be deported.

Mr. KERR. I think not; in a great many of these cases it depends upon the facts to be found.

Mr. SNELL. All of them.

Mr. KERR. No; very few of them. I say further to the gentleman that many of these cases are cases that any tribunal that has any sense of justice would allow to stay in the country. In many cases they probably have found out that the registration of some good citizen of the country cannot be substantiated, and there are other cases that are just as meritorious as these, and they ought to be inquired into and investigated to see whether or not this Nation would be guilty of an injustice to good people who live here.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will admit there is no force in the resolution.

Mr. KERR. I admit, as I said before, that there is no legal status attached to it. It is a question of whether we should do justice to a good many people in this country who ought to have justice accorded to them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am mighty glad that my good and distinguished friend, Judge KERR, of North Carolina, has agreed that this proposition has no legal significance. I want to place against sympathy which the gentlewoman from New York claimed for this bill which does not belong to it the majesty of the law. Sympathy is a virtue which none should decry, but the maintenance of the law and its majesty is our special responsibility. You must choose between them. You must decide whether you will follow the plain law or give way to sympathy—misplaced sympathy.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot yield; I am sorry, for I have great respect for my friend Judge KERR. On the last day of the last session of Congress a resolution similar to this came in, and from where? It came from the Immigration Committee. That committee adopted a resolution, and they read it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. What did the resolution say? It said that the majority of the Immigration Committee would like to see the deporting officers do what is requested in this so-called "resolution."

That is what this does. The last year's resolution had no effect. This has no legal effect. You pass it up or down and it means nothing, except that you have sat here in the last days of Congress and taken 2 or 3 hours' time to consider something that is absolutely unwise and unnecessary, and, as Mr. SNELL and Judge KERR say, has no legal effect. It means nothing. It is not mandatory. Does it order anybody to do anything? Does it say to the Commissioner, "You must do this or that"? It is unfortunate that but few of the Membership in this group have ever read this resolution through. It was introduced in the Congress only the day before yesterday. It was passed upon by the committee yesterday and now it takes a place far more important than it deserves. Oh, they are in a powerful hurry. It is most important! Introduced into the Congress only the day before yesterday and reported out by the committee yesterday and reported out by the Rules Committee yesterday; and what does it mean, what does it say? It says that we are going to ask the deportation officers to continue the stay of deportation until March 1, 1936.

What have we come to that a Congress of the United States has to ask the deportation officers not to deport people when the law says that they must be deported! I wish I could impress you with the fact that this so-called "resolution" is nothing more than a blind behind which the Secretary of Labor is seeking to shield herself from the just criticism that would be directed at her if the facts were known. Why did she not deport those who should be deported and spare those whose cases excite sympathy? There are over a million aliens now in the country illegally. Why do not the officials engage themselves in ferreting out these criminal aliens and deport them? Do not be misled; not a single one of these 2,600 will be sent out. Why do I say that? It is because this administration has allowed twice as many to enter in 1934 as entered in 1933, and deported only one-half as many in 1934 as in 1933. Do not be carried away by this sob stuff that we have been hearing for years about breaking up families. There is nothing to that. We are not breaking up any families. None of these people will be deported. Why? Because in the very first of this resolution it reads:

Whereas during the past 2 years the——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry that I cannot yield to my friend.

Whereas during the past 2 years the Department of Labor has stayed the deportation of some 2,600—

They have stayed it for 2 years. Why do they have to deport them now? There is nothing in that. I am going to have time later before we get through discussing this bill to show you how this came up. Someone says this is the outgrowth of the Kerr bill. Why did not the Kerr bill come up here for consideration? The Kerr bill has been reported out by the committee and has been on the calendar for weeks and months. Why did they not bring it up? Because they knew it could not be passed. Why? Because it called for a surrender of power by Congress to the Labor Bureau. All who hold themselves out to be restrictionists, I call you to take your stand against this resolution. In this closing hour, amid the confusion and uncertainty, do not lose your moorings, and remember that this is another attempt to lay down the bars. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with what has been said, that it is really a waste of time for this House, in the closing hours of this session, to even consider a resolution of this kind and character. It carries no authority. It does not authorize anyone to do anything and it does not direct anyone to do anything. It makes no changes in the present law. It adds nothing to our present immigration laws. Permit me to say in passing, as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I am ready at all times, as are other members of that committee, to consider the so-called "hardship cases", if the Department of Labor will bring those cases before us and lay the facts before us and permit us to have an opportunity to study them and to pass the necessary remedial legislation if such is required.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. What proof did the gentleman's committee have of the statement made in the preamble of this resolution to the effect that the deportation of these 2,600 aliens would involve the separation of families? Did the gentleman's committee have proof that that recital was true?

Mr. STARNES. If the gentleman would permit me, I would like to yield further, but I have only a few minutes. We have absolutely no proof before that committee other than the statement made by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization that for a period of more than 2 years he had, himself, without authority of law, but on his own authority, in a study of cases that had been brought to the attention of the Department, stayed the deportation of aliens who had violated the law.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. No. I made the statement that I would not yield further. He stated before the committee that those cases involved hardship, but he brought no facts to us; he brought no files before us; he made no attempt to classify the cases whatsoever. He said he was bringing it back and putting it on the doorstep of the Congress.

Members who oppose this resolution on the committee are not opposed to the consideration of the so-called "humane cases", but we do oppose the the nullification of the law by a citizen who is sworn to enforce it and uphold it. [Applause.] If the law is unjust and inhumane, let us repeal it. Your Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization has characterized our immigration laws as being barbarous, inhuman, and unjust.

If so, they should be repealed, but neither that gentleman nor you nor I nor any other man or woman who is sworn to uphold the majesty of the law and to enforce and administer its mandates, has a right under his oath and under his conscience to violate that law with impunity and to come before the law-making body and ask condonment for a violation of the law. [Applause].

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The Immigration Committee has adopted the policy of recognition of individual hardship cases?

Mr. STARNES. Absolutely.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. And we have had two such cases before the committee?

Mr. STARNES. And passed them out; yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. And they have been passed out unanimously by the committee; is that not so?

Mr. STARNES. That is true. The question is whether or not the Congress is going to place moral sanction upon the action of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization in failing to enforce the law over a period of more than 2 years. That is the whole question in a nutshell.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Bearing out the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], does the gentleman want to consider 2,600 cases individually?

Mr. STARNES. That is the way we consider all legislation. That is the way we consider pensions and private bills. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. My attention was first called to these cases on the hearing before the Rules Committee. I have always voted for every restrictionist measure on immigration that has been presented in Congress, and I think I should be considered a restrictionist, but these particular cases are hardship cases, and the hearing disclosed that they are heads of families—2,600 of them.

Some error has been made in listing their names at the port of entry. Sometimes a mistake has been in paying their head tax. They have lived 5, 6, 8, 10 years in this country. Many of them have married American women, and children have been born to these families, the children being American citizens.

I cannot see how the majesty of the law would be violated by permitting the Commissioner of Immigration to consider these hardship cases and at a later date present these facts to the House Committee on Immigration, as this resolution proposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I prefer to finish my statement; then I will yield if I have time.

If they are separated from their families and sent abroad, their families in many instances are thrown upon relief. All this resolution does is to ask that these proceedings be stayed until January, when the Commissioner proposes to report these cases to our Committee on Immigration in order that some specific legislation may be provided to take care of these hardship cases. They are not cases of moral turpitude where the people involved have violated the law. Many of them violated the immigration law only from a technical standpoint.

I believe that in all such cases as these justice should be done. The way to do it is to permit these cases to be brought specifically to the Committee on Immigration of this House, that they may consider them separately upon their merits. Many of them have applied for citizenship, but when they made their application they found these technicalities existed that could not be corrected even by the records at the ports of entry.

If these cases should be held over into the future the Commissioner reports that they would be charged against the quota of the country from which they came. Why separate them from their families and send them back only to allow other aliens to come in? Why separate them from their families, send them abroad, and assume responsibility of caring for their families, when all that will be done will be to throw the quota open to other immigrants who may not have the character of these people who will be deported—aliens who will be a greater experiment in immigration than these who have been here 10 years?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand also that in many of these cases children were born in this country. Under the Constitution they are American citizens. Is that correct?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman's statement is correct. Many of them have married American women and have families. The children are American citizens, yet the father is barred by some technicality. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have spoken in this House on any question which really hits home, and I regret exceedingly that I have to take the floor on a matter of this kind, in which I have a deep personal interest. I shall do my best, however, in the 5 minutes allotted to me to treat this subject in as dispassionate a manner as possible. I trust those of you who are opposed to this proposition will give me the same consideration you expect from me. I do not see why there should be any feeling or passion about this matter.

This resolution provides one thing, and one thing alone. First of all, let us bear in mind what the situation behind this resolution is. A bill is pending in this Congress known as the "Kerr bill", which has been reported out by the committee, and which, if passed, will legalize the status of these 2,600 people involved in this resolution. If the Kerr bill is defeated their status will not be legalized and they will be deported.

What does the pending resolution do? It simply states that before the Kerr bill is voted on, before this appeal to Congress is voted up or down—and I mean by "appeal" the Kerr bill—that you shall not execute the "death sentence" of deportation upon these people regarding whom we are going to legislate in the next session of Congress. That is all this resolution does. It simply asks that the execution of the sentence be held up until the Congress of the United States has adopted a definite policy with reference to these 2,600 people. This Congress has not had the opportunity to deal with the Kerr bill. If the Kerr bill passes, these 2,600 people will not be deported. Therefore, why not hold up deportation until Congress passes on that bill?

I appeal to you. Is not this a sporting proposition? Is it not a humane proposition? Is it not a decent proposition? Why, a criminal guilty of murder is given an opportunity to have his appeal heard before he is executed. Why will you not give these people an opportunity to have their status passed on by the Congress of the United States before deporting them?

I have heard a great deal said tonight about aliens, and I regret very much that Members have talked disparagingly about them.

I never thought that in the House of Representatives of the United States good, patriotic Americans would dare talk disparagingly about any racial group in the United States where, after all, we are all of alien stock.

Mr. Chairman, did you ever stop to think that in 1917 thousands and thousands of these very aliens who are being spoken of disparagingly here tonight went across the seas to fight and die for our Nation, and thousands and thousands of them never came back? They were good, decent people then. Why are they not good, decent people now? Against this disgusting bigotry, I cry "shame!" [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Does not the gentleman think that these 101-percent patriots will agree that the only true Americans are the original Indians?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I do not know. They better answer for themselves. They think they know it all.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I was very much impressed with the plea made by the gentlewoman from the great State of New York relative to the deportation of 2,600 aliens who are in this country illegally. The other day I tried to bring up a bill which was introduced in the Immigration Committee by myself called the "alien-seamen bill", and the gentlewoman from New York refused me any and all aid. My bill would have stopped all aliens coming into this country illegally, and there would not have been any hardship cases. Why the right-about face?

There is no question but what there will be hardships. There will be families separated. A great many of these cases carry a great deal of merit, too. I say they should be given a chance.

On page 2, line 6, the resolution states as follows:

Resolved, That on or before January 15, 1936, the Commissioner submit to the Congress for its consideration a list of all cases, excepting those involving a question of moral turpitude, stayed up to and including December 31, 1935, and to submit a list of the names of all cases, together with the full and complete file of each name and case, and all facts pertaining to same.

That is as it should have been a long time ago. The thing that is necessary in this country is for us all to unite and get behind the Immigration Committee and help them report out some of these bills. There was introduced in the House a bill barring Mexicans from coming into the continental United States to compete against American labor. Where were a great many of the Members then who called themselves restrictionists? The alien-seamen bill is another bill. What does the alien-seamen bill propose to do? The gentlewoman from California objected when unanimous consent was asked for its consideration. That bill will stop all those who find it impossible to find a visa from coming into this country. It does not allow them to be employed as seamen. These people come in under the guise of alien seamen, and the minute they hit the shores of this Nation, what happens?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Immigration Committee, let me say that my experience on this immigration question started back at a time when I was a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania. I was directed to inquire into the number of unnaturalized foreigners quartered in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. I made an investigation at that time and reported 50,000. I introduced and there was also passed and now in operation in the State of Pennsylvania, also New York, as well as in Michigan and Minnesota, a law providing for the deportation of unnaturalized foreigners.

Mr. Chairman, I want to warn the Members of the House right here and now, and particularly those Members who are being entrapped in this insidious propaganda coming here from New York in the shape of Members of Congress who are right before me. Do not be fooled about this. Let me tell you something else.

You cannot get a man in any city in America to vote for restricted immigration for the simple reason that the foreigners there will see that he is not reelected. I asked Mr. Moore, mayor of Philadelphia, why he would not vote for restricted immigration. He said: "If I voted for restricted immigration I could never be returned to Congress."

Mr. Chairman, I am telling you something about the condition in this country. These foreigners are multiplying at the ratio of 9 to 3—9 to 3, remember—and in two generations we will not have to do as Napoleon did—sweep the boulevards of Paris with grape shot to control the situation against any vicious element. They will accept our challenge and out-vote us.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. No; I cannot accept a challenge from the gentleman. These foreigners will accept our challenge. They will go to the ballot box and outvote you unless you meet such situations as is presented here tonight.

I have the greatest sympathy, the greatest pity, the greatest compassion for these poor people who come over here, but I think this is the time when something must be done about those who violate the law to get in. Enough has happened in this country recently to open our eyes. People have come before our committee and talked about socialism. Why, that is a mild thing to talk about. When you talk about the control of this country in the way I mentioned a moment ago that is something different.

I now wish to tell you something about this bill.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. No. I have little time. The gentleman is a very noisy gentleman anyhow. I am talking on this bill and cannot yield, but hope the gentleman may get his own time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I was not going to speak on this resolution, but I do want to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said these aliens after two generations would multiply so fast. Is a man after two generations still a foreigner? After your father has been born here and you have been born here, are you still a foreigner?

Mr. FOCHT. Are you asking me that question? I will tell you that my ancestors came here in 1720. Three of them were in the Revolutionary War. My father died as a consequence of the Civil War, had a brother who was a sergeant major in the Spanish-American War, and I had three nephews in the World War.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member of this House who would favor keeping an alien in the United States who was guilty of any crime involving moral turpitude. We do not want racketeers; we do not want gangsters. We have plenty of them here who are American citizens, born and bred here. We do not want any alien gangsters or any American gangsters or racketeers.

However, I think the whole crux of this situation was well stated by the gentleman from Indiana when he said that these 2,600 hardship cases are cases of men who could be deported on technicalities, none of them convicted of any crime involving moral turpitude, and all we are asking in this resolution is that the Department of Labor, through Commissioner MacCormack, send up to the House of Representatives a complete list of all these cases, and then when the Kerr bill comes up, Congress will have all the necessary information upon which to act on this problem.

Now, I have heard a lot of discussion here tonight about aliens and 100-percent Americans. I will give you my idea, if you will bear with me for just a moment, of what I consider a 100-percent American.

This little poem was written during the war, and, I believe, was written by a newspaperman for the Chicago Tribune. It is entitled:

AMERICANS ALL

Now, O'Leary from Chicago and a first-class fighting man
Born in County Clare or Kerry where the gentle art began,
Sergeant Michael James O'Leary, hiking along the road,
Dodging shells and smelling powder while the battle ebbed and flowed.
And the captain said, "O'Leary, from your fighting company pick a dozen fighting Yankees and come raiding now with me.
"Pick a dozen fighting devils, and I know it's you who can!"
And O'Leary he saluted like a first-class fighting man.
O'Leary's eye was piercing and O'Leary's voice was clear.
"Dimitri Popopoulos", and Dimitri answered "Here!"
"Vladimir Slaminski, step three paces to the front!
"For we're wanting you to join us in a little Heinie hunt",
"Garibaldi Ravioli", Garabaldi was to share
And Ole Axel Kettleson and Thomas Scalp the Bear,
Who was a Choctaw by inheritance bred in the blood and bones,
But set down in Army records by the name of Thomas Jones.
"Vanwinkle Schuyler Stuyvesant", Vanwinkle was a bud
From the ancient tree of Stuyvesant and had it in his blood.
"Ulysses Grant O'Sheridan," Ulysses' sire, you see
Had been at Appomattox near the famous apple tree.
"Patrick Michael Casey," Patrick Michael, you can tell,
Was a fighting man by nature with three fighting names as well.
"Don Miguel de Colombo," Don Miguel's next kin
Were across the Rio Grande when Don Miguel went in.
"Joseph Wheeler Lee" and Joseph had a pair of fighting eyes
And his granddad was a Johnny, as perhaps you might surmise.
"Robert Bruce McPherson", and the Yankee squad was done
With "Isaac Abe Cohen" once a lightweight champion.
Then O'Leary paced them forward and said he, "You Yanks, fall in."
Then he marched them to the Captain. "Let the skirmishing begin."
Said he, "The Yanks are coming, and you beat them if you can."
And he saluted like a soldier and a first-class fighting man.

That is my idea of a 100-percent American. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL].

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, I may state at the outset that I am sure I cannot be accused of being prejudiced against so-called "foreigners", because my father and mother and 2 brothers and 2 sisters were born on the Scandinavian Peninsula, while 3 of us were born in this country. If you accused me of that you would be accusing me of being against my own father and my mother and my 2 brothers and 2 sisters, who were born on foreign soil.

It seems to me that this resolution is of no force and effect. Whenever a lawyer loses his case in court he always claims to lose it on a technicality. There is no such thing as a technicality involved in this resolution. These aliens are either here legally or they are here illegally.

I am sorry that they find themselves in this situation, but they have no legal right to be here and they have no business staying here, thereby taking jobs away from those legally in the United States who are walking the streets looking for work at this time. From the study that I have made of the resolution, it seems to me that the Department of Labor is asking Congress to wash its linen for it. They have had over 2 years to examine these cases. They apparently have not performed their duty and take this method of getting a congressional whitewash. The bill should have been brought up before the Congress in the early months of the session so that we could have had ample time to properly consider it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. No; I do not yield. I have in my district many people who were born in foreign countries. They are my friends and I am their friend. I am for the honest, hard-working foreign born in this country who are here properly and legally, who are within the law and who want to stay within the law. They have contributed richly to the upbuilding and culture of our country. I am not in favor of a resolution of this kind which, in the first place, will have no force or effect, and which is thrown in haphazard in the closing hours of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, this is a worthy resolution. These people have committed no offense against our criminal laws. They came across the border years ago, when records were not accurately kept. Some clerk when making the records of many of them recorded their entry in such a way that their names were misspelled, and then when they presented themselves to the proper authorities asking for naturalization they found that their records of entry in their correct names were not there, and they became technically subject to deportation.

For instance, if my friend the last speaker, whose name is EKWALL, had been put down as Eckell, then when Mr. EKWALL presented himself for naturalization they would have arrested him because his name was not properly recorded in the register, and he would be deportable on the grounds of illegal entry into the United States.

Mr. EKWALL. That is a matter for the Department.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is the fault of our Government, in that when many of these people came some of the field offices were not keeping proper records. It is no fault of these people who came here with good intentions, who have been here several years, thinking they had come regularly.

Some of them have as high as six American-born children in the family, and an American-born wife.

My friend from Oregon and my friend from Ohio and my friend who sits right in the front—are you ready as Christian gentlemen to tell the Secretary of Labor now to tear these fathers from their American-born children and send the father back to Russia or to another part of the world? Are you that kind of gentlemen? Are you prepared by your vote here today to tell the Secretary of Labor that this man, simply because he did not pay $8 years ago, shall be deported notwithstanding he will thereby leave his wife and children dependent for support upon the community—your community and my community?

What do the restrictionists on this committee want? I am trying to reach an agreement with them. They want me to introduce 2,600 individual bills—one for every immigrant. That is an impossible procedure to follow, for the reason that you would have to stay here for 5 years to carry through the program.

So, I appeal to your sense of justice and I appeal to their sense of justice. I said, "Let us stay the deportation of these cases until January." I am willing to come to some amicable adjustment between the group that believes in extraordinary restriction and the group that believes in justice to mankind. That is all there is to this. The Secretary of Labor said that if she could obtain a resolution of this kind from this House or the Senate before the close of this session of this Congress she would hold the deportation up until January, and if you do not do something she will deport them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, somebody has said proper information had not been given the committee regarding the type of these cases.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization spent quite a long time in testimony before the committee in public session and in executive session and emphasized what kind of cases had been set aside with a temporary stay of deportation.

Colonel MacCormack told our committee, in part, as follows:

I would like to read to you two comments on this aspect of the immigration law. The first is quoted from the report of the Wickersham Commission on Law Enforcement and Observance, in the following words [reading]:

"In deportation cases, even when the judgment is just and necessary, hardships are extreme, both upon those deported, and upon their families who are permitted to remain; and in the opinion of the Commission, the limited discretion to permit, in cases of exceptional hardship, a relaxation of the rigid requirements of the present statutes, would be consistent with the dignity of a great and humane nation."

* * * * * * *

We have, however, the right to determine when deportation shall take place. That is a right that has been established and exercised through all the years the immigration acts have been in existence.

We set aside cases that at first appeared to us to be appealing, and fixed a date for deportation as of July 1 of last year; to enable our presenting these cases to Congress for its consideration.

Congress failed to act favorably upon the first of the bills presented, as those of us who were present are painfully aware, but directly thereafter the gentleman who had led the battle on them came to us and urged us to continue the stay of the cases already stayed, and to continue the stay of such similar cases as might arise in the interval between Congress' departure and its return.

I refused to continue with the stay of these cases until I could have some definite proof that that was the intention, if not of the Congress as a whole, at least of the committee which was responsible for its immigration and naturalization activities.

Your committee passed a resolution unanimously, which was communicated to the Secretary of Labor and to myself, as Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. In that resolution, you asked us to continue the stay of the cases already stayed, and of such other cases as might arise in the interval before Congress again convened.

A bill was introduced into the Congress, with the same sort of a preamble to it. We considered these actions as evidence of an intention to seriously consider the proposals we had submitted and stayed the deportation of those cases, and of the new cases that have arisen.

Now—and I wish to say this most seriously—I would not have felt that I was entitled to my own self-respect, had I failed to stay the deportation of the cases which have been stayed, or had I failed to use every effort to present the facts I have given to you today, to the Congress. We have been, of course, attacked for having stayed these cases. That is all right.

* * * * * * *

Now, as to the stayed cases. During a period of approximately 22 months, there have been stays of deportation in the cases of 2,355 aliens. That is an average of 107 cases a month. Now, that is a comparatively small number, and certainly not important; but, gentlemen, it means 107 cases a month in which there will be a separation, and perhaps a permanent separation, of families, if these people, who are of good character, are forced to depart.

Of these 2,355 cases, 1,569 have been stayed by the central office. The balance have been stayed in the field. We have analyzed the 1,569 cases in the central office.

In considering lenient treatment for such people there must be some consideration as to the effect upon their families and the effect upon the United States should they be forced to leave the country. In these 1,569 cases there are 4,066 American-citizen or legal-resident wives, husbands, children, brothers, sisters, or parents in this country. Approximately two and a half times the number of people deported would be left behind.

Of this 4,066, there are 2,012 American citizens and 350 lawfully resident aliens who are dependent upon the prospective deportees for support, and who would become public charges in the event of their departure. That is, you deport 1,569 and you arrange that the United States shall thereafter care for 2,353.

Again, once and a half the number deported are forced to remain here as public charges.

Furthermore, of this group, 68 percent are, under existing law, permitted to return to the United States, in a preference, or in a nonquota status. Thus, in the class of case for which we recommend lenient treatment nothing is to be gained by deportation. Sixty-eight percent of them can return to the country, anyway, in the course of time. Then, you are leaving two and one-half times the number of relatives here as compared to the number deported. You are leaving one and a half times the number of relatives here, to become charges on the State, as compared to the number deported. So you have here a law which is not only cruel, but foolish, one which imposes unbearable hardships upon the alien and upon his innocent family, and very serious and useless financial charges upon the United States.

* * * * * * *

The wreckage which has resulted from the break-up of families under the past bills has left human misery and heavy burdens of support to the American communities from which breadwinners have been deported. It was said on one of the preceding days that the bill said nothing about hardships of deportation, and perhaps they do need reiteration here.

Deportation may be to a land where one is a stranger and whose language one does not speak. It may be to a political regime which has entirely changed since one's birth. Another sovereign, another country may be the ruler of one's place of birth. It may be a country from which one has fled because of persecution for religious or political reasons, and might mean not only imprisonment but death to return to certain countries which might be named. It does mean loss of stake in this country, and sometimes total means of livelihood.

This country is not the gainer when families of American-born wives and citizens are reduced to destitution by deportation of breadwinners. It does mean break-up and scattering to the four winds. I think of a family which would go to Hungary, to Rumania, to Yugoslavia, and part remain here. The possible banishment and exile feature are very serious considerations in deportation. It is very difficult to return in most of these cases, and the disgrace is something to be considered. Hindu students who are deported to their country as outcasts from this, to which they came for education, would almost rather jump off the boat than land with that disgrace attached.

* * * * * * *

So, Mr. Chairman, this resolution when adopted will serve as an expression of this House to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and to the Secretary of Labor to the effect that these noncriminal aliens should be permitted to stay here with their families until March 1 next, and to the effect that until that time at least these American-born wives and children will not be forced to see their husbands and fathers sent out of this country, leaving them behind with no means of support after their breadwinner is deported.

I say, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Committee, this Congress should not adjourn without this House adopting this humane, just, and honorable resolution.

I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Is an amendment in order at the end of the first paragraph of the resolution, or not until the whole resolution has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair construes the resolution to mean one section, and amendments shall be in order after the two resolving clauses are read in full.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, are only members of the committee permitted to offer amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are open to every Member of the House. The Clerk will read the resolving section of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in order that the Congress may have adequate time to consider the proposed legislation, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization be requested to continue the stay of deportation until March 1, 1936, in the cases of aliens of good character, excepting those involving a question of moral turpitude, in which deportation would result in unusual hardship; and be it further

Resolved, That on or before January 15, 1936, the Commissioner submit to the Congress for its consideration a list of all cases, excepting those involving a question of moral turpitude, stayed up to and including December 31, 1935, and to submit a list of the names of all cases, together with the full and complete file of each name and case, and all facts pertaining to same.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 1, strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, and on page 2, strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof, the following:

"Resolved, That since ample time has elapsed for the passage of such legislation, if Congress desires to enact it, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization is requested not to longer delay the enforcement of existing laws applicable to such cases."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the amendment that it is not germane to the bill. It simply reverses the entire language of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). This is a House resolution, merely expressing the sentiment and opinion of the House. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am quite in accord with the viewpoint expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], to the effect that this question should be decided without passion and without prejudice. God knows, I for one—and I am sure that feeling is shared by every Member of the House—would not by my vote impose an injustice upon any human being, whether alien or not. So far as I am concerned, while I come from a section of the country where there are few people of alien extraction, yet I have the utmost respect for any American citizen who honorably discharges the duty of citizenship, without regard to whether or not his ancestors may have lived in this country as long as mine have done or not.

My objection to this measure is that I do not think it should be presented at this time when it cannot be given careful consideration. It appears that the membership of the committee which reported the resolution is itself divided upon the question of what the true facts are relating to this matter. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD], who is not a member of the committee, who states that he never heard of the resolution until yesterday, believes that he is fully advised, to the effect that all of these persons who are threatened with deportation are heads of families, and that none of them has committed a crime, and that the result of their deportation will bring about the separation of families. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], who is a member of the committee, is equally as strongly convinced that those facts have not been made to appear in the hearings before the Committee on Immigration, and he is impressed with the idea that that committee is not in possession of information to substantiate the facts that are recited in the preamble of this resolution.

An effort is being made now in the absence of time for adequate consideration of this measure, to bring it up in the last hours of the session, just as it appears to have been brought up before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on the last day of the session in 1934. Why the delay? It appears that a bill has been reported, of which our colleague, Judge KERR, of North Carolina, is the author, which proposes to remedy any injustices that may be threatened to these people, by legislation in the proper manner, by the amendment of existing law. That bill has been reported from the committee for a considerable period of time. There has been ample time for its consideration by the House. All of you will remember the weeks during which we adjourned from Thursday until Monday or for other lengthy periods of time. There was no necessity for postponing the consideration of this measure until the closing hours of the session, at a time when it is impossible for the Membership of the House to become thoroughly acquainted with the facts. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] has advanced an idea which it seems to me is absolutely untenable, to the effect that a large number of these persons who are threatened with deportation are not illegally in this country. If this were the case, it certainly should not be necessary to ask the Secretary of Labor not to deport them.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: Page 1, line 1, and on page 2, line 6, strike out the word "resolved."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, after a service of 6 years on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I believe my position is pretty well known by many of my colleagues. All of these years I have belonged to the bloc known as the "restrictionist bloc." Tonight I stand on that same bloc. This is another effort, couched in very splendid language, and in an unusually good atmosphere, to tear down and break down the immigration laws of our country. Almost every one of these aliens who came here slipped in, sneaked in, stole their way in, contrary to the laws of our Nation. They knew when they came here what the laws of our Nation were, but they slipped in, they stole their way in. Now we are asked tonight to make lawful that entry and place those men and women on a parity with the immigrant who came to American through our law and now abide by our law.

There are about 15,000,000 people in the United States of foreign birth. A very large percentage of these foreigners are unnaturalized—foreigners, many of them breeding communism, breeding atheism, breeding all the "isms" it is possible for them to breed, contrary to the teachings and principles of the American Constitution. While those five or six million unnaturalized aliens are here, refusing to be naturalized, making all the trouble they can make, your Nation and mine is appropriating $4,880,000,000 to feed Americans who are unemployed. Where is the consistency of voting a resolution giving approval to illegal alien entrance when your own American citizens are wanting employment and being fed by your Government? Where is the consistency? Instead of making entrance of these aliens lawful, it is the duty of this Congress, as I see it, in the protection of American labor, in the protection of American institutions, to deport every deportable alien in our midst and give every position of employment to American citizens. My amendment to kill this resolution should be adopted. I urge you to vote with us for immigration restriction. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that during my brief service in this House I have demonstrated my belief in upholding the majesty of the law. I do not so believe in upholding the majesty of the law, however, as to believe it is necessary in this country with our background, with our associations, our origins, our beginnings, that the majesty of the law must be upheld at the cost of breaking up 2,600 families. [Applause.]

What are the facts, what is the record? There has not been any substantial dispute here that there are 2,600 cases, perhaps, technically subject to deportation unless this resolution is passed, and 2,600 cases which are meritorious ones. The complaint here, the objection to the passage of this resolution, is that there has been some failure on the part of some officers of this Government, perhaps on the part of this Congress, to enact the proper kind of legislation to dispose of these cases. Must this sin, this failure, this omission, be visited upon innocent mothers, wives, boys, and girls?

I heard gentlemen say here, and it made my heart sick to hear them say it, that this was sob stuff; that this was old stuff. My God, gentlemen, is the breaking up of families sob stuff? Is the taking away of fathers from their wives and their children sob stuff, old stuff? These men, representing the American people, sprang from people who came from across the waters, all of us; and I heard gentlemen make this cry. I sorrow for them; I pity them. Their ancestors have not been in this country exceeding two generations, or three; and I thought—I do not want to make a harsh statement—but I thought that in the case of many of them it would have been a good thing, perhaps, if immigration into this country had been restricted so as to have cut off their forefathers. [Applause.]

Every criminal, every man accused of crime, even as some Member said, in the case of first-degree murder, is entitled to a stay of execution pending appeal. As a practical matter, as a matter of dollars and cents, if I must appeal to the Membership of this House on this low ground, this sordid ground, this mercenary ground, if you fail to pass this resolution and these 2,600 aliens are deported, you are going to break up their families; in many cases you are going to leave the wives and children, their dependents, helpless, subject to public charity.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the substitute.

The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: On page 1, line 3, strike out "Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization" and insert "the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, it is not the custom of the House of Representatives or of the Congress in directing a communication to an executive department to send the communication to the head of a bureau. Such communications always are sent to the head of the department. The gentleman from New York, my friend, Mr. DICKSTEIN, said in his own speech that the Secretary of Labor made the statement that if we would send a resolution asking her to do it she would do it; and that is the proper place to send this resolution provided the House decides to adopt it.

I appreciate the fact that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization may have these individual matters in charge, but the Secretary of Labor must take the responsibility; she is the head of the department.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, under the present law the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization is in charge of deportation cases. This is provided for by the Immigration Act of 1924 and all amendments thereto. He has complete control of all these matters which control was given to him by Congress under the act of 1924.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that. As I stated, he is in charge of this, but the Secretary of Labor is responsible for that Department and is responsible for its policies. The gentleman himself, in his own speech, said that Miss Perkins made the statement that if this resolution was directed to her she would do it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am looking for results and not technicalities, so I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York offered an amendment to page 1. I ask unanimous consent that the words "Secretary of Labor" may be substituted for the words "Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization" or "Commissioner" wherever these words may appear in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion offered by Mr. TABER: Mr. TABER moves that the Committee do now rise and report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the resolving clause be stricken out.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am shocked that this House should have to consider a resolution requesting the Secretary of Labor to violate the law. May I read this resolution to you? It is stated:

In order that the Congress may have adequate time to consider the proposed legislation, the Secretary of Labor be requested to continue the stay of deportation until March 1, 1936.

Mr. Chairman, if there is a legitimate case for consideration of this sort of thing it should never come in here under request to the Secretary of Labor or any other official of the Government to violate the law, but should come up under a joint resolution directing the Secretary of Labor to stay an execution of this kind, if there is a legitimate reason. Why should we say things like this? Why should we be a party to an utter disregard of the law? I for one will not be. I cannot think that any Member of the House of Representatives will ever get to the point where he feels like voting for this kind of resolution.

There are perhaps cases of aliens who are in this country illegally that deserve some consideration. However, in my opinion there has been ample time for the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to report any bill that might cover this situation fairly and honestly, but none has been brought in here before the House. If they wanted to stay proceedings, why did they not bring it in in a legal, legitimate way, instead of asking the Secretary of Labor to violate the law?

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the motion which I have offered will be adopted and that we will not stultify ourselves by agreeing to such a resolution.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I want to make an appeal particularly to the Democrats and ask you to not be misled by some of the appeals to prejudice and catch phrases that have been used in opposition to this humane resolution, which have emanated from the Republican or left-hand side of the aisle. Following the Civil War the Republicans brought in annually hundreds of thousands of immigrants to this country; brought them in cattle boats and herded them about shamelessly in the mining districts and in the industrial areas in order to hammer down the wages and the living standard of the American workmen. To be a little more specific, in the district represented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] at Lewisburg and vicinity, hundreds and thousands of individuals living within his district were imported there under contract-labor provisions which were countenanced and advanced by the unscrupulous employers and the Republican party.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I do not yield.

The gentleman was not sport enough to yield to anyone. So I refuse to yield. I challenge the gentleman to take up this issue in his district, if he will present this issue fairly and as it is presented in the resolution.

The blue-blood appeal does not strike any response on this side of the aisle; and may I say to some of the gentlemen who brag about their genealogy that if they will go into it very carefully they may find something they might be ashamed of. To trace an early genealogy, prior to the enactment of our strict immigration laws, many a braggart may find an ancestor who expired on the end of a rope.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. No.

They speak of the majesty of the law, a law which, in this case, is obviously faulty. I can very well conceive that the immigration law is like any other law enacted by the Congress. It might contain errors.

Mr. Chairman, here is an appeal on the part of 2,600 deportables, many of them technical cases, where it is impossible for them to prove anything. Upon these men and women are dependent nearly 7,500 American children and American women who will be thrown upon the relief rolls. Is there not a spark of mercy and charity in the Members of the House to give this element a stay until such time as a law may be enacted by the Congress? I am depending entirely on this side of the aisle to carry out what is intended in this resolution. It is obvious that the minority assumed an attitude that is merciless and un-American. An appeal for stay of execution is being denied them. They knowingly refuse to extend a privilege which is granted even to criminals. These people are not criminals; the resolution does not propose to grant any consideration to anyone guilty of moral turpitude. We are trying to stay the hand of the law temporarily to save the families of 2,600 or more who are technical violators. Many of these came in legitimately, established homes, married American citizens, raised families of American children; in many cases learned on applying for citizenship that the record was not clear or jumbled by inefficient or thoughtless clerks in the Immigration Service. They are not at fault, but still they are helpless. Families must now be torn apart; men, women, and children driven to despair.

I am now and always have been a restrictionist, but, above all else, I am humane and refuse to destroy the happiness of a family, at least not without exhausting every effort in deserving cases. This resolution affects Irish, Polish, German, English, and Scotch; in fact, all nationals alike. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 75, noes 99.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the resolution do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Resolution 350, pursuant to House Resolution 362, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 119, not voting 110, as follows:

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 347.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to investigate and report to the House not later than January 3, 1937, the campaign expenditures of the various candidates for the House of Representatives in both parties, or candidates of parties other than or independent of the Democratic or Republican Parties, the names of persons, firms, associations, or corporations subscribing, the amount contributed, the methods of collections and expenditures of such sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof but as to the use of any other means or influences, including the promise or use of patronage, and all other facts in relation thereto that would not only be of public interest but would aid the Congress in necessary legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the House of Representatives.

The investigation hereby provided for in all the respects above enumerated shall apply to candidates and contests before primaries, conventions, and the contests and campaigns of the general election in November of 1936, or any special election held prior to January 3, 1937. Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information which in its judgment may be reasonable and reliable. Upon complaint being made before such committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidates, or political committee setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after hearings on such complaints, the committee shall find that such allegations in said complaints are immaterial or untrue.

That said special committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act during the adjournment of Congress, and that said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; to employ stenographers at a cost of not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpenas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties as prescribed by law.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution which is introduced during each Congress pertaining to the next election. It is introduced a little earlier this year because elections may occur even before we are back here in January.

Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, on page 1, line 1, to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 1, line 1, strike out "5" and insert "7."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment. Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "November of."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "November of."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from New York explain these amendments?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the first amendment increases the committee from five to seven, so they may appoint subcommittees.

The second amendment, instead of saying in the general election of November 1936, strikes out the word "November" because some elections are held in other months. Does the gentleman desire to use some time?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, no one asked for time on this side of the aisle. I insisted on having the courtesy of time yielded to me under the rule so that if anyone did desire time I could yield to them.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

REVENUE FROM DISTILLED SPIRITS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement for printing under the rule on the bill (H. R. 8870) to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, and for other purposes.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Sinclaire, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 348) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing exchange of coins and currencies and immediate payment of gold-clause securities by the United States; withdrawing the right to sue the United States on its bonds and other similar obligations; limiting the use of certain appropriations; and for other purposes."

SNYDER-GUFFEY COAL CONTROL BILL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under the privilege to extend my remarks I include herein a letter sent to Members of the Congress, and in which I received, dated August 17, 1935, shortly prior to the passage of the Snyder-Guffey coal-control bill. This letter was sent by the coal operators in favor of the bill. I particularly call attention to paragraph 3 which attacks the argument that the price of coal, as a result of the passage of this bill, will increase from $1 to $1.50 per ton, and stating emphatically that—

The additional cost of production * * * is 2¾ cents per ton, the net amount of the tax levied in section 3 of the bill.

The operators further stated:

There is nothing in the bill providing for any increase in price or cost other than this tax. * * *

The coal operators have made a definite statement, amounting to a promise, that the price of coal to industry, business, and the consumer will increase only 2¾ cents per ton over the present price as a result of the passage of this bill. This statement, in connection with the future price of bituminous coal, after this bill becomes law, will be of great interest to industry, business, and the consumer.

I challenge the operators whose names are on the communication sent to me to keep the promise contained therein. I am inserting this communication in the RECORD for future comparison between statements and promises of the coal operators favoring this bill, and results to business, industry, and the consumer.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF BITUMINOUS COAL PRODUCERS,
Washington, D. C., August 17, 1935.

To the Members of Congress:

1. The National Conference of Bituminous Coal Producers earnestly requests the enactment of the Guffey-Snyder coal stabilization bill, H. R. 9100. We desire its enactment to prevent a return to complete demoralization and chaos in the industry and to prevent the monopolization of the industry by certain powerful financial influences seeking control of this great natural resource by destructive price-cutting to force competitors out of the business.

2. The National Conference of Bituminous Coal Producers is composed of over 300 coal-mining companies, from all coal-producing States in the Union. The numbers and tonnage represented by the National Conference are increasing daily because of the increasing demoralization of the price structure. The claim made by opponents of the bill that they represent 59.8 percent of the tonnage is wholly unsupported by facts, and the House Ways and Means Committee has in its files numerous telegrams from companies informing the committee that the so-called "Committee Against Guffey Coal Bill" did not have the right to represent them. Some of the tonnage claimed by this committee is merely the result of a telephone conversation with some other opponent of the bill.

3. The additional cost of production due to the Guffey-Snyder coal control bill is 2¾ cents per ton, the net amount of the tax levied in section 3 of the bill. There is nothing in the bill providing for any increase in price or cost other than this tax, and claims that the passage of the bill will increase the cost of coal to the consumer $1 to $1.55 a ton are so ridiculous that anyone having a knowledge of the business is aware that such statements are made in order to mislead Congressmen who are not familiar with coal mining. Proof of this is that the Congressmen from the mining districts are practically unanimous in support of the bill and know that these ridiculous claims are absurd.

4. The voluntary establishment of sales agencies will not solve the problems of the bituminous coal industry. Appalachian Coals, Inc., heralded by the opponents of this bill as the means of saving the industry, has been a complete failure and has not been functioning as a sales agency since April 1, 1935. Upon the expiration of its first contracts, the entire scheme collapsed.

5. The Guffey-Snyder coal stabilization bill is a temporary measure, limited to a period of 4 years, and is experimental. It is the desire of those sponsoring the measure to place the industry in a position where it may maintain prices at the level of production cost and support a decent standard of wages and working conditions. Decent standards of wages and working conditions cannot be maintained in the industry without effective regulation.

6. Coal prices necessarily cannot materially exceed the cost of production because of competition from oil and gas and electricity. This in itself would be, in our opinion, sufficient protection to the public against high prices, but the commission created under the bill also has the power to establish maximum prices in the event of an abnormal condition that would cause an extraordinary rise in coal price levels.

7. The National Conference of Bituminous Coal Producers represents 175,000,000 tons of commercial production in 1934, and it is the largest group of owners that has taken a position on the Guffey bill, for or against. The members of the conference are men who came to Washington and registered their position.

8. The debate in the House on August 16 certainly furnished sufficient ground to believe that this bill is a constitutional measure, and doubts about it cannot be resolved except by a test in the courts. The threats of certain powerful financial interests to attack this measure in the courts should not be allowed to intimidate Congress against the passage of the measure.

We solicit your support for the measure.

Respectfully submitted.

Charles O'Neill, chairman legislative committee; Clarence W. Watson, receiver Elk Horn Coal Corporation, Cincinnati, Ohio; E. C. Mahan, president Southern Coal & Coke Co., Knoxville, Tenn.; Fred S. McConnell, vice president, Enos Coal Mining Co., Cleveland, Ohio; H. L. Findlay, vice president, Youghiogheny & Ohio Coal Co., Cleveland, Ohio; William Emery, Jr., president Cambridge Collieries Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Irvin Davis, president Hatfield-Campbell Creek Coal Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; George W. ESTABLISHMENT OF FURNITURE FACTORIES BY THE RESETTLEMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter received by me from Hon. R. G. Tugwell, Administrator of the Resettlement Administration, in reply to my letter to him of August 20, 1935, which was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 22:

AUGUST 23, 1935.

Hon. JOHN W. BOEHNE, Jr.,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BOEHNE: In reply to your letter dated August 20 regarding the wisdom of relief measures now being taken by the Federal Government, please let me say that this administration not only is not intentionally evasive in its responses to your queries but is very appreciative of your sincere desire to get to the bottom of your inquiry.

If, as you say, you represent the people—all of the people—in your locality, it follows that you represent not only the four-fifths of the population who are self-supporting but also the approximately one-fifth who through no fault of their own have become public charges; and who, without a little timely help right now, will remain public charges and a drain on the public pocketbook throughout their lives.

Representing these people, you must have developed certain practical ideas about how they can be made self-supporting, not 5 years or a decade from now, but soon enough to save them and their children from permanent dependence. You must have come to some conclusion about how they can be fitted back into the industrial picture without any serious modification of the present economic structure. We should like to hear what these ideas are.

In the meantime we are going ahead in the best way we know how to help these people obtain at the least possible expenditure of public money the absolute minimum of human necessities even though we have to allow them to do a little of the work for themselves. We hope that our efforts will result in the recovery by these people of their ability to be contributing members of present-day society. We believe their condition, without this timely help, would be totally un-American and intolerable by Americans. We believe that America can afford this much help, and that under the circumstances no one stands to suffer by it.

As to your detailed questions about contemplated expenditures, please believe it is not within the ability of anyone now connected with the Resettlement Administration to answer them completely and accurately at this time. The program will develop as the requirements of the rehabilitation clients and the success of the measures taken seem to indicate that it should develop.

As a Congressman you are, of course, familiar with the amounts of Federal money which have been allocated to the various emergency-relief agencies. You must be familiar, also, with their policy of paying to workers on projects either a subsistence wage or an amount slightly above subsistence, corresponding somewhat to the wages prevailing in the community for the type of work done.

It seems to me that the questions you ask in your letter of August 20 were clearly answered by my statement that the Resettlement Administration is not and will not be engaged in the form of activity to which you object.

As soon as the communities to which you refer are constructed, they will be separated from the Government; what they do after that is pretty much their own affair.

You will understand that I was not responsible for planning or beginning these enterprises. I have been given the responsibility for completing them in such a way that those who live in them will not in the future be dependent on the Government for further assistance. This I intend to do to the best of my ability.

I am unable to see that this is likely to interfere with any present vested interest. But I shall certainly not undertake to say that these people will be asked to forego the ordinary American opportunities to engage in the enterprises necessary to their existence. That is a right which I had supposed, until you suggested it might not be, was open to all citizens.

Sincerely,

R. G. TUGWELL, Administrator.

WAGES FOR LABORERS, ETC., ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS CONTRACTS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 348, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 348

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3303, an act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY]. This is a rule for the consideration of one of the labor bills, a Senate bill, which we were informed pertains to the prevailing rate of wage on public-works contracts, heretofore let. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to use any time?

Mr. RANSLEY. No time is asked on this side.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3303) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings be considered in the House as in the Commitee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors or subcontractors, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1931, is amended to read as follows:

"That the advertised specifications for every contract in excess of $2,000, to which the United States or the District of Columbia is a party, for construction, alteration, and/or repair, including painting and decorating, of public buildings or public works of the United States or the District of Columbia within the geographical limits of the States of the Union or the District of Columbia, and which requires or involves the employment of mechanics and/or laborers shall contain a provision stating the minimum wages to be paid various classes of laborers and mechanics which shall be based upon the wages that will be determined by the Secretary of Labor to be prevailing for the corresponding classes of laborers and mechanics employed on projects of a character similar to the contract work in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State in which the work is to be performed, or in the District of Columbia if the work is to be performed there; and every contract based upon these specifications shall contain a stipulation that the contractor or his subcontractor shall pay all mechanics and laborers employed directly upon the site of the work, unconditionally and not less often than once a week, and without subsequent deduction or rebate on any account, the full amounts accrued at time of payment, computed at wage rates not less than those stated in the advertised specifications, regardless of any contractual relationship which may be alleged to exist between the contractor or subcontractor and such laborers and mechanics, and that the scale of wages to be paid shall be posted by the contractor in a prominent and easily accessible place at the site of the work; and the further stipulation that there may be withheld from the contractor so much of accrued payments as may be considered necessary by the contracting officer to pay to laborers and mechanics employed by the contractor or any subcontractor on the work the difference between the rates of wages required by the contract to be paid laborers and mechanics on the work and the rates of wages received by such laborers and mechanics and not refunded to the contractor, subcontractors, or their agents.

"SEC. 2. Every contract within the scope of this act shall contain the further provision that in the event it is found by the contracting officer that any laborer or mechanic employed by the contractor or any subcontractor directly on the site of the work covered by the contract has been or is being paid a rate of wages less than the rate of wages required by the contract to be paid as aforesaid, the Government may, by written notice to the contractor, terminate his right to proceed with the work or such part of the work as to which there has been a failure to pay said required wages and to prosecute the work to completion by contract or otherwise, and the contractor and his sureties shall be liable to the Government for any excess costs occasioned the Government thereby.

"SEC. 3. (a) The Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay directly to laborers and mechanics from any accrued payments withheld under the terms of the contract any wages found to be due laborers and mechanics pursuant to this act; and the Comptroller General of the United State is further authorized and is directed to distribute a list to all departments of the Government, giving the names of persons or firms whom he has found to have disregarded their obligations to employees and subcontractors. No contract shall be awarded to the persons or firms appearing on this list or to any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which such persons or firms have an interest until 3 years have elapsed from the date of publication of the list containing the names of such persons or firms.

"(b) If the accrued payments withheld under the terms of the contracts, as aforesaid, are insufficient to reimburse all the laborers and mechanics with respect to whom there has been a failure to pay the wages required pursuant to this act, such laborers and mechanics shall have the right of action and/or of intervention against the contractor and his sureties conferred by law upon persons furnishing labor or materials, and in such proceedings it shall be no defense that such laborers and mechanics accepted or agreed to accept less than the required rate of wages or voluntarily made refunds.

"SEC. 4. This act shall not be construed to supersede or impair any authority otherwise granted by Federal law to provide for the establishment of specific wage rates.

"SEC. 5. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage, but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may thereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act.

"SEC. 6. In the event of a national emergency the President is authorized to suspend the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. The funds appropriated and made available by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 (Public Resolution No. 11, 74th Cong.), are hereby made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to the Department of Labor for expenses of the administration of this act."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF REAL-ESTATE BONDHOLDERS' ORGANIZATIONS, ETC.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 354, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 354

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations authorized by House Resolution 412 of the Seventy-third Congress, and supplemented by House Resolution 39 and House Resolution 79 of the Seventy-Fourth Congress, is further authorized and empowered to investigate any defaulted securities and/or reorganizations, protective committees, receivers, trustees, and attorneys, including their fees and expenses and the method of their appointment.

Also representations made by any and all persons, corporations, or others applying for or having received Government funds, directly or indirectly, for use in connection with any defaulted securities, reorganizations, or other similar purposes and the disposition of such funds.

SEC. 2. Whenever in the opinion of the committee material evidence in any proceedings under section 74 or 77B of the National Bankruptcy Act have not been disclosed or presented, or misleading reports or information have been filed, or excessive fees and charges have been claimed or allowed, the committee is hereby authorized and empowered to appear in any court through its duly authorized representative and furnish the court with such evidence in its possession.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. What is the difference between this resolution and the former resolution passed setting up this investigation committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand that this resolution gives them power to go into the matter of receivers' and lawyers' fees, in addition to the investigation of committees.

Mr. SNELL. And they did not have that authority heretofore?

Mr. O'CONNOR. So I understand. I was on that committee some time ago, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is here.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. RICH. As I understand it, you are going to be permitted to designate certain attorneys who will serve for the committee without pay?

Mr. SABATH. That is being done. This is only to give them power to ascertain and eliminate, wherever possible, excessive fees, and find out all the abuses and charges of the committees and receivers and trustees.

Mr. RICH. Will the committee be empowered to engage an attorney at the specific point to do this work for them?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEAMEN'S LEGISLATION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 356.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 356

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 8597, a bill to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea"; to maintain discipline on shipboard; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. RANSLEY. I have no requests for time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 8597) to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea"; to maintain discipline on shipboard; and for other purposes, be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole and read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any part of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 percent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 65 percent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seamen. Every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified for service as such on the seas, who is 19 years of age or upward, and has had at least 3 years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard vessels; and every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified to serve as such on the Great Lakes and on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least 18 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard vessels, and graduates of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea: Provided, That no boy shall be placed on the lookout or at the wheel except for the purpose of learning, and that in narrow and crowded waters or in low visibility none below the rating of able seaman shall be permitted at the wheel: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, such persons or graduates are found to be competent: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship a person found competent may be rated an able seaman after having service on deck 12 months at sea or on the Great Lakes, but seamen examined and rated able seamen under this proviso shall not in any case compose more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required by this section to be shipped or employed upon any vessel.

"Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit and examination, under rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality and age of the applicant, the vessel or vessels on which he has had service, that he is skilled in the work usually performed by able seamen, and that he is entitled to such certificate under the provisions of this section, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

"Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued and shall keep on file the affidavits and records of examinations upon which said certificates are issued.

"The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least 6 hours before the vessel departs, or is scheduled to depart: Provided further, That any person that shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. Any violation of any provision of this section by the owner, master, or officer in charge of the vessel shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and nothing herein shall be held or construed to prevent the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, from making rules and regulations authorized by law as to vessels excluded from the operation of this section: And provided further, That no certificate of service as able seaman shall be issued by any board of local inspectors until after examination of the applicant therefor, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, as to his efficiency, and upon proof, as a result of such examination, that he has been trained in, and is acquainted with the duties entitling him to such rating. No seaman shall be considered an 'able seaman' within the meaning of the laws of the United States relating to the manning of vessels unless he is in possession of such certificate by the board of local inspectors. All certificates as 'able seaman' and 'lifeboatmen' issued by the several boards of local inspectors or other Federal officers prior to the passage of this act shall, within 12 months thereafter, be surrendered to such boards of local inspectors for cancelation, and there shall be issued in lieu thereof to all able seamen and lifeboatmen found qualified by such examination new certificates as required by law. Such new certificates shall be stamped with the seal of the board of local inspectors, placed partially over the signature of the applicant for such certificate; and there shall be attached thereto a photograph of the applicant. Any other safeguards which, in the judgment of the local inspectors, subject to the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Commerce, may be necessary and advisable to establish the authenticity of the certificate, are hereby authorized."

SEC. 2. (a) That the board of local inspectors of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation shall, without examination, issue to pursers, radio operators, electricians, and chief and assistant stewards, certificates for service, which certificates shall authorize them to serve in such capacity: Provided, That such certificates shall not issue before oath has been taken before one of the said inspectors that the applicant therefor will faithfully and honestly perform all the duties required of him by law, and carry out the orders of his superior officers on shipboard and, in the case of a radio operator shall produce to the local inspectors his unexpired license to act in that capacity: And provided further, That when a certificate has been revoked or suspended under the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, a new certificate shall not be issued until the board shall determine that the issue of such new certificate is compatible with the requirements of good discipline and safety at sea.

(b) In cases where an act of incompetency, negligence, misconduct, or breach of discipline threatening the safety of a vessel or its passengers is charged against the holder of such certificate the local board of inspectors shall conduct an investigation after due notice to such certificate holder and affording him an opportunity to be heard, and if the board after such investigation and hearing shall be satisfied that the holder of such certificate is incompetent or has been guilty of misbehavior, breach of discipline, negligence, or unskillfulness, or has endangered life while acting under authority of such certificate, such certificate shall be suspended or revoked by order of the board setting forth the findings upon which such suspension or revocation is based. In the investigation of such acts of incompetency or misconduct, the said boards of inspectors shall have the same authority in making such investigations and under like conditions as that provided by law for the investigation of the acts of licensed officers.

(c) It shall be unlawful to employ any person, or for any person to serve, as a purser, radio operator, chief or assistant steward who has not such certificate issued by the said inspectors, and anyone violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense.

(d) This section is not to amend or repeal any of the provisions of chapter 3 of title 47, United States Code—Telegraphs, Telephones, and Radio Telegraphs.

(e) This section shall take effect 3 months after the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Commerce may make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I think somebody should explain this bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, there are two sections in this bill. This is one of the safety measures sent up by the Department of Commerce. It developed that there had been inefficiency in the examination of seamen through no fault of the Department. The rule and the law has only required affidavits for the determination of the efficiency of seamen. Only a certificate is given without any photograph or anything of that kind.

These certificates are frequently passed from one person to another. Numbers were brought before us in which the name had been erased and another name inserted. It developed in the case of the Morro Castle that there were sailors there who could not row the boats when they got in them.

The purpose of this bill is to have a physical examination by local inspectors to find out whether these men are qualified or not, and then to give them a certificate, with a photograph and a seal over the name, so that they cannot be traded on, and that bona fide seamen may be protected against these fraudulent transfers and efficiency increased.

The second section of the bill provides that pursers, radio people, electricians, chief and assistant stewards shall receive certificates for service, so that the Bureau may have some control over the type of men who are to go on the ships. If the stewards or radio operators are inefficient and they have been neglectful of their duties, they may be tried, just as officers of the ships are tried, and denied further service.

It is distinctly a measure in the interest of efficiency and safety. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE SMUGGLING OF ALIENS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 271.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 271

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members of the standing committee of the House on Immigration and Naturalization, for the purpose of making an investigation and study of (1) the methods used in, extent of, and number of organizations or individuals engaged in the smuggling of aliens into the continental United States in violation of law; (2) the sources of funds to initiate this smuggling activity and the final distribution of the financial proceeds therefrom; (3) the amount of money on deposit in banks and other places of deposit in the name of individuals or organizations engaged in smuggling aliens unlawfully into the United States; (4) the laws, rules, and regulations which are in effect with which our Government men are combating this unlawful smuggling and the adequacy of personnel employed to enforce the laws and regulations; (5) the need for any remedial legislation to more effectively stop the illegal activity of alien smuggling across our land and water boundaries; (6) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation; and (7) the work of the land-border patrol, its efficiency, and need for increased men and money.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, documents, and vouchers, by subpena or otherwise, to take such records and testimony, as it deems necessary.

The subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the request of the chairman of the committee, and shall be served by the Sergeant of Arms of the House of Representatives or any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation and study heretofore authorized, or who fails to produce such books, papers, documents, and vouchers as required by subpenas, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The said committee shall report, by legislative proposals or otherwise, to the House of Representatives before sine die adjournment of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman explain this proposition? It looks to me as if this was an investigation that was going to cost a lot of money.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield to a member of the Committee on Immigration who is familiar with it, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to investigate charges of smuggling aliens across our borders. The report to our committee is that the border patrol is woefully inadequate to handle the situation; that certain organized groups are spending sums of money to have aliens smuggled across our borders, and that the border patrols are not equipped. This investigation is for the purpose of thoroughly going into the question of protecting our borders against reports that hordes of aliens are being unlawfully and illegally smuggled across our borders.

Mr. TABER. What is our Department of Justice for?

Mr. STARNES. I am unable to give the gentleman that information.

Mr. TABER. I supposed that was to enforce the law. I cannot see how a committee can take the place of the Department of Justice.

If the situation described by the gentleman is correct, there ought to be an impeachment resolution brought against the Attorney General and it should go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. STARNES. The border patrol comes under the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and not under the Department of Justice.

Mr. TABER. It is a branch of the district attorney's office and the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice that has charge of the prosecution of the law. If the situation the gentleman describes is correct, they must be neglecting their duty terribly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In the last 2 years 24 of our agents were killed in cold blood because they could not raise a gun against a smuggler. This committee can obtain some definite information from certain groups, for it has the names of certain people who will testify before the committee and expose this international smuggling ring which has been bringing in Chinamen, Mexicans, and people of other nationalities.

Mr. TABER. If that be the situation and the immigration agents are not properly equipped with authority to carry guns, and that sort of thing, why is it the Immigration Committee has not brought in an amendment to the law that will take care of it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We are trying to find out definite information, to bring back definite evidence and be in a position to present to this Congress sufficient law, if necessary, to put an army of veterans along the 8,000 miles of our borders to stop the smuggling of these aliens. Gentlemen talk about the border patrol. If all the men in the Mexican border patrol were stretched out along the border they would be 8 miles from each other. The whole border system has got to be reorganized by Congress.

All we are asking you to do is to give us an opportunity to study the problem that we may come back here in January and present a law with teeth in it which will stop smuggling. I do not think the gentleman should oppose it.

Mr. TABER. Is an appropriation to be requested?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice this resolution appoints seven members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to make a thorough investigation of the question. How much money does the gentleman anticipate it is going to cost to carry it on?

Mr. STARNES. It is estimated it will not take more than $15,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman think a committee can travel all over this country and investigate this situation for any such sum of money?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It will not cost more than $15,000. We are going to have three subcommittees working. One will investigate the situation on the Canadian border and one will investigate the situation on the Mexican border.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Is not this similar to a bill which was brought in during the closing hours of the last session?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. STARNES. I was not a Member of Congress at the last session; I am not able to say.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am quite sure it was not.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. The House has just determined to allow the aliens to stay here. There is no difficulty about knowing they are in here. Why is it necessary to appoint a special committee to investigate it?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, if I may proceed for a couple of minutes, it seems to me that to authorize more investigations and the spending of more money is ridiculous, especially in this case. It appears this is the situation: The Immigration Committee knows that the agents of the Bureau of Immigration and the Department of Labor have not the authority, have not the power to take care of themselves and enforce the law. They know certain irregular practices are going on which require amendments of the law to correct. Why can they not bring in the legislation without more investigation? Why do they not do that instead of asking for an appropriation of $15,000 for an investigation every time we turn around?

Mr. WOLFENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order; we shall be through in a few minutes; we have but one more rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. WOLFENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN) there were—ayes 45, noes 84.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will withdraw the resolution if the gentleman intends to press his objection. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withdraw his point of order, I will try to let the vote go over until tomorrow.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will consent to let the vote go over until tomorrow, but I would like to get a record vote.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if we are to have a record vote, let us have it tonight.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present. If we are going to vote on this bill, let us vote on it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the resolution was rejected.

CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL REVENUE EMPLOYEES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 365.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

HOUSE RESOLUTION 365

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9114, a bill "To abolish the oath required of customs and internal-revenue employees prior to the receipt of compensation, and for other purposes." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment, under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the custom brokers bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 9114) to abolish the oath required of customs and internal-revenue employees prior to the receipt of compensation, and for other purposes, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole and read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill (S. 3286) for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that exactly the same bill?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It is the same bill. The Senate bill 3286 is the same as H. R. 9114.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Senate bill contain the old sections 5, 6, 7, and 8?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. No; it is identical with the House bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. The Senate bill is identically the same as the bill under consideration, which is in the amended form reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1790 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 19, sec. 49) is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes", approved March 15, 1898 (30 Stat. 277 at 286), as amended, is hereby amended by striking therefrom the following sentence: "Hereafter collectors of customs and their special deputies shall be competent to administer oaths to officers of the Revenue Marine Service and employees in the Customs Service required by sections 1790 and 2693 of the Revised Statutes."

SEC. 3. Subdivision (a) of section 641 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (46 Stat. 759; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 19, sec. 1641) is hereby amended by striking out "(e)" in line 17 and inserting in lieu thereof "(c)."

SEC. 4. Subdivisions (b), (c), and (d) of section 641 of such acts are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Revocation or suspension: The collector or chief officer of the customs may at any time, for good and sufficient reasons, serve notice in writing upon any customhouse broker so licensed to show cause why said license shall not be revoked or suspended, which notice shall be in the form of a statement specifically setting forth the ground of complaint. The collector or chief officer of customs shall within 10 days thereafter notify the customhouse broker in writing of a hearing to be held before him within 5 days upon said charges. At such hearing the customhouse broker may be represented by counsel, and all proceedings, including the proof of the charges and the answer thereto, shall be presented, with the right of cross-examination to both parties, and a stenographic record of the same shall be made and a copy thereof shall be delivered to the customhouse broker. At the conclusion of such hearing the collector or chief officer of customs shall forthwith transmit all papers and the stenographic report of the hearing, which shall constitute the record of the case, to the Secretary of the Treasury for his action. Thereupon the said Secretary of the Treasury shall have the right to revoke or suspend the license of any customhouse broker shown to be incompetent, disreputable, or who has refused to comply with the rules and regulations issued under this section, or who has, with intent to defraud, in any manner willfully and knowingly deceived, misled, or threatened any importer, exporter, claimant, or client, or prospective importer, exporter, claimant, or client, by word, circular, letter, or by advertisement.

"An appeal may be taken by any licensed customhouse broker from any order of the Secretary of the Treasury suspending or revoking a license. Such appeal shall be taken by filing, in the circuit court of appeals of the United States within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Secretary of the Treasury be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Secretary of the Treasury, or upon any officer designated by him for that purpose, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the collector or chief officer of customs or unless there were reasonable grounds for failure so to do. The finding of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the collector or chief officer of customs, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the collector or chief officer of customs and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Secretary of the Treasury may modify his findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file with the court such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and his recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347). The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Secretary of the Treasury's order.

"(c) Prior licenses: Licenses issued under the act of June 10, 1910 (36 Stat. 454; U. S. C., title 19, sec. 415), or under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section prior to the effective date of this amendment, shall continue in force and effect, subject to suspension and revocation as provided in subdivision (b) of this section.

"(d) Regulations by Secretary: The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to protect importers and the revenue of the United States, and to carry out the provisions of this section, including rules and regulations requiring the keeping of books, accounts, and records by customhouse brokers, and the inspection thereof, and of their papers, documents, and correspondence by, and the furnishing by them of information relating to their business to, any duly accredited agent of the United States."

SEC. 5. Subdivision (e) of section 641 of such act is hereby repealed.

Mr. McCORMACK (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill may be dispensed with and the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will an opportunity be given to Members to offer amendments at any place?

The SPEAKER. The Members will have that opportunity. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALY to the Senate bill: On page 6, line 2, after the word "thereof", strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the Members because I am speaking under great difficulty. I am very unwell, and if it had not been that I would have felt recalcitrant in my duty as a Member of this House and unfaithful to the constituency that sent me here I would be in bed in place of upon the floor of this House.

Mr. Speaker, this bill affects customhouse brokers all over the United States. Customhouse brokers are licensed by the Treasury Department, and this bill is in the main for a proper regulation of them and the business they conduct. In section 4 of this bill, paragraph (d), the following occurs:

Regulations by Secretary. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to protect importers and the revenue of the United States, and to carry out the provisions of this section, including rules and regulations requiring the keeping of books, accounts, and records by customhouse brokers and the inspection thereof.

I have no quarrel with that. I think the Treasury Department should enact proper regulations and that brokers licensed by the Treasury Department should be regulated by the Department. If the bill had stopped there, I would have no objection; but it goes further, and in the most pernicious way that I have ever seen in a bill presented to this House, an act that tears up that sacred fane of confidential communication as between clients and quasi-legal officers. This would render no man, no home, no business safe. If this went through and was carried a little further, it would allow snoopers to go about; and I think we have allowed snooping enough by the departments of this administration up to date.

Mr. Speaker, I have supported every measure advocated by this administration on the floor of the House, but I think we have gone far enough in giving departments powers far beyond justice, far beyond reason, and far beyond the law, in my opinion. The portion that I ask to be stricken out allows the inspection of papers, documents, and correspondence and the furnishing by them of information relating to their business to any accredited agent of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, it could be as well argued that a law could be passed giving the Department of Justice the right to send snoopers into any lawyer's office and have them look into the confidential communications between a client and his attorney. Is not this repulsive to any American? Does it not shock the conscience of any man who is animated by a sense of justice and fair play?

The bill gives the Secretary the right to promulgate any just and fair rules or regulations that he deems proper to enact and there can be no objection to them. It gives him the right to demand that brokers keep books and accounts, and I have no objection to that. It gives him the right to inspect these books and accounts, and I have no objection to that, but when it goes further than that and says that any agent that he cares to send into a brokers' office—and the Ways and Means Committee has said that a broker is a quasi-legal officer—can go into such office and read the private correspondence between any firm he represents and the broker, I must protest. This is something so repulsive to American institutions and American justice and fair play that I do not think I have to make much of an appeal to the Members on either side of the Chamber to support the amendment which will strike out this snooping clause and give the protection that should be given. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, we have been here a long time, and this seems to be a controversial matter. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of no quorum for the time being. I doubt if there will be much debate after the gentleman from New York offers his amendment.

Mr. MAPES. We will need to have some business to transact between times tomorrow, and we have done a lot tonight.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MAPES. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, we have six conference reports tomorrow, and some of them are going to require considerable time. We must get along as far as we possibly can tonight, and I intend in a few moments to move that the House recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will there be any opportunity to consider a bill where the House has passed it and the Senate has passed the bill with some slight amendments in which the committee having jurisdiction in the matter has instructed that the Senate amendment be agreed to?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman will have to submit that question to the Speaker. The matter of recognition is within his discretion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on his point of order?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we would be in much better shape to start in tomorrow, inasmuch as we are to reconvene at 10 o'clock, if we stop now.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will withhold the point a little while.

Mr. MAPES. How long does the gentleman think it will take to finish the consideration of this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Just a few minutes. I do not apprehend we will be here more than 20 minutes.

Mr. FULLER. Does the gentleman intend to take up any conference reports?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; we have six conference reports to consider tomorrow.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of no quorum for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 6, line 3, of the Senate bill, after the word "correspondence", insert "respecting any imported merchandise then under consideration or previously imported within 1 year in ascertaining the classification or the value thereof or the rate or amount of duty."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to oppose this bill. It is farthest from my purpose to oppose the bill. It is a creditable, praiseworthy bill, but as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALY] indicated in a very forceful way, the bill in certain respects goes too far and empowers the Secretary of the Treasury, if he so wills, to set up a system of snooping and spying and espoinage which would be most repugnant. The bill can readily be amended to make it fair, equitable, and far less drastic. The bill in its earlier sections provides for oaths of customs brokers, and a system of licensing and revocation of licenses, with a right to appeal. In the beginning, as written, it did not even have the right of appeal, but the committee saw fit to give that right of appeal, and properly so. In the last section, however, there is accorded the unusual right to the Secretary of the Treasury, by regulations, to go most deeply into the business as well as private affairs of importers and customs brokers.

Many influential citizens of New York have asked me to object to these broad inquisitorial powers that the Secretary is given without let or hindrance. He may go back a hundred years. There is no limitation as to time. There is no limitation as to the character of books or documents or private letters even that he may investigate and examine, not by himself, necessarily, or by high officials of the Department, but by mere underlings and agents—in fact, by "any duly accredited agent of the United States", whatever that means.

My amendment does not go as far as that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He would practically wipe out the section as to examinations and investigations of books and documents. My substitute amendment would merely limit the discovery, first, to the imported merchandise under consideration, or, second, that previously imported within 1 year.

That should be sufficient in order to detect frauds and violations. The rank and file of customhouse brokers are honest. This committee provision places a bar sinister upon all of them. That is unfair. It confounds the innocent with the guilty.

There are 35,000 accountants and attorneys enrolled to practice before the Income Tax Bureau and Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department. The opportunities for fraud and corruption, while not as great as the Bureau of Customs, nevertheless, there are no such drastic provisions as to investigation and discovery.

The Treasury has successfully administered the 1884 statute governing the practice of accountants and attorneys before that Department for 50 years.

This is the language of the committee report. That 1884 statute has never been amended to require any such drastic investigational powers as the instant bill provides.

Why should such plenary power be invoked against custom-house brokers? I would be willing to give that right to responsible, high officials of the Treasury Department, but when you are going to give that authority to the rank and file of "agents of the United States", be they in the Treasury or elsewhere, I say, it is time to call a halt.

Here is what the responsible business men of New York say about the bill in that particular:

This gives power to the Secretary of the Treasury to require brokers to submit for inspection all their papers, documents, and correspondence, not only to the Secretary of the Treasury, but to any "duly accredited agent of the United States." This practically gives the Government full power of search over all documents and papers of a customs broker, covering an indefinite period of time.

It could go back a score of years, if need be.

Such a drastic provision as this would be open to abuse, not perhaps by superior officers of the Government, but to irresponsible investigators and detectives. It would probably lead to graft and corruption. The present tariff law limits the power of the Government to call upon brokers and importers to produce their correspondence and documents to a period of 1 year, covering a particular importation. You will find this provision in section 509 of the 1930 Tariff Act.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This is a very important piece of legislation. I know the hour is late, and I am as anxious as anyone to see this Congress wind up and go home. But if you will take a moment's time to read subdivision D of section 4 of this bill, you will find absolutely the most drastic piece of regulatory legislation this Congress has ever passed. You subject all of the books and papers to an unqualified examination. Time is not limited. You produce and create the greatest avenue of graft and corruption that you could imagine. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is an excellent one. It limits the examination to within 1 year of the date of the transaction, and I think that this House should adopt it and so amend that section.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. There are many other types of business which operate with a Government license. Is there any other case you might point to as a precedent for this kind of a regulation?

Mr. GAVAGAN. None whatever, and as a matter of fact the amendment of the gentleman from New York would conform this section to the provisions of the Tariff Act.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from New York that the report of the committee speaks of the power of the Treasury Department over the 35,000 accountants and attorneys enrolled in the Treasury Department, and in the supervision over those 35,000 no such power is given of examination of papers and documents from kingdom come to kingdom come.

My amendment would be in conformity to the practice that prevails in the Treasury Department with reference to those who enroll or practice before that Department generally.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withdraw that?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will withdraw it for the moment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ROMJUE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

S. 3386. An act for the relief of Helen Gallagher Dominian; and

S. J. Res. 163. Joint resolution to authorize the acceptance of bids for Government contracts made subject to codes of fair competition.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3019. An act to amend "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269);

H. R. 6361. An act to amend the Filled Milk Act;

H. R. 6732. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7167. An act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, authorize appropriations, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7199. An act to provide for the donation of certain Army equipment to posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars;

H. R. 7380. An act authorizing the Virgin Islands Co. to settle valid claims of its creditors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7709. An act to provide time credits for substitute laborers in the Post Office when appointed as regular laborers;

H. R. 7927. An act to authorize the Secretary of State to lease to citizens of the United States any land heretofore or hereafter acquired under any act, Executive order, or treaty in connection with projects in whole or in part constructed or administered by the Secretary of State through the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, American section;

H. R. 8473. An act to provide for the compiling and publishing of the Official Register of the United States;

H. R. 8632. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933; and

H. R. 8651. An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

KRAMER AND OTHER GAG BILLS DANGER TO LAY AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to sound a warning to the students and teachers of this country—as well as to anyone who loves knowledge and wants to be free—about the bills to curtail the liberties of American citizens. Educators refer to "academic liberty"—which, of course, is included. There are a great many bills that have been introduced—I think about 20 this session. The two most dangerous are the Kramer bill, H. R. 6427, from the Judiciary Committee, and the military disaffection bill, S. 2253, twin bills of persecution.

In addition, specific resolutions have been introduced aimed at education, particularly higher education. These resolutions are said to concern a wish for investigations of so-called "radical activities" in the various universities of the country. Whatever the intention of the authors of these bills, the result will be violation of all the rights guaranteed in the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States; persecutions and an impediment to knowledge and freedom in this country.

We do not want a situation as exists in many other countries today, where teachers are brutally kicked out and persecuted for doing their duties as educators and for telling the truth; we do not want it so that the students are eventually shot down because of their opinions; we do not want the National Government meddling in educational affairs, either religious or lay; we want free educational institutions where the teachers have self-respect and the students have a chance to learn something. Such legislation will inevitably lead to religious, political, and economic persecution. So, I repeat, we do not want a situation similar to certain other countries. These resolutions of investigation—aside from the enactment of laws which curtail liberty—will embarrass, humiliate, and persecute students and teachers in State schools, and will do the same for religious schools and universities. Such legislation will undoubtedly lead to persecution of religions and religious sects.

I sometimes get irritated over school teachers—their lack of independence. I know of a city where a political machine kept the teachers down, but with a little help they are now a well-organized group, have maintained their self-respect, and are really educating the children of that city. I hope all the teachers of this country realize their danger, and organize for the preservation not only of academic liberty but for all liberty and knowledge as well.

If any of these military and gag bills are passed, or resolutions of investigation where the Federal taxpayers' money is wasted on useless fishing expeditions, harpooning into the private affairs of professors, teachers, and students, there will be an endless cheap and trashy hullabaloo by cowards and fools which will be a detriment to every person who ever wants to learn anything in this country. Likewise, simple-minded nuisances and bores will have their heyday, intimidating people who are their betters.

I therefore take this occasion to sound a warning to the teachers and students of America, and to all persons interested in true education and American liberty.

INDIAN GRATUITY OFFSETS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and in my own right, I am opposed to that part of the conferees' report whereby it is provided that in all suits now pending in the Court of Claims and in any suit hereafter filed by any Indian tribe, the United States shall be permitted to set off against the claims of said tribe any gratuities expended by the United States for said tribe.

I am opposed to this both because I think it is improper for this legislation to be inserted in an appropriation bill and, secondly, I think that on the merits the amendment is wrong in principle.

As to my objection that this provision should not under our procedure be in the appropriation bill, I think the House should be advised of these facts.

When the second deficiency appropriation bill came before the House, it was brought in under a rule which prevented the Members of the House from making a point of order to anything included in the bill. It is, of course, assumed, and rightly so, that an appropriation bill will not include legislation, and yet under the cloak of a rule which prevented objection being taken to new legislation, the Appropriations Committee wrote into the bill a provision that in all suits filed both at the present time and hereafter in the Court of Claims, the United States could set off all moneys gratuitously expended by the United States for the benefit of the particular plaintiffs. Further, the Appropriations Committee did this without even permitting a fair hearing to be had thereon. The committee, it is true, called one official of the Department of Justice who represented the Department in Indian litigation, but the committee did not even extend the courtesy of a hearing to the Department of the Interior, which is entrusted with the administration of Indian affairs and which by legislation and custom also passes upon the propriety of jurisdictional bills when they are presented to the proper committees of Congress.

The amendment seemed so much out of place that when the appropriation bill, as passed by this House, reached the Senate, this particular provision was struck out in its entirety by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The amendment offered by the Senate which struck out this part is numbered amendment 76.

Notwithstanding the unusual nature of this legislation and the fact that it was struck out by the Senate, the conferees again wrote the same type of legislation into the revised bill as reported by the conferees. It is true that the amendment as reported is in a somewhat modified form, but it is nevertheless true that the amendment still provides in substance that nearly all gratuities given by the United States for the benefit of any particular tribe may be set off by the United States against that tribe in any suit brought to redress wrongs done the tribe by the United States.

The Indian Affairs Committee, which knows more about this type of legislation than any other committee, has not been consulted in any way. It would seem to me that because of this parliamentary situation, if for no other, this amendment, if it could be voted upon separately, should be rejected.

On the merits, however, of this proposed amendment I have this to say:

Such legislation should not have been adopted for the reason that when a gratuity is once given by the Government there is no basic reason for the United States having the right to set off that gratuity in any suit subsequently brought by any tribe. As a matter of law, there is no legal warrant for setting off a gratuity; if a gift is once made, the gift is complete and cannot thereafter be charged against the one to whom the gift is given.

Further, it should be remembered that all of this country was taken from the Indians and, while we sometimes think that we have expended a large sum for the care and support of the Indians, the amount so expended is infinitesimally small in comparison with the value of the property which we have taken from the Indians. In view of this taking, it comes with ill grace for us to take the attitude that we should now collect from the Indians all moneys that we have heretofore told the Indians we were giving them. Such an attitude, instead of bringing good will with the Indians, will only lead to discontent and lay the grounds for further misunderstanding.

Finally, from a strictly legal viewpoint, it is asinine to write into a bill a provision providing that all gratuities may be set off without any definition of what is to constitute a "gratuity." I say with all fairness that I doubt that the Committee on Appropriations, in reporting a blanket provision of this kind, took the trouble to ascertain the conflict that exists in the decisions of the Court of Claims on the subject of "gratuities." Sometimes the Court of Claims under the word "gratuity" has allowed the Government to set off the cost of educating Indian children in nonreservation schools (Blackfeet Blood, etc., Tribes v. United States, Apr. 8, 1935); other times the Court of Claims has refused to consider such expenditure to be a gratuity (Berthold Indians v. United States, 71 Ct. Cls. 308). Sometimes the Court of Claims has allowed as a gratuity all moneys expended by the United States in the administration of Government agencies (Duwanish Lummi, etc., Tribes v. United States, June 4, 1934), on the ground that such expenditures were benefits to the Indians, but the same court has also held that such expenditures could not be included as a gratuity because in spending such money, the Government was merely performing a governmental function (Assiniboine Tribe v. United States, Apr. 10, 1933).

In that same case the court pointed out such expenditures were common expenses for all tribes. The result is that unless Congress itself specifies what items it considers to be gratuities, it is impossible to know what the Court of Claims will set off. I say that this amendment has no place in an appropriation bill, and that any such legislation should have come before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I say further that had it been possible to oppose this amendment without opposing the entire second deficiency appropriation bill, it would have been opposed by the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WILL ROGERS

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, we were shocked, and everybody felt they lost an intimate friend when they heard that Will Rogers was dead.

I always felt, although I had not met him personally, that I knew Will Rogers. Years ago when he was an ordinary trouper on the Keith circuit, I was impressed and enjoyed his wit. I saw him go by leaps and bounds to the height which he achieved at his death. I remember calling the attention of my friends to his Sunday articles noted for his wit and veiled truths. It was not until a month or two ago that I had the pleasure of being in his company and conversing with him. The occasion was this: I had to call upon Senator HUEY LONG to discuss some official business, and I was told that the Senator was dining.

I called upon the Senator in the Senate restaurant and the Senator invited me to be seated. I listened while the Senator vociferously explained his share-the-wealth program, using the restaurant menu to figure on. Upon looking across the table I was surprised to see none other than Will Rogers. Will Rogers listened intently, and asked Huey to explain how his system would work on a $10,000,000 farm. I do not believe Will Rogers was convinced and they both joshed about it.

Will Rogers then turned his attention to me and seemed interested in knowing that I came from Pittsburgh, and asked about some of his Pittsburgh friends.

Before leaving the distinguished gentlemen I had the autograph of Senator Long and Will Rogers on the very menu card used in explanation of share the wealth, which menu card I now prize very dearly.

I take some pride in the fact that when Will Rogers was an obscure actor I inwardly predicted that he was a superior man and would be a topnotcher.

He has left his mark indelibly printed in the hearts of the whole of America. "Can't write more; damn paper wet", as he expressed it when writing about one of his deceased friends.

THE WEATHER, THE CORN CROP, AND FOREGN IMPORTS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, reports from north Nebraska indicate that there may be another failure of the corn crop, especially around Norfolk. Some predictions are made that the crop has already been injured 40 to 50 percent. Gene Huse, publisher of the Norfolk Daily News, the world's greatest country newspaper, states this:

The corn crop close by Norfolk doesn't look good; not over 40 or 50 percent.

Statements have been made on the floor of the House that the corn-hog farmer is better off now than he ever has been in history. However, farmers write to me from my district indicating that there are very few hogs to sell. Hogs in the Omaha stock market bring $12 a hundred, and in Chicago $12.20 a hundred. Naturally that is a great difference from a year ago, but not many farmers have hogs to sell.

Now, regarding the hot weather which has continued in north Nebraska, Lloyd H. Pasewalk of the Pasewalk Implement House of Norfolk, Nebr., who has made a close study of the situation, says the hot weather still continues, hot dry winds from the southwest, and up to last Thursday afternoon no rain has fallen for some time. Corn is suffering every day and some fields are entirely gone now, and others are going fast. While there has been some forecast for showers in my district, they will not help the situation much, as a general good rain is needed, and if a general good rain does arrive within the next few days, we would get only part of a normal crop. The dry strip in my district seems to be along the Elkhorn River from West Point west through Tilden. Then again conditions are bad around Albion and Newman Grove. Much encouragement has come to me in reports from Wausa, Center, Bloomfield, territories which have been burned out from year to year. This good news indicates that these sections have had plenty of moisture this year, and their corn is in wonderful shape and is practically made. In that part of the drouth territory, no more rain is needed to make the corn crop.

Reports from the South Omaha livestock market to me would indicate that the receipts of livestock, especially hogs, are falling off, and the prices of hogs are continully climbing. On August 16, the top on hogs was $11.90, and the top on cattle $10.65, with a top on sheep of $8.75, but those who are close to the market declare these high prices are the result of light receipts, and these receipts are readily absorbed by the consumer who still can afford it. Statements have been made on the floor of the House that something must be done toward getting the price of pork and beef down to where the consumer and wage earner can pay for it, and some intimations have been made that the farmer may be getting too much money for his livestock at this time.

While prices of meat on the block continue high, and while meat strikes are being held in various communities, I beg you to give consideration to the fact that the farmer is still not receiving the cost of production. I call attention to the fact that the Department of Agriculture revealed statistics only recently indicating that the packers' charges and profits may have more to do with high prices than the processing tax, against which considerable has been said recently. I have stated frequently that the processing tax should have been distributed among all meat animals in order to give the hog raiser a better deal in the matter of processing taxes. I still maintain that the hog raiser is paying some part of this processing tax. I will not agree entirely with a statement that has been made that $11 of every $19 of processing taxes is collected by the processors. I agree with the statement that the consumer is paying a large share of this processing tax.

I believe that Secretary Wallace and Chester Davis, of the Department of Agriculture, and the heads of the Farm Bureau organization, agreed with me when I spoke before the triple A meeting in Washington on processing taxes and urged that these processing taxes be distributed among the meat animals. In fact, it was my belief that members of the triple A organization who came to Washington at that time were willing to pass a resolution favoring my plan, and it was my belief that the officials of the Department of Agriculture were in favor of this plan. However, intimations were made to me that the great beef barons opposed this plan, and were powerful enough to keep the processing tax on the hog grower alone.

It does not seem fair that the farmer who raises hogs should pay all of the processing taxes at a time when the raiser of beef profits by the increased price for meat animals resulting from the processing tax paid against pork. The figures from the Department of Agriculture show that the price spread from the producer to the consumer is far greater on beef, upon which no processing tax is levied, than upon pork, which is taxed. These figures also show that while beef prices to the cattle raiser have declined from the May peak, the percentage of spread from farmer to consumer continues to increase.

Farm price for 100 pounds of beef in May was $6.80, retail price $14.48, spread $7.68 or 53 percent. Similar figures for June at $6.55, $14.47, $7.92, or 54.7 percent, and July $6.20, $14.06, $7.86, or 55.9 percent, according to the Department.

Thus, while the farmers' beef price declined 60 cents per 100 pounds from May to July, the distribution cost jumped from 53 to 55.9 percent of the consumer's dollar.

During the same 3-month period farm prices for hogs were: May, $7.92 per 100 pounds; June $8.36, and July $8.40. Retail prices $12.93, $13.30, and $13.43; price spreads $5.01, $4.94, and $5.03, and percentage margins 38.7, 37.1, and 37.5, showing that in the case of pork the margin percentage, much lower than beef, also varied with the farm price trend.

Excluding the hog-processing tax, the price margin for the 3 months was $2.76, $2.69, and $2.78, and percentages 21.3, 20.2, and 20.7.

By comparison with the processing tax excluded, it takes a little more than a 20-percent margin to distribute pork products and over 50 percent for beef.

I heartily favor bills which are now pending in the House and which will determine where that difference between the producer and the consumer actually goes. The public is entitled to know that.

I have recently received a letter from the president of the Farmers Westcentral Grain Co. of Nebraska, who has asked me pertinent questions as to the amount of importations of farm products from foreign countries. Many of the things he tells me are of unusual interest, and for your information I include part of his letter as my remarks:

As you know, I have been a strong advocate of the principles underlying the A. A. A., i. e., the endeavor to give the farmer the benefit of a domestic market at a price level that would give him a fair exchange for the products of industry, and I still believe that the National Congress should give to agriculture the protection necessary to preserve the domestic market for the American farmer, just as they have done through the protective tariff for industry and labor. I have no particular interest in perpetuating any particular administration; my sole interest is in the benefits agriculture is to receive, and I have endeavored in the past to consistently oppose such policies as operate against the farmer. It is a pretty severe strain to me to support the administration in its A. A. A. program when I find certain conditions prevailing that largely undo the benefits derived from the A. A. A.

It is quite true that we had practically lost our export market for surplus agricultural products, especially at a price that would justify the American farmer in continuing large-scale production. Manifestly, if we were to continue to produce more than could be profitably sold it would be at the expense of the price structure, hence the effort to adjust production to profitable consumptive demand. But here is what I find.

My connection with the Farmers National Grain Corporation has taken me into all sections of the grain-producing area. Recently on a business trip to the Pacific coast I took pains to investigate the source of grains used in the processing of feeds for Pacific coast industries. As you know, the poultry industry is a pretty big business out there. My cooperative organization, Farmers National, enjoyed a good business shipping corn from the Middle West to the coast for use in the processing of poultry feeds. I found thousands of tons of corn from our Mississippi Valley farms went into this market. On a trip last April, and again in June, I found that not one bushel of Mississippi Valley or gulf coast corn was being used in those industries. They were supplying their needs with Argentine corn. Every processing mill that I visited was cracking Argentine corn and using it in their formula. This cooperative company with which I am connected also has been selling a considerable quantity of corn to the processing companies in the East that were supplying the Virginias, the Carolinas, and other States in that area with their processed feeds. Our sales department, noticing that our volume was falling off very largely, made an investigation. They were informed by some of the biggest processing mills in the East that they had been able to secure supplies of corn from the Argentine to meet their needs for the next 6 months.

Doesn't it seem foolish to conduct a campaign to secure the consent of the American farmer, through a contract, to reduce his corn acreage and then let this grain come in from a foreign competitor?

The same thing was true in the handling of relief in the northwest. Thousands of tons of Canadian grain, principally wheat, was brought in under a special order for relief purposes, yet I found that millions of bushels of grain in our Pacific northwest, Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, laid in the country elevators waiting for a market, and this grain could have been very profitably used to supply relief needs in the spring-wheat area. If you think those farmers out there were not wrathy over the situation, then you don't know farmers.

It is such inconsistencies as these that are going to destroy the faith and confidence of the farmers in the A. A. A. program. It seems to me that what they need down there, in the A. A. A. administration, is a few hard-headed business farmers, placed in responsible positions, in the place of some of the young college graduates from Yale, Harvard, and Columbia, with their fool theories translated into the rules under which they administer the A. A. A.

Here is a recent example of what irritates our Nebraska farmers. The county agricultural agents received orders, a short time ago, that they must check all compliance records under the corn-hog program, and see that every contract signer who intentionally or inadvertently had exceeded his contract acreage for corn be required to chop out the corn in excess of his contract. This they were advised must be done by the first of August. I know of county agents who worked 24 hours with their committees to get this done, the instructions being that they would lose their benefit payments if it were not done. The county agent and his committee went out among the farmers and in many instances the farmer had to get off of his harvesting machine, quit his threshing, and go out and cut down his corn. Then along came a little later order, stating that they would extend the time to August 5. Then the latest ruling was that compliance might be completed by December 1. The sad part of it is, Congressman, that our extension services, which have to obey these orders from Washington, are going to bear the brunt of the criticism. I have talked with many of our county agents and they realize just what they are up against, yet they are helpless.

I wish that some sane, sensible program would finally be devised whereby agriculture will be placed upon the same economic basis as industry and labor. As you know, I was one of the early advocates and fought hard in Washington for the McNary-Haugen bill, and I still believe that the principles of that bill, put into practical effect, would accomplish the results without all of this bureaucratic domination over the farmers from Washington. I believe strongly in the necessity of a processing tax, but if a processing tax were levied against our basic agricultural commodities and used for the express purpose of diverting into export channels our surplus agricultural products, even to the extent of subsidizing these exports as they did in the case of grain in the Pacific Northwest through the operation of the Emergency Export Corporation, then it would be unnecessary to ask the farmer to sign any kind of a contract, the market would adjust itself automatically and the farmer would be placed upon exactly the same basis as the manufacturer is. The manufacturer has his own market protected, he has a domestic price level on a higher basis than he can secure for his export surplus, and if he runs his factory to the extent where his exportable surplus becomes too great, he lowers his income on his entire output. And so a processing tax is levied for the sole purpose of protecting the farmer, and if he voluntarily so manages his business that the percentage relation between his exportable surplus and that portion which he sells on the domestic market becomes too great, he penalizes himself and so automatically reduces his income. The American farmer will learn that and he will voluntarily adjust his production without the necessity of having a lot of fellows tramping over the country measuring the wheat fields and the cornfields of America with a 5-foot stick.

Although my territory has benefited by the triple A program, and although I voted for its support after the farmers voluntarily made up their own contracts, it has always been and it is still my idea that any reduction program is wrong. Especially am I opposed to the importation of foreign farm produce at a time when our farmers are ordered to reduce. Because of this, I made an intensive study of importations of farm produce. It is my belief that one or two bills which have been introduced to provide the farmer with cost of production will solve our agricultural problem more readily than many of the experimentations which we have undertaken and which have become so costly due to the fact that they necessitate the setting up of so many bureaus and organizations. I was among those who fought strenuously to keep in the triple A amendments that item which makes it mandatory upon the President of the United States to stop the importation of farm produce from foreign countries at a time when in his judgment he believes these importations are competing with the American farmer.

For your information, I include a table of imports made by Mr. LEMKE giving totals for the first 6 months of 1935:

Animal and animal products, edible	$39,305,928
Animal and animal products, inedible	70,381,248
Vegetable food products and beverages	298,000,898
Vegetable products, inedible	136,862,212
Textile fibers and manufactures	135,925,916

All of these products could, and should, have been produced by our own people.

This will give you some idea as to whether or not our Government is allowing the importation of farm produce at a time when a restriction program is being carried on.

MEMORIAL TO JAMES MADISON

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced House Joint Resolution 400, providing that Sixteenth Street NW. shall be henceforth legally and officially known as "James Madison Avenue." I herewith insert a copy of House Joint Resolution 400.

Joint resolution to honor the memory of James Madison

Whereas we are approaching the sesquicentennial of that convention of wise and patriotic men who in 1787 formulated the American Constitution, which has been the bulwark of liberty and the signpost of all progress for four generations of our fathers; and

Whereas the president of that Convention will be honored for all time in the name of this beautiful Capital City of the continent-wide Republic of which he is justly called the "father"; and

Whereas the knowledge and diligence of James Madison as a member of that Convention so greatly contributed to its success as to win for himself by common acclaim the designation of "Father of the Constitution"; and

Whereas the names of Washington and Madison should be forever linked together in the minds and hearts of future generations, especially by naming the principal street in the Capital City bearing Washington's name for his adviser, coworker, and friend, Madison: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That from and after the enactment of this joint resolution what is now called Sixteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C., shall be legally known and officially designated as "Madison Avenue."

Mr. Speaker, we may soon have a superfluity of statues and monuments to distinguished Americans around Washington. Of course, the best monument for any man is in the hearts of his grateful countrymen. Since James Madison was not a picturesque figure, but was one of the plain, plodding workers of the early days of our history, the people may overlook the important part he played in starting our Government in the right direction. As Washington was the Father of our Country, so Madison has been by common consent recognized as the father of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, a most unique and impressive way to honor the memory of any person is to name a city or town for him or a street for him. Here the Capital of the Nation bears the name of the leader of our Revolutionary Armies, of the president of the Constitutional Convention, of the first President of the Federated Republic, and, in fact, of him who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." The avenues of this beautiful Capital City are named for the States, and that is a most appropriate custom. Only one avenue has a different name and it is Constitution Avenue. How appropriate, therefore, it is that the greatest street in the city in many respects should be named for the father of the Constitution. Sixteenth Street is a great artery of traffic, but especially is it the home of churches, institutions of learning, embassies, legations, hotels, hospitals, and magnificent residences.

Mr. Speaker, in further exposition of some of the reasons, which to my mind are compelling, to change the name of Sixteenth Street to James Madison Avenue are stated in a press release which I prepared and is as follows:

Congressman McSWAIN, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, has introduced a joint resolution to give to Sixteenth Street NW., the name of Madison Avenue. He says that in 1937 we will observe the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the great Constitutional Convention which met in Philadelphia and formulated the Federal Constitution, the greatest document of its sort ever conceived of and written by man. Mr. McSWAIN says that as Washington was named for the Father of his Country, so the principal street in the Capital City should be named for the father of the Constitution.

Undoubtedly the learning and parliamentary ability of James Madison made him the leading figure in that great convention, next to Washington. He was Washington's neighbor, adviser, and friend. He was Secretary of State under Thomas Jefferson for 8 years and then President for 8 years during our second war of independence, and during the initial period of the establishment of industry and commerce in America. Madison was associated with Jefferson in the establishment of the University of Virginia.

Mr. McSwain says that he thinks to name a street for Madison would be far more appropriate than to build a monument to him and place it in some park. Few of those who hurry by would ever know whose monument it was and the result would probably be the virtual waste of a considerable sum of money.

The name of a street will cost no money. But that street will be on the tongues of tens of thousands of people every day. Undoubtedly Sixteenth Street is the most prominent street as such in the city. Pennsylvania Avenue is now largely a Government street. F Street and G Street are exclusively business streets. But Sixteenth Street is the home of churches, of institutions for the advancement of learning and science, such as the National Geographic Society, the Carnegie Institute, and Walter Reed Hospital. It is also the home of many of the most prominent embassies and legations. It is the home of several of the most prominent hotels. But most important of all, it is in direct line with the center of the White House and the center of Sixteenth Street is the Washington meridian whence longitude is reckoned.

While other avenues are named for States, except that beautiful, broad, arterial highway known as "Constitution Avenue", it would be a mark of peculiar distinction to name Sixteenth Street for "The Little Giant", as Madison was often called. No more fitting memorial could be conceived of than to honor Madison in this unique manner.

THE PLIGHT OF THE FARMER WHO FACES LOSS OF HIS HOME

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the plight of many farmers in my congressional district is a serious one, because of the foreclosures and sales of the lands which these tillers of the soil have labored to own and improve. They have worked hard to reduce their indebtedness, and this Congress should not adjourn without passage of the moratorium legislation.

Delegations of farmers have visited my office and discussed with Representative LEMKE and myself troubles which beset them. My files are filled with scores of letters which call attention to the dire need for prompt action if the farms are to be saved and those men and women who have labored long and diligently are to keep intact their cherished possessions.

In connection with this matter I include a letter received along these lines and my reply thereto.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
OFFICE OF TREASURER,
Charleston, August 16, 1935.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I have not bothered you for sometime with a letter, although have had several matters on my mind.

First, I was glad to see you meet the utility charges against you courageously and openly, and without bending from your original conviction which I regarded as right in the circumstances. Time will prove it to be so.

Second, thousands of farm families throughout the land, worthy as can be, will be greatly disappointed and forced from their properties by foreclosure if Congress does not at this session pass some sort of moratorium measure to prevent sales for a limited time until financing can be done through regular channels. As investigation will show, such farmers were on the way to making adjustments with creditors when the Frazier-Lemke Act was declared unconstitutional, although very few had ever attempted to take advantage of it; it was used more as a club or threat in these negotiations and the results were favorable.

The Farm Credit Administration through its assistant to the Governor refers to the creditors who want their full "pound of flesh", when the farmer cannot pay the "10-percent fringe", and urges the conciliation committees of the various counties to use every effort to prevent forced sales of the lands of worthy people.

If you have not done so and have the time before Congress adjourns I suggest that you make some inquiry throughout the Second District, where I also reside, to determine the situation involving many of your worthy constituents. I understand that Pendleton County, for instance, has many such cases where adjustments were under way when the Frazier-Lemke Act met its fate, and investigation also uncovers others who had not as yet entered their petitions.

I have looked into what the Federal judges of various districts have been doing with the conciliation commissioner cases coming up under section 75 of the bankruptcy law where creditors had failed to agree with the debtor of adjustments, and have yet to find one judge who has thrown any case out of court, but is merely holding it to see what Congress will do toward passing an act to take the place constitutionally of the old act. If nothing is done, there is nothing to be done by these courts but to dismiss the cases.

The farmer then will be at the mercy of this "10-percent fringe." We are hopeful of having the State administration here to appreciate the need, as have 26 other States, of a brief, simple moratorium act covering both homes and farms, but there is, of course, much doubt as to getting it done. While I am on this subject, and if available to you for distribution, I would much appreciate having copies in pamphlet form of the moratorium acts of these States—at least the principal ones, such as New York, which just lately renewed or extended its act for another year; Iowa; Minnesota, whose law was held constitutional by United States Supreme Court; Wisconsin, etc.

I have copy of the moratorium bill as presented in the Senate by Senator FRAZIER—S. 3002—as well as copy of the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee and amendment no. 985. The endeavor was made to present a bill that would meet beyond any question the constitutional test; and it would appear there is no possible doubt about it this time, but it leaves practically the whole administration to the discretion of the Federal judge of the district from which the petition originates. Let us hope there would be no prejudiced jurists at such legislation. The act, however, offers a breathing spell for the debtor and does no damage to the creditor. It is short and simple, the whole being amendments to section 75. You are doubtless better acquainted with it than I am.

The President no doubt would sign such a bill and the gap would be closed with no harm to anyone until at least the next session, when perhaps conferences within respective districts would enable you all to better determine a permanent policy.

But I do know that your interest in this thing will do you no political harm in your district. The Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill—not the above moratorium bill—is less important at this time, as I see it, than the latter, and I doubt if it could pass in present form. The urgency now is for the moratorium act—the one on the calendar or something similar. I think, too, there should be no objection if homes were included in this bill, as this would broaden the support right away; New York has such a law lately extended to July 1, 1936.

Will you not look into this matter without delay? With very best wishes, I remain

Very truly yours,

W. RALSTON SHAW, Bond Custodian.

AUGUST 19, 1935.

Mr. W. RALSTON SHAW,

Bond custodian, office of treasurer, Charleston, W. Va.

MY DEAR RALSTON: Relying to your fine communication of August 16, let me say the situation as you have outlined it is exactly the picture as I see it.

The Frazier-Lemke moratorium legislation should be passed before this session adjourns, and then the farmers of our Nation would know that we would not fail them.

I am one of the Members of Congress who has signed the petition which tried to bring the Frazier-Lemke bill out on the floor of Congress for a vote before this session adjourns. We lack four or five names for the required 218 in order to get it on the floor, because certain strong opposition exists and seems to stop it from coming out in the regular order. I have been doing everything possible in connection with this legislation and am in complete agreement with your conclusions.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

AMERICA SHOULD STAY OUT OF THE OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I herewith submit a resolution which I have offered to prohibit the allotment of funds for participation of American athletes in the Olympic Games to be held in Germany.

I also submit a speech of Hon. Jeremiah T. Mahoney, former judge of the court of general sessions, former Justice of the Supreme Court, former champion athlete and a member of the Olympic teams, now president of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States of America, and a member of the American Olympic Committee. Judge Mahoney, a very distinguished jurist, a very able lawyer, a foe of intolerance, and an exemplary leader of American youth, delivered this speech over station WABC Monday evening, August 19, 1935.

Joint resolution to prohibit the allotment of funds for participation of American athletes in the Olympic Games to be held in Germany

Whereas the German Government has studiously discriminated against Catholics, Jews, liberal Protestants, and Masons; and

Whereas such discrimination has assumed the cruel form of insults, ostracisms, pogroms, and outrages beyond description, so that male and female American participants in the Olympic Games who happen to be Catholics, Jews, Masons, or of certain Protestant denominations, risk possible attacks upon their persons and property by those poisoned by the German Government propaganda; and

Whereas Catholics, Jews, Masons, and certain Protestants, although comprising more than one-third of Germany's population, have not even a remote chance of training, competing, or qualifying for membership on the German teams; and

Whereas many American contestants of the proscribed race or religion, running or competing in a dead heat with a German, might incite the spectators to riot and rowdyism; and

Whereas the Reich has permitted and abetted unsportsmanlike indignities on many of its people, and therefore, firstly, similar indignities might be inflicted on American contestants or spectators, male and female, in the arenas or on Kurfuerstendam; and, secondly, Americans may be denied equality and fairness of treatment in the games held under the auspices of the German officials and thus encourage similar unsportsmanlike and cowardly practices; and, thirdly, American sportsmen should not defile themselves by association with adherents of a government so intolerant and so unsportsmanlike; and

Whereas the principles of true sportsmanship betoken equality and fraternity and fairness: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That in order to discourage American participation in the Olympic Games to be held in Germany, and as a protest against the unsportsmanlike attitude of the Reich, no public or semipublic funds, such as Public Works Administration moneys, including the $4,880,000,000 heretofore appropriated, shall be allotted or used to defray expenses of any American athletes to participate in the Olympic Winter Games to be held in the Garmisch, Partenkirchen, Germany, February 6 to 16, 1936, or in the games of the Eleventh Olympiad, to be held in Berlin, Germany, August 1 to 16, 1936.

SPEECH OF HON. JEREMIAH T. MAHONEY

In 1888 there was organized by a group of ambitious and patriotic young Americans the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, of which at the present time I have the honor of being president. In the group of these farsighted but noble young men who were to do such wonderful work in making America athletic, James E. Sullivan was the most outstanding figure, and up to his death he probably did more than anybody else for the physical development and athletic improvement of young America. Through the years, due to his athletic leadership, America has become more and more athletic-minded, and led by the Amateur Athletic Union, with the cooperation of all the other sports-governing bodies in America, America has become so great athletically that in all the Olympic Games already held every 4 years in the various parts of the world, America has always been supreme.

The main purpose of the Olympic Games is to create a closer, sympathetic relationship among the nations of the world, to promote brotherly love, and through athletic intercourse, to cause the nations of the world the better to understand and to know one another.

Since the first Olympiad, therefore, the original purpose of these international meetings has been maintained and incalculable benefits have resulted to the civilized world, through the institution, the continuance and the perpetuation of the Olympic Games. Although in the athletic events that take place during an Olympiad, all contests are most seriously fought, the battles for supremacy have been friendly and the contestants have grown to love and respect more and more their international rivals.

Three years ago the International Olympic Federation, acting pursuant to its rules and regulations, selected Berlin as the site for the Olympics in 1936. All of the nations interested and constituting in part the International Federation, and that includes America, were anxious to go to Berlin, because it had been the intention of the International Federation long ago to have held the Games in Germany, but such decision had been interrupted by the breaking out of the World War.

During the last several years, however, unfortunately, conditions have developed in Germany which have caused many members of the International Federation to pause and to ponder and to consider whether or not it would be better for civilization and for humanity and for international relationships to hold the games in some place other than Berlin.

The difficulty is not due to any feeling against Germany as a country, nor against the Germans as a people. We all respect Germany for what she has been and for what she is; for her accomplishments and her aspirations; and we sympathize with her because of her misfortune and her sufferings. The German people are a loving and noble race and Americans admire and love the Germans. Unfortunately, however, due to the combination of circumstances which put the Nazi Party in control, there is a class governing, ruling, and dominating Germany at the present time, that apparently does not understand the naturally altruistic rules governing clean sport, and for some time in competitive athletics and other relationships the divine teachings that you should love and aid your brother, and you should do unto others as you would wish others to do unto you, have been deliberately ignored.

Those ruling Germany to satisfy their inordinate ambition to absolutely dominate everything and everybody in Germany, and to throttle all independent thought and action, long ago started inexplicable prosecution and persecution; inflicted so much indescribable horror upon cultured and patriotic Germans, born in Germany, and in such cruel and merciless ways, that the whole civilized world stood and stands aghast.

As early as December 1933 the Amateur Athletic Union in annual convention assembled, passed a resolution to the effect that if evidence were established against the Nazi Government of discrimination against the Jews in connection with the Olympic Games, that it was the sense of the A. A. U. that America should not participate in the Olympiad to be held in 1936 if held in Berlin. This action was not precipitate, but was taken after mature deliberation, and the delegates present voted that any final action to be subsequently taken would be controlled by future events.

Nearly 2 years have passed since the adoption of this resolution, and I regret to say that irrefutable proof seems to exist that the discriminations against Jewish athletes in Germany have been continued in such a manner as to justify a definite and positive decision by America that she will not participate in the Olympic games in Berlin unless conditions are radically changed and at once.

It is a cardinal principle of true and loyal Americanism that all people should be permitted to worship God as they see fit, and that no particular race, creed, or color shall ever be a necessary qualification for public honors or for the right to represent America athletically or otherwise.

It is not denied that the Hitler regime has cruelly persecuted the Jews, banished from Germany many of the most cultured and most respectable and responsible; has placed many others in concentration camps, and has made it almost impossible for the Jews still remaining in Germany to even exist without fear that any moment they may be brutally assaulted, sent to prison, or unjustly punished in other ways.

That there has been discrimination against the Jews with respect to the competition in the Olympic Games has been proven beyond a shadow of a doubt. Attempt is made to explain this by saying that those who wish to try for the German team are eligible only when they belong to a Nazi athletic organization. In the next breath it is conceded that Jews are not eligible for Nazi athletic organizations. In other words, therefore, due to unfair rulings and discrimination, it is impossible for any Jew to qualify for the Olympic Games and no Jew has yet been given the chance to qualify. Germany, therefore, has not kept her pledges to the International Federation.

Furthermore, no Protestant or Catholic can train or compete, or prepare for the Olympic Games unless he or she is a member of a Nazi-controlled athletic organization.

In my opinion the situation complained of has been so incontrovertibly established by evidence impossible of contradiction that the burden of proof is now upon the Nazi Government to establish that there will be no further unfair discrimination.

It may possibly be that few Jews could make the German Olympic teams, but instead of permitting the natural course to decide events, the Nazi Government has stupidly directed action against German Jewish athletes in an un-American, unsportsmanlike, uncharitable, and unolympianlike manner.

Hitler apparently is determined that the Olympic Games must be held in Berlin. He does not seem to be at all apprehensive that the rising tide of indignation the civilized world over might yet culminate in refusal by many nations to participate in Berlin. The Nazi Government does not understand why and hence bitterly resents that anybody should question the conduct of the Nazi Government as being contrary to the rules of sport and the spirit of the Olympic Games. If the Nazi Government were motivated by anything except the basest kind of an insane spirit, the indignation already expressed in America should have been sufficient long ago to compel Hitler and those by whom he is surrounded to amend and change existing conditions.

But what has happened within the last 2 months? The persecution directed originally against the Jews is now directed, even if in modified ways, toward the Catholics, the Protestants, the Masons, organized labor, and those other divisions of the German people who still like to feel that although citizens of Germany, they are not serfs of any temporary ruling class. The banishment of nuns and priests and the imprisonment of many of them, the attempt by Hitler to set up a god of his own, for those of Protestant faith, and to direct the teaching and the preaching in the Catholic Church, has aroused the fighting spirit of all who believe religion should be kept out of politics, and in the hands of those who know and understand the real and only divine Master.

All of the conditions which I have attempted briefly to describe have been created by the Nazi government in defiance of the rules and laws of humanity and of the spirit of sportsmanship and fair play, and contrary to Olympian principles. I feel that the greatest aid that America can give to those countless millions suffering in Germany at the present time is to make a positive declaration to the Hitler government that America shall not participate unless the unjust and inhuman and unsportsmanlike conditions which have been created are eliminated forthwith.

I hope that the protests of fair-minded Americans who have already expressed their feelings and their indignation will not be in vain, and that some benefits will soon result therefrom to make easier the lot of the countless millions born and living in Germany, who love their country, are truly patriotic, are honestly and sincerely religious, and wish to freely worship God as their conscience dictates, but who are not in a position to aggressively fight for principle without fear of dire, unjust, and inhuman punishment.

I am talking only as an individual, and I am expressing my views only as an individual. It is true that I am a member of the American Olympic Committee, but I do not attempt in any way to speak for that committee or for the A. A. U. I am speaking and acting according to the dictates of my own conscience, but when a meeting shall be held of the executive committee or of the delegates of the Amateur Athletic Union, to discuss existing conditions and to determine whether or not the A. A. U. shall favor participation, I now declare in view of the present record that I shall emphatically vote against America's participation in any Olympiad in Berlin in 1936.

OUR INLAND WATERWAYS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, inland water carriage, which has been so extensively developed as an integral part of the transportation systems of Europe, and which was once generally used by us, is again coming into its own in our country. Modernization of river transport and interchange facilities and the improvement and standardization of river channels insures low-cost transportation which agriculture, commerce, and industry so sorely need. With the completion of the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel project, a great trunk inland waterways system has been established in this country from Pittsburgh on the east to Kansas City and beyond on the west, from the Port of New Orleans in the South up the great Mississippi dividing into two branches, one through the Illinois to Chicago and into the "American Mediterranean", the Great Lakes, and the other up the mother stream into the heart of the Midwest to the Twin Cities. No other nation or continent has been so endowed by kindly Providence with a great network of Nature's own transportation highways.

The possibilities of inland water transportation in this country are graphically indicated by its development in Europe. While methods of boat or barge operation may vary from the standardized practices developing in this country today, the great lesson we can learn from Europe is that water transportation is inherently cheap and can be coordinated with other forms as an integral part of a great national transportation system.

Therefore, let us briefly survey the use of rivers as a means of transportation in Europe. The western part of Europe has about 15,000 miles of rivers and canals, nearly all intercommunicated. In Germany alone 9,000 miles are now profitably navigated by as small as 1,000-ton barges. The sea is reached from all the streams, for example, from the Danube to the Black Sea, from the Rhine to the Mediterranean, the English Channel is reached from the Seine, the North Sea from Rotterdam. A connecting canal is now being completed whereby the Rhine will be able to make deliveries over inland waterways with every port in Germany, Poland, and the Baltic from Lubeck to Konigsberg.

It is of interest to note that the barges in Europe are very different from those we are now using. Abroad they are all made with a rudder. This, of course, means that someone must steer. This again, means living quarters. Again, the contracts they enter into provide that barges shall at all times be in charge of two or more able-bodied persons; often the owner or part owner of a barge is its commander and his wife is the second in control. This explains the necessity for living quarters on the barge. It is quite common to find them very comfortable, and that these living quarters in many cases provide a place of birth and subsequent homes for a new generation to again carry on the transportation for the family, or establish themselves in similar barges, building up a business like their parents conducted.

Rotterdam is the greatest port in Europe; the tonnage handled exceeds any other place. It is a surprise to most of us that 90 percent of this business is received and forwarded by barges. At all of the coast points north and east of Rotterdam the greater part of the tonnage handled moves by barges. Much of this movement is made under annual contracts between producers and barge owners. In no way, however, is any effort made to control the rates. The charges are, therefore, only controlled through supply and demand. Indeed, in most of the cities in western Europe there is a transportation market in which one may bargain for rates of carriage, as we do in our exchanges for wheat, flax, potatoes, and so forth. The shipping public would rebel, as would the barge owners, at any effort of a control in their rates, as is the case in our country at the present time.

The United States has been endowed by nature with wonderful possibilities for waterway development. We have a coast line upon the Atlantic of 11,674 miles, upon the Pacific of 3,765 miles, and upon the Gulf of Mexico of 6,418 miles. Our coast line in Alaska is 15,132 miles, and our shore line of the Great Lakes is more than 8,300 miles. This total coast line is 20,000 miles greater than the circumference of the earth at the Equator.

The area of the Great Lakes is 95,160 square miles, of which 60,950 square miles, or approximately 64 percent of the total surface area, is within our international boundary line. These lakes, with adequate improvement of their ports and connecting channels, are capable of the systematic movement of the largest ships afloat.

The rivers of the United States are unsurpassed by those of any other country, both for purposes of power and navigation. About 15,000 miles of these rivers have been improved to a greater or less extent and probably 10,000 miles additional may be suitable for future improvement.

Upon the Atlantic coast we have 83 improved ports, of which 7 have depth of 35 feet or more, 14 between 30 and 35, 5 between 25 and 30, and 57 with depth of less than 25 feet.

On the Pacific coast we have 26 ports, 4 of which have depth of 35 feet or more, 6 between 30 and 35 feet, 5 between 25 and 30, and 11 with depth of less than 25 feet.

On the Gulf coast we have 22 ports, 1 of which is 35 feet deep, 8 between 30 and 35 feet, 5 between 25 and 30, and 9 have less than 25 feet in depth.

In Hawaii we have four ports, all 35 feet deep and capable of accommodating the largest ships engaged in the trans-Pacific trade.

In Puerto Rico we have two recognized ports, each 30 feet deep.

In Alaska we have four ports of less than 25 feet and several improved inlets.

Upon the Great Lakes we have 72 improved ports, of which 32 have depth of 21 feet, to correspond with that of the connecting channels, the other Lake ports having depth of less than 20 feet. The connecting channels are now being dredged from 21 to 24 feet, and the major ports are also under consideration for corresponding depth.

Along the Atlantic coast an inland waterway is nearing completion from Boston Harbor to the Florida Keys. The general depth is 12 feet, and the width ranging from 90 feet on inland cuts to 300 feet in open bays. This waterway unites into one connected system all the navigable rivers flowing into the Atlantic south of the New Hampshire line.

On the Gulf shore an intracoastal waterway is nearing completion from the coast of Florida to Corpus Christi, Tex. The channel is of uniform width of 100 feet and 9 feet deep to correspond with the Mississippi, with which it connects. This intracoastal waterway unites into one continuous system all the navigable rivers flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, including the Mississippi, with all its branches. Connection of this great system with the Great Lakes at Chicago is also nearing completion.

In net result we would have a real transportation system, with about 3,000 miles of what we might call the main line, and some 6,000 miles of laterals.

There are, however, two proposals receiving current consideration which, if applied, will adversely affect the fullest use of our inland waterways. One is the proposal to regulate or control rates on commerce moving wholly by water. Experience has shown that such a proposal would only have the effect of raising the level of water rates to that of more expensive forms of transportation, thereby destroying the cheaper type of transportation. Here again we can learn from Europe. Again it is proposed to levy a transport tax upon tonnage moving over our inland waterways. It is but necessary to remark that this is based upon the claim that all public improvements must be self-liquidating; certainly this is a positive negation of the theory of popular government. The provision for public highways is one of the basic functions for which government is formed. Under the Constitution, our rivers were created Federal highways. This was the very logical outcome of the limitation inherent in the States. The navigable waters transcend the limits of State authority and jurisdiction, but the theory of self-liquidation can be as justly applied to public improvements by the States and their subdivisions. If public transportation using Federal highways must through tax liquidate these improvements, it is as logical to demand that sewage be metered, admissions charged to visitors in our parks, or tuition collected for attendance in our public schools. Under this theory, it is just as logical to erect tollgates along newly paved streets in order that the traffic using them might directly liquidate the cost of such improvements.

Time does not permit a more extensive discussion of this revolutionary proposal. Briefly, I can say, regardless of any theories advanced, that a water-transport tax is objectionable in practice, because it reverses a salutary policy of government which has worked satisfactorily throughout our national history, namely, that our navigable waters are free highways of commerce, owned by and open to all of our citizens without imposts of any kind. These water highways have repaid their cost to the citizens of our country many times over in reduced transportation charges. A water-transport tax, once established, would soon lose all semblance of a maintenance tax, and, like the tariff, would degenerate into a medium of political expediency. Thus it would increase the cost of water transportation, an undesirable result from the public standpoint at any time, and particularly at a time when all efforts are being made to raise the price of commodities without unduly embarrassing a consuming public burdened with debt.

We as a Nation are soon to have at our disposal the greatest system of internal waterways in the world. To insure their greatest usefulness, we must be careful to pursue sound policies toward water-borne transportation thereon. By so doing these modernized water highways will bring untold blessings to our great Midwest inland empire and to this Nation as a whole.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934. RESOLUTION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A BROADCASTING RESEARCH COMMISSION

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced three bills and a resolution upon which I should like to see some action in the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. These were introduced at this time so that the Members of the House could have an opportunity to look them over during the coming recess. Under permission granted to extend my remarks, I have included a copy of the bills and the resolution with a brief explanation of each.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 be and hereby is amended by striking out the whole of said section and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 315. Each licensee of a radio broadcasting station shall be required to set aside regular and definite periods at desirable times of the day and evening for uncensored discussion of a nonprofit basis of public social, political, and economic problems, and for educational purposes. When any such licensee permits any speaker of any controversial social, political, or economic issue to use its facilities during any such period, it shall afford to at least one exponent or advocate of each opposing viewpoint equivalent facilities. The licensing authority shall without delay make rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect, and in proceeding hereunder it shall appoint, and, in its discretion, act upon the recommendations of an advisory committee consisting of disinterested, representative citizens: Provided, That the licensing authority, the advisory committee, and licensees shall have no power of censorship of any kind, nor shall any license be subject to liability, civil or criminal, in any State or Federal court for material so broadcast under the provisions of this section, nor shall any license be revoked or renewal be refused because of material so broadcast."

Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 was taken over from the Radio Act of 1927. It provides that licensees shall afford equal treatment—that is, time, rates, and so forth—to legally qualified candidates for public office; that the Commission shall make rules and regulations to carry the provision into effect; that licensees shall have no power of censorship over materials so broadcast; and that no obligation is imposed on any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate.

Section 315 in its present form is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of the industry as well as the public.

Neither the old Radio Commission nor the new Communications Commission has made rules or regulations to carry the provision into effect, though network companies and a number of station owners have promulgated and generally adhered to fixed policies and rules in this regard.

Under section 315 the networks and certain stations have reaped a harvest from the major political parties in national elections and from leading factions in State and local contests. The provision has, of course, favored the party or person with the largest war chest to the prejudice of minority groups and individuals of small means.

The provision is fundamentally unsound in assuming that the public desires only the uncensored discussions on social, economic, and political issues of legally qualified candidates for office. Campaign periods are relatively short; candidates are not always the leading or most capable advocates of the parties' or candidates' views; controversial discussion is not a seasonal product demanding attention only before elections; too frequently political campaigns are used to avoid or obscure rather than meet and illuminate issues.

The censorship provision is of little value. Though it protects the candidate himself from censorship by networks and stations, and protects stations from actions for slander or libel when a candidate is on the air, it does not extend to speakers other than candidates, and stations have been found guilty of defamation for the remarks of such other speakers.

It is law at present that network and station owners, managers, program directors, and even announcers and technicians in charge of the electrical controls, must, at the peril of the station, determine at the moment of utterance whether a remark is actionable, a feat that no responsible judge or lawyer would presume to perform except in the plainest cases. This has led necessarily to direct and indirect censorship, to the vicious practice of requiring the submission of manuscripts for approval of networks and stations on an editorial basis.

At certain times networks and stations are delighted to obtain political broadcasts. They fill time and supply revenue. But at other times and in certain communities, especially with the growth of volume of profitable advertising, this is not the case. Political broadcasts are refused. It is believed that all stations as an incident of the right to operate as public callings under Federal franchises should be required to devote certain periods to political broadcasts without profit or censorship.

THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Under the proposed bill all stations would be required, subject to regulations to be made by the Commission on the advice of a disinterested advisory committee, to give over desirable periods on a regular basis and without revenue to unrestricted discussion of public issues; speakers on such issues would receive equal treatment; licensees would be relieved of all responsibility to the Commission and in the local courts for such broadcasts.

This means that the American system of private ownership, control, profit, and responsibility would be continued, except that during periods reserved for public discussion there would be no revenue to the station and no responsibility by the station to the Commission or the public.

It has been said that under the proposal the pressure for time would tend to squeeze out minority groups; that the agency charged with administration of the provision would exercise a form of censorship; that the proposal would lead to interminable arguments as to what are public, social, political, and economic problems, etc. All of these arguments and difficulties have been canvassed and considered, but no reasonable alternative has been suggested, and I am satisfied that, given a measure of intelligence and cooperation, the provision can be made to work to the satisfaction of the industry and the public. The lack of any satisfactory provision in the present act and of any constructive proposal for change have led year after year to greater and greater confusion and disillusionment as to the value and use of radio as a means of public discussion.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Communications Act of 1934 be and hereby is amended by adding thereto the following:

"SEC. 315. (a) Each licensee of a radio broadcasting station shall keep complete and accurate records open to reasonable public inspection:

"(1) Of all applications for time;

"(2) Of all rejected applications and the reasons for such rejections;

"(3) Of all additions and changes requested in arranged programs on public, social, political, and economic issues, and on educational subjects;

"(4) Of interference with and substitution of programs on public, social, political, and economic issues, and on educational subjects.

"The licensing authority shall make rules and regulations to effectuate this provision."

The proposed addition to section 315 would require stations to keep complete and accurate records open to reasonable inspection of applications for time, rejected applications, and the reasons for such rejections, additions, and changes requested in programs on public issues and on educational subjects and interference with programs on public issues and on educational subjects and interference with programs on public issues and on educational subjects.

This proposal represents a further attempt to limit censorship by network companies and station owners. It will implement the proposed amendments of sections 315 and 326.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 326 of the Communications Act of 1934 be and hereby is amended by striking out the whole said section and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 326. Nothing in this act shall be understood or construed to give the licensing authority the power of censorship over the radio communications or signals transmitted by any radio station, and no regulation or condition shall be promulgated or fixed by the licensing authority which shall interfere with the right of free speech by means of radio communication. No action, civil or criminal, shall be commenced or prosecuted against any licensee in any court, Federal or State, because of anything said or done in the course of any broadcast on any public, social, political, or economic issue: Provided, That this provision shall not be understood or construed to exempt any licensee from liability for any defamatory, profane, indecent, or obscene language or action broadcast by any officer, employee, agent, or representative of such licensee."

To implement the proposed revision of section 315 and to clarify the powers of the Communications Commission under the general standard of public interest, convenience, and necessity, I suggest the addition of a sentence to section 326 which will expressly protect station owners (licensees) against actions, civil or criminal, in the State and Federal courts for broadcasts on public questions.

I do not recommend any change in the present language of section 326. I do recommend additional language which will free licensees from responsibility to the Commission or in the courts for broadcasts on public questions, except where licensees are responsible for defamatory or improper remarks.

Under present conditions there is a very real danger that the licensee will be sued for a defamatory utterance that goes out from its transmitter. There is also a very real danger that the Communications Commission (like the old Radio Commission) will consider defamatory or improper utterances for which the licensee is not responsible in acting on applications for renewal of license and other privileges. Censorship has flourished under fear of these dangers, and in many, many cases the act of censorship has been performed by persons who have no qualification whatever to determine the very delicate question of what is and is not actionable or in bad taste.

The suggested addition to section 326 will put an end to the danger of punitive action against the networks and stations and will thus obviate the necessity for editorial treatment of public discussion. It will not, of course, free the speaker himself from responsibility in the courts and elsewhere for his remarks or his conduct on the air.

Whereas the facilities available for radiobroadcasting are severely limited; and

Whereas such facilities should be so administered as to promote the maximum beneficial use thereof in the interest of the people of the United States; and

Whereas the licensing authority established by the Congress has attempted to accommodate approximately 600 radiobroadcasting stations on the 90 frequencies or channels available for assignment in the United States; and

Whereas the licensing authority has assigned most of the channels reserved by it for high power, full-time, interference-free operations to stations owned and controlled by or affiliated with the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System; and

Whereas the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System are engaged on a national scale in the business of supplying programs to and selling time to advertisers on broadcasting stations owned or controlled by or affiliated by contract with them, and in this connection employ the facilities of a number of medium-power, full-time, regional stations as well as the high-power, clear-channel stations mentioned above; and

Whereas the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System are private enterprises engaged in the pursuit of private gain, and in order profitably to supply high-quality programs on a national-network basis they have induced a large number of advertisers to sponsor programs to supply to and broadcast by their affiliated stations, in consequence of which the people of the United States receive through the medium of radiobroadcasting a large amount of advertising matter; and

Whereas the operations of the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System are so extensive that many listeners are able at night to receive the same program at the same time from two or more stations; and

Whereas it has been the general policy and practice of the licensing authority to consolidate and strengthen the position and influence of said network companies; and

Whereas a large number of stations are licensed to operate with lower power on relatively undesirable channels designated by the licensing authority as local channels and approximately 300 stations are permitted to operate only until sunset, during the daytime, or during specified hours, and

Whereas in the case of stations not operated on a full-time, interference-free basis the policies, assignments, and regulations of the licensing authority promote waste of broadcasting facilities, substantial and continuing losses to station owners as well as inferior and unsatisfactory program service; and

Whereas it is claimed that the right of freedom of speech has been seriously curtailed by the licensing authority, the network companies, and individual station owners; and

Whereas the soundness of the system under which the facilities of immediate mass communication have been turned over to private agencies without choice to them or to the public and without restrictions and supervision ordinarily imposed on public callings, has been widely questioned and many proposals for changes in the system have been advanced; and

Whereas the piecemeal consideration and revision of the broadcasting system established in the United States would be wasteful, dilatory, and disappointing; and

Whereas the nature of the subject is such as to require careful and comprehensive study by a disinterested, expert, nonpartisan body responsible to the President of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established and created a commission of members to be known as the "Broadcasting Research Commission", hereinafter called the commission, to be appointed by the President of the United States. The chairman of the commission shall be compensated at the rate of $15,000 per year, payable monthly, and shall devote the major part of his time to the business of the commission.

SEC. 2. The commission is authorized and directed to make a careful and comprehensive investigation of radiobroadcasting as conducted in the United States and abroad to the end that the President may have complete and authoritative body of information as the basis for reports and recommendations to the Congress with respect to legislation and administrative changes designed to promote the maximum beneficial use of the facilities available for radiobroadcasting in the interest of the people of the United States.

Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the commission is authorized and directed to study and report on the following matters:

(a) All known instances of interference with and interruption and substitution of programs involving public, social, political, or economic issues, and the reasons therefor;

(b) The economic structure, operating expense, earnings, profits, and cooperate affiliations of all broadcasting stations;

(c) The expediency of reducing the number of broadcasting stations;

(d) The expediency of assigning to broadcasting stations frequencies below the present broadcast band;

(e) The reasonableness of rates and fees charged by broadcasting stations and the feasibility of public relations thereof;

(f) The scientific and economic status of television and facsimile transmission and the ownership and control of patents pertinent thereto; and

(g) The feasibility of a Government-owned and/or controlled broadcast network.

SEC. 3. The commission shall submit its final report to the President of the United States within 2 years from the date of the adoption of this resolution. The report shall contain a complete and accurate statement of the findings and conclusions of the commission together with its recommendations and legislation and administrative changes designed to promote the maximum beneficial use of the radiobroadcasting facilities. The commission may, from time to time, and at the request of the President of the United States it shall submit interim reports. Upon receipt of the final report of the commission the President shall promptly transmit the same to the Congress, together with a statement of his conclusions with respect thereto and his recommendations for legislation designed to effect the purposes of this resolution.

SEC. 4. The commission is authorized to sit and act at such times and places, to hold hearings, to employ such experts and counsel and such clerical, stenographic and other assistance, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such records, papers, and documents, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make expenditures as it deems necessary. Oaths and affirmations may be administered by any member of the commission or by any examiner authorized by it. At the direction of the commission any member or examiner may hold hearings, take and report testimony, and transmit the same together with his findings to the Commission.

SEC. 5. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the commission and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes shall be applicable to any person summoned as a witness under the authority of this resolution in the same manner as such provisions are applicable to any person summoned as a witness in the case of any inquiry before a committee of the House.

SEC. 6. The final report of the commission, the transcript of all testimony taken before it, and studies made by or for it shall be printed and opened to public inspection.

SEC. 7. The expenses of the commission, including the traveling expenses of the members, not to exceed 15 cents per mile, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved and signed by the chairman of the commission.

Nothing can be added to the information and statement of purposes contained in the proposed resolution. It may be necessary, however, to justify the appointment of a further commission.

It is believed that the Communication Commission does not desire and is in no position and is not qualified to undertake the investigation specified in the resolution. The members of that Commission are engaged in the performance of administrative and other duties in connection with the regulation of electrical communications as a whole which require full-time attention and it would be unreasonable to expect them to take the time necessary for the intensive investigation described in the proposed resolution.

The Commission is separated into divisions, but the chairman serves as a member of each division and some or all of the other members serve on two divisions. These divisions are concerned with the regulation of interstate and foreign communication by means of telephony and wire and radio telegraphy, not to mention amateur and aviation services and other branches of the communications business and art.

It should be noted that the proposed broadcasting research commission would be a temporary body, appointed by and responsible to the president, the chairman, who would, presumably, give full-time attention to the work. The object of proposing a commission of this type is to make available for the investigation the services of persons who could and would not ordinarily accept appointment on a Federal commission. It is believed that distinguished and disinterested citizens would be attracted by the opportunity of taking part in a nonpartisan attempt to formulate a sound and permanent policy regarding broadcasting.

In the fall of 1934 the Communications Commission held hearings in Washington on a proposal to set aside a fixed percentage of facilities for educational programs and stations. At these hearings the industry, represented by network companies and the National Association of Broadcasters, presented a consolidated and effective case against the specific proposal before the Commission and against any departure from the status quo, while the outside groups presented half-baked irreconcilable proposals that had no effect whatever on the Commission, and the Commission decided to recommend disapproval of the proposal. The Commission has now called a conference on May 15 for the purpose of considering means of further cooperation between educational interests and the industry, and it is expected that the industry will again appear with a well-organized case to oppose the proposals of the so-called "pressure groups." It is believed that this method of meeting the claims and proposals of persons and groups not associated with the industry and not satisfied with broadcasting will continue to produce confusion and disappointment, that piecemeal revision of the act or regulations will prove to be unsatisfactory.

It is for these reasons that we advocate the appointment of the broadcasting research commission to investigate the industry and the proposals of outside groups and to lay down a policy and program for the future.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF GEN. CASIMIR PULASKI

Mr. TURPIN. Mr. Speaker, in the Southland, in the city of Savannah, in Monterey Square, rises majestically a marble shaft. Surmounting the shaft is a statue of liberty displaying our national colors, erected by an appreciative community to mark the final heroism of one who was not of our blood and not of our nationality; erected to the memory of one who, having felt the crushing despotism of czars and rulers, had cast his lot and pledged his life to a new freedom and a new government of, by, and for the people.

Likewise, in our National Capital, on historic Pennsylvania Avenue, where the staccato tread of tens of thousands of marching troops have reechoed as they have passed in review before our Presidents; have marched to war to preserve this Nation, its principles, its traditions; that such a government shall not perish from the earth, a grateful Republic has erected an equestrian statue in honor to and in sacred memory of the "father of American Cavalry." On shaft and statue is emblazoned the name of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

Johnson Square, Savannah, also pays its tribute with a Doric obelisk, jointly paying tribute to Gen. Nathanael Greene and Count Casimir Pulaski. Let us not be unmindful of the silent message of friendship, comradeship, and the brotherhood of men herein conveyed during the formative years of our national life. Greene, an American, a son of Rhode Island; Pulaski, a native of Poland; the cornerstone laid in 1825 by our revered French champion and friend, the great Lafayette.

Throughout our Nation, avenues and parks, societies and lodges attest his name in conveying to oncoming generations our affection for his memory and our gratitude for his supreme devotion to a cause he cherished because of the humane and Christian doctrines involved.

Casimir Pulaski was born in Podolia, March 4, 1748, the eldest son of Count Joseph Pulaski of the Polish nobility. The father was the chief magistrate of Warech and was noted for his knowledge of jurisprudence. Casimir Pulaski was also educated for the bar. Pulaski became interested in military affairs while yet a beardless lad.

He joined his father and brothers in the struggle against King Augustus, and following the death of his father in prison, one of his brothers in action, and still a third taken captive, he became the commander of the insurgent army. He was outlawed and sought refuge in various countries, finally arriving in France.

It was there, in Paris, that he met Benjamin Franklin. Let us leave to the imagination the stories of the new world and of the new nation Franklin imparted to Pulaski.

The year 1777 witnessed the arrival of Count Pulaski at Philadelphia, where he joined the American Army as a volunteer.

Never was there a warrior—

States the historical Ruhlieri—who possessed greater dexterity in every kind of service. Endowed by a peculiar gift of nature, strengthened by exercise, he always was the first to charge in person, with an intrepidity which inspired his followers to imitate his example.

Count Pulaski and Lafayette both struck their first blows for American independence at Brandywine—Pulaski, a volunteer and without command. Washington's army was repulsed, and a large part of the army was in danger of being captured. It was toward the close of the action that Pulaski requested command of Washington's bodyguard of 30 horse, which was granted. He added to this small detachment various scattered troops and rode into the face of the enemy.

So thoroughly did Pulaski sustain his reputation for conduct, courage, and leadership that 4 days later Congress appointed him the first general of American Cavalry.

Historian Ramsey says:

At Brandywine, Pulaski was a thunderbolt of war, and always sought the post of danger as the post of honor.

From the beginning of Pulaski's contact with the American forces until his death, his services and his generalship were of inestimable value to Washington and his Army.

In the service of Pulaski to this Nation, history but repeated itself, and like our own Lincoln, Wilson, and other lives that will not die, Pulaski and his services were not fully appreciated.

In his address to Congress Pulaski states:

I have expended $16,000, at least, of my own.

And again in his memorable letter to Congress reproaching Congress for its lack of appreciation of his services and efforts, he says:

You must be sensible also that I did not come to America destitute in resources, to be a burden to you; that I have letters of credit from Mr. Norris, and that I was known by almost every foreigner of character.

It is estimated that Pulaski advanced $50,000 of his own money in forming and equipping his legion—a considerable sum to many of us today, a rather enormous sum at that time.

The sincerity of great men may be questioned; it has been questioned and will continue to be questioned. But when a man gives his fortune and offers his life, and at the early age of 31 gives that life for a cause that is not his, for a people that is not his, but solely for a principle that appeals to him, such devotion to duty, such a response to conviction, and such courage stand with but few parallels.

But let us hasten on, through the Battle of Warren Tavern, where Pulaski saved Washington's army from a surprise attack when, while reconnoitering, his cavalry came upon the whole British Army and harassed the enemy until runners could reach Washington with the information. Let us pass the splendid services rendered at the Battles of Germantown, Egg Harbor, and Haddonfield—the latter place, where Pulaski, here, there, and everywhere at the front, had his own horse shot from under him; yet Pulaski, personally, captured seven prisoners and was highly commended for his fearless bravery in the report of General Wayne.

His death, for America, can be told in no finer language than that of a fellow officer serving with Pulaski, Major Rogowski, also a son of Poland. He states in his description of the battle:

For half an hour the guns roared and blood flowed abundantly. * * * Imploring the help of the Almighty, Pulaski shouted to his men "Forward!" and we, 200 strong, rode at full speed after him—the earth resounding under the hoofs of our chargers. For the first two moments all went well. We sped like knights into the peril. Just, however, as we passed the gap between the two batteries, a cross fire, like a pouring shower, confused our ranks. I looked around. Oh, sad moment, ever to be remembered. Pulaski lies prostrate on the ground.

Pulaski was placed on the brig Wasp, where skilled French surgeons vainly endeavored to remove the bullet and save his life. Gangrene had set in, and as the ship pulled out of the harbor for Charleston, Pulaski expired. His body was lowered into a watery grave on the 11th day of October 1779 at the age of 31 years, and like unto Moses, no one to this day knows the exact location of his burial.

The Wasp pulled into the harbor of Charleston with her flag at half-mast. The Governor, the council of the State, and the citizens united to pay tribute to their youthful defender, who shortly before his bravery and advice had saved Charleston from an ignominious surrender. Resolutions were passed, public ceremonies held, and a day designated for the holding of funeral obsequies. Three French and three American officers carried his bier followed by the horse that Pulaski rode with all the trappings, armor, and dress that he wore. The procession was imposing and a chaplain of the Army delivered a eulogy for the departed officer.

The Honorable A. L. Brick, who appeared before the committee of Congress urging the erection of a monument to Pulaski in Washington, said:

Pulaski died as he had lived, a noble and undaunted warrior, fighting the battles of liberty and of the Republic, he sacrificed himself, all the years of his young life, his fortune, his ancestral dignity, his lofty spirit, his splendid genius, and all his earthly hopes for liberty, justice, and humanity. For these things he gave all he had—his martyred life.

In the American Military Biography the author says:

Perhaps a braver man than Pulaski never drew a sword.

And in describing his death at Savannah:

Thus fell, in a most bold and daring achievement, the distinguished Polish patriot and hero, in the cause of American liberty. His memory is entitled to our veneration, as his life forms an item in the price of our independence.

Let us offer no apologies as we today, with heads bowed in respect, pay loving homage and tender tribute to Pulaski and other heroes of foreign birth who so sincerely, so unselfishly, so splendidly served in the making of our beloved land.

TAX REFUNDING PLAN

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in announcing that I have this day received from Mr. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a communication concerning my bill, H. R. 8279, which hereinafter appears.

The purpose of my bill is to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to extend loans to specially organized corporations financing property owners in the payment of their real-estate taxes, under a tax-funding plan originated and formulated by Mr. B. G. Orlove, Jr., of 270 Broadway, New York City. It has received endorsements of authorities in municipal finance, taxation, and banking.

The aim of my bill is to facilitate the extension of loans for real-estate tax payments at low rates of interest and thus save the taxpayers heavy penalties charged for delinquencies.

This bill was reported favorably and unanimously by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House on June 13, 1935. It passed the House August 15, 1935.

At the hearing held on my bill before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, on August 21, 1935, Mr. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the R. F. C., stated that such tax-funding companies will be made eligible to borrow money from the R. F. C. Mortgage Corporation. This makes unnecessary, at the present session of Congress, any further congressional action on my bill.

At this point, I wish to express my sincere appreciation to Mr. Jones, Mr. James B. Alley, general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Mr. Earl B. Schwultz, president of the R. F. C. Mortgage Corporation, for the kind cooperation they extended to me in this matter.

I now offer for insertion in the RECORD Mr. Jones' letter and a copy of my bill, H. R. 8279.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, August 23, 1935.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CELLER: Agreeable to my statement to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on August 21, 1935, at which time that committee had before it your bill, H. R. 8279, the purpose of which was to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to institutions organized for the principal purpose of lending money to taxpayers, for the payment of real-estate taxes, water rates, special assessments, or special taxes on real estate, against the security of liens originating from such real-estate taxes, water rates, special assessments or special taxes, or any interest therein, and held by the taxing authority."

Beg to advise that such institutions are eligible to borrow from the R. F. C. Mortgage Co. upon the security of these tax liens; and applications will be considered, to the extent that we have funds available for making such loans, where the borrowing institutions agree to comply with the terms of your proposed bill.

Namely, to charge the taxpayer not over 4 percent per annum interest, and not exceeding a single charge of 2 percent on the amount of the loan as compensation and profit for making and servicing the loan; and provided that if the State law under which the institution operates permits the institution to increase the interest rate on such tax loans in cases of default, the institution shall not increase its rate higher than 6 percent per annum after the default.

You stated at this hearing that banks in New York had said they would lend these institutions, for this purpose, 10 or 15 times as much as the R. F. C. would lend them, if the R. F. C. were given authority to make such loans.

R. F. C. Mortgage Co.'s interest rate will be 4 percent, and it will make such loans only where the taxpayer is not only willing but able to pay his taxes in installments over a fairly short period.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE H. JONES, Chairman.

H. R. 8279

A bill to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to institutions organized for the purpose of making loans for the payment of taxes on real estate, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 5e thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5f. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in addition to the foregoing powers, is authorized and empowered to make loans to any institution organized for the principal purpose of lending money to taxpayers, for the payment of real-estate taxes, water rates, special assessments or special taxes on real estate, against the security of liens originating from such real-estate taxes, water rates, special assessments or special taxes, or any interest therein, and held by the taxing authority: Provided further, That such institution extends such loans at interest rates not exceeding 4 percent per annum plus a single service charge not exceeding 2 percent of the amount of the loan: And provided further, That if the State law under which the institution operates permits the institution to increase the interest rate in cases of default, such institutions shall not increase the interest rate to exceed 6 percent per annum in such cases."

THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES WILL BE PAID IN JANUARY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a radio address which I delivered Thursday evening, August 22, 1935, over N. B. C. hook-up, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, the thinking people of this country are greatly indebted to the radio. No means of communication has contributed more to the dissemination of knowledge and correct information than the radio has contributed. The National Broadcasting Co. is making every effort to see that each side of a public question of sufficient public interest is given time over the air. This is fair and is appreciated. I am personally indebted to the National Broadcasting Co. for the time used in this broadcast.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Congress will meet again January 3, 1936. Although the people will receive the news through the newspapers, over the radio, and on the screen and movietone, I also desire to invite their attention to the fact that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is published daily by Congress, is one of the most unique publications in America. It has no editor; no one receives a penny for selling the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; no advertisers to be pleased. It is published at cost by the Government Printing Office and it may be purchased by any person in America for $1.50 a month, which is actual cost. Each Member of the Senate may send out 88 copies free and each House Member 60 copies free. The Senate has passed a bill greatly increasing this free quota.

If you are unable to obtain the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by reason of the expiration of your Senator's or Representative's quota, I believe you will find the money to be well spent, if you are interested in public questions, if you will subscribe directly and pay the $1.50 a month. It is an excellent means of obtaining both sides of every important question discussed by Members of Congress, who have given the question careful and thorough consideration, and all the proceedings of Congress.

SUCCESS IN JANUARY

I predict that within 2 weeks after Congress meets on January 3, 1936, next, the House of Representatives will pass the bill, H. R. 1, the Patman bill, to pay three and a half million World War veterans the remainder due on their adjusted-service certificates. Within 30 days after January 3 I believe the Senate will pass a similar measure, and it is my opinion further that the veterans will get their money in a short time thereafter.

Our bill, H. R. 1, the Patman bill, is now pending before the House. We now have enough signatures—218—to a petition to force consideration of the bill within 10 days after Congress meets in January. These signatures were finished today, and the bill will be called up the 13th day of January 1936 in the House of Representatives. Do not be afraid of the 13th. The first time the bill passed the House it was called up June 13, 1932.

The administration leaders in the Senate have agreed to take the bill up and pass on it during the month of January, thereby admitting the great importance of this legislation.

During this session of Congress we only lacked 7 votes out of 531 Members of the House and Senate of receiving two-thirds of the votes in each House for our bill.

TIME TO APPLY EXTENDED

Congress has just passed a law allowing those who have not applied for these certificates until January 2, 1940, to do so.

NO BONUS

An adjusted-service certificate, although often referred to as a "bonus certificate", does not represent a bonus. The word "bonus" is a misnomer, does not appear in the law, was coined by the enemies of the legislation, and should never be used. Three and one-half million veterans of the World War hold adjusted-service certificates ranging in value from $126 to $1,590 each, the average about $1,000. The question of pay that men should receive when they entered the service during the war was not settled when the Selective Service Act was passed. And when the war was over Congress decided to adjust the pay of those who served, in view of the fact that workers in civilian life during the war received from $8 to $20 a day.

Congress decided to give the veterans $1 a day extra for each day they served in the United States and $1.25 a day extra for each day they served overseas. Adding this adjustment to what they actually received during their service, the amount is about one-fourth or one-fifth of what many of them were receiving in the shipyards and munitions factories when they entered the service. Although the amount is small, the veterans are not asking that the adjustment be changed. Instead of giving them the amount confessed was due, false and misleading statements as to the condition of the Treasury, gag-rule tactics, and star-chamber proceedings caused the veterans to be compelled to accept an I O U or a post-dated check payable in 1945, or 27 years after they rendered the service.

CERTIFICATES PAST DUE

Many people cannot understand why we claim it is due now. The reason is that interest on the amount for 7 years was entirely overlooked. In my presence the Secretary of the Treasury admitted that he completely ignored interest for 7 years in arriving at the amount due the veterans.

Therefore, if Congress will now revise the contracts so as to give the veterans the amount acknowledged to be due as of the time they rendered the service, instead of 7 years later, and makes a fair adjustment of interest, each veteran who holds a certificate was entitled to an amount equal to the full face or maturity value of it October 1, 1931.

INTEREST CONSUMES HALF OF CERTIFICATES

Commencing January 1, 1927, the holders of these certificates were allowed to borrow a small amount each year. They paid 6, 7, and 8 percent interest, compounded annually, for their own money, although the rate has since been reduced. The arrangement is such that by 1945 the veteran who has borrowed 50 percent of his certificate—and 85 percent of them have—will receive practicaly nothing, since compound interest paid to the banks and to the Government will consume the remaining half of his certificate.

If the certificates are dated back and a fair adjustment of interest made, the veteran who has borrowed 50 percent has received what is equivalent to the accumulated interest, the principal remains intact.

DEDUCTIONS GOT THE $30 A MONTH

Do not get the impression that the private soldier actually received $30 a month, as reported. Secretary of War Baker testified in 1918 that it was costing the Government $152 a year to furnish food and clothing for each soldier, or less than 50 cents a day. Therefore, the average soldier received the equivalent of $1.50 a day for his services. The average allotment of his pay for his dependents, if he had dependents, was about $15 a month. He was required to carry war-risk insurance, which cost him on an average of $6.60 a month, the Government thereby requiring him to make his monthly contribution for the protection of the loved ones of his dead buddies. Four million veterans paid Uncle Sam approximately $400,000,000 in this way, for which they did not receive one penny in return.

Uncle Sam paid for the insurance on his ships but not on his men. The soldier was required to pay for altering and mending his clothing and shoes, his barber bills, laundry bills, and bills at canteens for tobacco and incidentals. If he had anything left, he subscribed for a Liberty bond on the installment plan, or he was called a "slacker."

OTHERS RECEIVED ADJUSTED PAY

When the war was over those who dealt with property rights had their pay adjusted by the Congress of the United States. Seven thousand World War "cost-plus" contractors—many of them had engaged in a war for profit—had their pay adjusted. Included in this group were the Du Ponts, who recently admitted that they made a profit of a quarter of a billion dollars out of the war after paying all expenses and taxes on what they billed to South American countries as sporting goods. The railroad owners and war contractors received an adjustment of pay in cash and other benefits amounting to billions of dollars. They asked the Government for a revision of their contracts and were not called unpatriotic for doing it, and they were paid in cash.

Five hundred thousand Federal employees of the Government, who received up to $2,500 a year during the war, received an adjustment of pay amounting to $1,440 each—they asked for a revision of their contracts, and they were paid in cash $240 a year for 6 years.

There is no reason why the Government should issue an interest-bearing bond that is tax exempt, sell the bond to a Federal Reserve bank and then permit the Federal Reserve bank to return the same bond to the same Government it purchased it from and receive another obligation, new money in return for it. The question is, Why issue the tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds at all? Why not issue the money directly in the first instance? I advise you not to bring that question up among certain bankers as they will claim that you are unorthodox, theoretical, wild eyed, and dangerous. They cannot explain to you why, except to say that money is quite a mystery and only the bankers understand it. However, the people of this country are getting wise to that racket, and I predict that it is not going to last very long. To my mind, it is certainly idiotic and imbecile for the Government to pay a billion dollars a year interest for the use of its own credit—a pure bonus to bankers and bondholders.

Foreign countries asked for a revision of their contracts and had their debts adjusted, which resulted in Congress giving to them as an outright gift the huge sum of $10,000,000,000. Many of these countries used our money to pay their own soldiers adjusted pay and bonuses up to the enormous sum of $7,290 each.

HOW WILL THE MONEY BE PAID?

It will cost the Government about two and a quarter billion dollars to pay the remainder due on the adjusted-service certificates held by three and a half million World War veterans. The veterans, however, will receive about $2,000,000,000 of this amount. There is in circulation today about four and a half billion dollars in paper currency. Practically all of it is Federal Reserve notes. A Federal Reserve bank is not owned by the Government. It is owned by private bankers. Such a bank has the right and power under the present law to deposit a Government obligation payable in 1945 and receive new money in return for it, and from now until 1945 collect interest annually on the obligation of the Government deposited to secure the issuance of the money. This sounds like an idiotic system, and it is.

FAIR FOR VETERANS IF FAIR FOR BANKS

Our bill, H. R. 1, provides that a veteran who has a Government obligation payable in 1945 may deposit his obligation with the Government and receive new money in return for it in identically the same way and manner that the Federal Reserve banks receive new money in return for Government obligations. However, the veterans will not receive an extra bonus each year in the form of interest, as the banks do on the deposited bonds until 1945. The money issued to the banks under such a plan is sound money. The money issued to the veterans will be the same kind of money. If it is fair for the banks, it is fair for the veterans. The Government's credit is being used in either case.

BIG BANKS WANT THEIR RAKE-OFF

The $2,000,000,000 we propose to issue will remain outstanding, and while it is in circulation no one will be paying interest on it. While the Federal Reserve money is outstanding, someone is paying interest on it all the time. Our bill has a push-and-pull provision providing that as the money is paid out to the veterans the Secretary of the Treasury may pull back and retire Federal Reserve notes. The Federal Reserve banks do not like this. It denies them an annual bonus equal to the interest on $2,000,000,000. It is a pure graft, a rake-off, and Congress is entitled to be criticized for permitting it to be done. This provision will absolutely prevent any possibility of undue expansion of the currency. Therefore the bill is not an inflationary bill. It is merely allowing $2,000,000,000 of our circulating medium to be paid into circulation and save the people interest on $2,000,000,000 of our circulating medium and denying these banks their annual grab on this amount.

ADEQUATE METALLIC RESERVE

Under the present law the title to all gold in the Treasury is in the Government of the United States. It belongs to the Government and to the people. The amount is nine and a quarter billion dollars. If we pay the veterans $2,000,000,000 and the Secretary of the Treasury should decide not to retire a dollar of the Federal Reserve notes, we will then have 125 percent gold reserve behind all outstanding money. Can anyone say that money issued with 125 percent gold reserve is fiat money or unsound money? If you advocate it, however, you will be considered very dangerous, not because it is an unsound policy that you are advocating but because it is denying a few bankers special privileges that net them hundreds of millions of dollars a year. The Government now has $18 in gold and $2 in silver to pay every outstanding $10 bill.

CONVERT FROZEN ASSET INTO MONEY

We are asking that one form of Government obligation which the veteran holds be converted into another form of Government obligation—new money. In other words, a frozen asset in the hands of the veteran will be transformed into a negotiable circulating Government obligation, which will be money. No new debt will be created and such payment will not cause a bond issue or an increase of taxes.

CURRENCY NO MORE INFLATIONARY THAN BONDS

The question of whether or not Congress should have ever confessed this debt to the veterans is not material now, as that question was passed upon by Congress in 1924. Remember this, that currency is no more inflationary than bonds and that the idle gold in the Treasury should be used to save the people interest on bonds.

WHO WILL PAY ENORMOUS GOVERNMENT DEBT?

The wealthy people of this country are escaping taxation through the ownership of tax-exempt securities. Who is going to pay the enormous Government debt of $30,000,000,000? The ones who own these Government securities will during the next 30 years collect $30,000,000,000 in interest and pay no taxes and we will still owe the principal sum of $30,000,000,000. Over a period of 60 years these bloodsuckers will have collected $130,000,000,000 on this $30,000,000,000 debt, will have paid no taxes, and the people will still owe the principal sum. If these statements, which can be verified, are not sufficient to awake the American people, I am at a loss to know what will cause them to stop, look, and listen. The people who own will escape taxes. The people who produce the Nation's wealth will be compelled to pay taxes on what they owe and what they consume in order to pay this debt if a change of policy is not made.

1924 ACT SHOULD BE REVISED

The act passed by Congress in 1924, which permitted the veterans to receive the adjusted-service certificates, should be corrected now because it did not carry out the intent of Congress. It provided for the payment of a confessed debt 27 years after the service was rendered. It permitted the veterans to receive 4 percent interest with a requirement that they would have to pay 6, 7, and 8 percent interest when they obtained loans on their certificates, and it deprived the veterans of almost 7 years' interest from the time they rendered the service until 1925, the date of the certificates. The time to make this correction is now. No person who wants to be fair with the veterans and give them the same rights and benefits and no more, as the Government gives to all others under similar circumstances will contend that this adjustment should not be made.

WILL DISTRIBUTE PURCHASING POWER

In conclusion, I believe that any fair-minded listener will agree, first, that although the adjusted-service certificates are payable in 1945, each veteran who holds one is now entitled to an amount equal to the face value of that certificate; second, that the amount due can be paid with sound currency; third, that such payment will not increase taxes or create an additional debt; fourth, that such payment will be a godsend to this country, because it will quickly distribute purchasing power evenly and uniformly into every nook and corner of this Nation; and fifth, that it is in the interest of the nonveteran as well as the veteran that this payment be made now.

ADVOCATES MUST BE ON ALERT

Let me again remind those who are interested in this proposal to be on the alert and keep the question properly before the country. We are sure to win in January if we are not too certain of success and thereby fail to keep this important question properly before the country. We have the right side, the side of justice. We are supported in our arguments by logic and reason, so let us not weaken in our efforts or fail to do anything for the cause that can be done until the wrong is righted by the payment of these certificates 100 cents on the dollar.

CURRENCY INSTEAD OF BONDS—PRIVATE BANKERS ISSUE BLANKET MORTGAGES AGAINST PROPERTY OF PEOPLE FOR OWN BENEFIT AND CHARGE GOVERNMENT FOR USE OF ITS OWN CREDIT—NO MORE TAX-EXEMPT INTEREST-BEARING SECURITIES SHOULD BE ISSUED—WILL SPECIAL-PRIVILEGED FEW INVEIGLE THIS COUNTRY INTO WAR TO DISTRACT ATTENTION FROM MONETARY REFORMS?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest problems we have in this country today is the evasion of taxes through the ownership of tax-exempt securities. Today there are in existence in this country, tax-exempt securities amounting to $50,500,000,000. Approximately $30,000,000,000 of these securities have been issued by the Federal Government and the remainder by the States, counties, cities, and political subdivisions. The holders of these securities not only do not pay a tax on their capital investment, they do not pay a tax on the income from their investments in these tax-exempt securities.

THE CLASS OWNING WEALTH ESCAPES TAXATION; OTHER PEOPLE PAY TAXES ON WHAT THEY OWN AND CONSUME

The reason a taxation bill cannot reach the really wealthy people of this country today, those who are the most able to pay, those who have the ability to pay, those who could pay with the least inconvenience and without depriving themselves and their families of a single comfort or luxury of life, have their money invested in these securities from which they collect interest annually and pay no tax whatsoever. It has almost reached the point that we have two classes in this country:

First. The class that owns the wealth and pays no taxes toward the support of the Federal, State, county, or city governments, and gets the protection of our laws, the use of the great improvements that have been made through the issuance of tax-exempt securities, the use of the educational institutions of our country, and all other rights and privileges that our country affords without paying any tax whatsoever on the tax-exempt securities that they hold.

Second. The other class is composed of those who do not own much of the country's wealth. In this class you will find those, however, who produce the country's wealth. They build the country in time of peace and save the country in time of war. They pay taxes on what they owe, not upon what they own, either through ad valorem taxes on the real and personal property they owe for or through different forms of sales taxes and other special taxes.

The time is rapidly approaching when we cannot continue to permit the wealthy of this country to escape taxation like they are without levying a sales tax or a similar form of obnoxious taxes to take the place of revenue that should be paid by those who have the ability to pay and do not pay.

THE REASONS FOR PREVENTING ISSUANCE OF MORE TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

The former Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon, and those who shared his views, advocate a constitutional amendment to prevent the issuance of more tax-exempt interest-bearing securities for one reason, and I advocate it for an entirely different reason. The reason I advocate preventing the issuance of more tax-exempt securities is because I think it will force the issuance of Government currency and Government credit that will be noninterest-bearing. In other words, I think it will force the issuance of currency instead of bonds. If I did not think so, I would be opposed to preventing their further issuance.

Others, however, including the Mellonites, probably advocate the prevention of the further issuance of these securities for the following reasons:

First. It would greatly increase and probably double the value of all outstanding tax-exempt securities at this time.

Many of these securities are payable 20 years in the future. There is no way to compel their retirement until called for. The holders are amply protected by decisions of the Supreme Court, and they are in a storm cellar with all modern conveniences.

Second. If these securities were taxed, they would be taxed where the owner resides. The owners of most of these securities reside in New York City, Boston, Chicago, and a few other places. If a country school district should issue bonds to build a schoolhouse and they were not tax exempt, they would probably have to pay an interest rate about 2 percent higher than they would on a tax-exempt bond. This 2 percent would be paid by the holder of the bond in New York City as taxes to the city, county, and State governments. The large cities where the holders of these securities reside, and even the States in which these cities are located, would probably be able to collect plenty of revenue from the tax on these securities to support their different governments and repeal their other forms of taxation on their local citizens. This would be a happy situation for a few cities in this country and the States in which they are located, but the situation would not be desirable from the standpoint of the other sections of the country.

MORE NONTAXABLE BONDS ISSUED DAILY

The Government is issuing more tax-exempt securities every day. The States, counties, and cities are issuing more tax-exempt securities every day. Wealth is rapidly leaving the channels of production and trade where it pays its fair share of the burdens of the Government, and is going into these tax-exempt interest-bearing securities. This situation cannot continue indefinitely and our country survive. It is certainly wrong for the people who own the wealth to escape taxes and compel those who produce the wealth to pay taxes on what they owe and what they consume in order to support our Governments.

PEOPLE SAVED $11,000,000,000 INTEREST ON SO-CALLED "GREENBACKS"

I read the hearings on the Goldsborough bill, and I noticed a statement put in there by Mr. Robert Harriss in regard to the United States notes that are outstanding.

In 1862 there was issued by this Government between four and five hundred million dollars of United States notes. Not a penny of gold was behind these notes. The credit of the Nation was behind the notes. This was during the War between the States, and when General Early, of Southern Confederacy fame, was about to take Washington and the Union was about to fall, these notes depreciated in value down to about 35 cents on the dollar. They only had the credit of the Government behind them; but when the Union was successful, these notes came back 100 cents on the dollar. The Government did put some gold behind them, but that was not the reason they came back 100 percent. It was because the credit of the Nation was restored. They have remained 100 percent ever since. This money is in circulation today—$346,000,000 of it. The people have been saved more than $11,000,000,000 of interest on that money on the basis of 5 percent, as this table, introduced by Mr. Harriss discloses. If the people can save $11,000,000,000 in interest from 1862 to now on $346,000,000, how much will the people be able to pay and how much will they be required to pay on this $30,000,000,000 debt we have? This is a question we must consider.

POOR PEOPLE CANNOT CONVENIENTLY PAY PRESENT DEBT

Our present Federal debt is about $30,000,000,000. Let us consider for a moment what the Nation's probable debt will be 30 years from now and 60 years from now. A Government expert, at the request of Mr. Robert M. Harriss, of New York City and Dallas, Tex., has compiled the information based upon the Government's debt of November 30, 1934, when it was $26,760,967,700. The compound interest at 3 percent on this sum to 1965 is $38,194,924,859.09, making the debt for this date, 1965, $64,955,892,559.09. The compound interest on the same amount of debt to 1995 is $130,904,032,560.32, making a total of $157,665,000,260.32. The average rate of interest paid by the Government is 3.18 percent.

PARASITES AND BLOOD SUCKERS

Our Government is responsible for making parasites out of the holders of these securities. Congress has caused this class of parasites to be created, and Congress should be held responsible for these blood suckers.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF 1912

In 1912 the people of this country were aroused because of the concentration of wealth—the unequal distribution of wealth. It was written into the Democratic platform of 1912 at Baltimore, referring to our country's condition.

A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. We therefore favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal as well as the civil law against trusts and trust officials, and demand the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in the United States.

We favor the declaration by law of the conditions upon which corporations shall be permitted to engage in interstate trade, including, among others, the prevention of holding companies, of interlocking directors, of stock watering, of discrimination in price, and the control by any one corporation of so large a proportion of any industry as to make it a menace to competitive conditions.

The platform further stated that the people needed—

Protection from control or dominion by what is known as the "Money Trust"; banks exist for the accommodation of the public and not for the control of business.

PEOPLE'S MINDS DIVERTED

These liberal provisions were carried forward in the Democratic platform of 1916. President Woodrow Wilson advocated these provisions and would have carried this platform and policies into effect, which would have destroyed many of the special privileges that we are having to deal with today, had it not been for the fact that we were forced into a war with Germany and the attention of the people immediately diverted from necessary monetary and economic reforms to winning the war.

PEOPLE NO LONGER FOOLED ON MONEY

The people of this country are again aroused like they were in 1912 and like they were in 1916. They are no longer fooled by the poll-parrot satellites of Wall Street who scream out "flat money", "printing-press money", "baloney dollars", and similar catch phrases that are coined for the purpose of condemning good causes in the absence of logic and reason to support their arguments. The people of this country realize it is an idiotic and imbecile system for the United States Government to issue a $1,000 bond that is interest bearing and tax exempt; sell that bond to a private banker and then permit the private banker to deposit the same bond with the same Government he purchased it from and receive new money in return for it and continue to collect interest on the Government bond. Thomas A. Edison was right when he said that any Government that can issue a dollar bond that is good can issue a dollar bill that is just as good. No one can possibly contend that currency is any more inflationary than bonds. The only difference is the people through their Government pay interest on the bond and do not have to pay interest on the currency.

WILL WAR BE USED TO AGAIN DIVERT MINDS OF PEOPLE?

Since the people of this country are determined to rid the privileged few of their monopolistic rights and the free use of the Government's credit and other special privileges which will release the grip of Wall Street on the people, I wonder if there will be an effort to involve us in a war in order that the people's minds might again be diverted and these necessary reforms postponed for another generation?

THE OWNERS OF A BILLION-DOLLAR FRANCHISE

There are 12 Federal Reserve bank districts in the United States, the Nation being divided up into 12 areas, with one Federal Reserve bank in each area. These banks are located in Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y; Philadelphia, Pa.; Cleveland, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.; Richmond, Va.; Atlanta, Ga.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Kansas City, Kans.; Dallas, Tex.; San Francisco, Calif. They are not the same banks or the same system created in 1913. So-called "perfecting amendments" have diverted these banks from the course intended when Congress created them.

All the national banks in the area served by the Dallas (Tex.) Federal Reserve Bank belong to the Federal Reserve Banking System. Many State banks belong to the System, but up to date they have not been compelled to join. The same situation exists in other areas. The stock in each Federal Reserve bank is owned by the bankers that are members of the System in that area. The Government of the United States does not own one penny of the stock. It is all owned by private corporations, private banks that are owned by their stockholders.

Most of the money that is in circulation today, paper currency, greenbacks, or whatever you want to call it, is Federal Reserve notes. If all the people of this country knew how these Federal Reserve notes get into circulation and how the private bankers of the country use the Government's credit free, I doubt that they would enjoy the privilege very much longer. It is certainly wrong to allow a few the use of the Government's credit free and charge the other people for its use.

PRIVATELY OWNED BANKS ISSUE BLANKET MORTGAGES ON PEOPLE'S PROPERTY AND INCOME

All transactions of the Federal Reserve banks are tax-exempt. All the profits made by a Federal Reserve bank go into the surplus fund of that bank, and not one penny of its profits go into the Treasury of the United States or taxes in any way. If the Dallas, Tex., bank needs a million dollars in new currency, the order is given to the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington, D. C., where 4 tons of paper money is printed each day.

Who gives this order? The Federal Reserve agent, who is also chairman of the Board. The chairman of the Board is directly responsible to the president of the Dallas bank, who is elected by private bankers.

What does he offer as security for this money? He places in the bank vault at Dallas, Tex., either Government securities or paper of private banks equal to the amount of the money ordered printed. These deposited securities or bank paper are collateral for the issuance of the money, and they are kept in the possession of the private banker's representative, who orders and obtains the million dollars in new money.

Who agrees to pay each one of these bills that is printed for this bank? If you will notice a Federal Reserve note, it says: "The United States of America will pay to the bearer on demand $—." You will also find on the note or new bill the signature of the Treasurer of the United States and the signature of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. Therefore this blanket mortgage upon all the property of all the people of this Nation and this lien upon the income of all the people in this country is issued for the use of the private bankers without any charge whatsoever except the cost of printing, which is about 27 cents a thousand dollars.

EAT THEIR CAKE AND KEEP IT

The 12 Federal Reserve banks now own about $3,000,000,000 of Government securities. These securities were purchased with the Government credit—a blanket mortgage that I have described. Ordinarily you would think that when a Government security is purchased by Government credit that the interest would cease to run against the Government on the obligation purchased, but in this case the Federal Reserve banks continue to collect interest on the obligations so purchased. The situation is analogous to that of one who owes a mortgage on his home for $10,000, giving a neighbor $10,000 to pay the mortgage holder, the neighbor paying the mortgage holder $10,000 and having the mortgage transferred to him, the neighbor, who holds it and continues to charge the home owner interest on the mortgage that he has liquidated. If the home owner continues to pay interest on the mortgage that he has furnished the money to pay he is acting as foolish as the Government.

GOVERNMENT OWNS ENORMOUS GOLD RESERVE

Under present laws, the Government owns nine and a quarter billion dollars in gold. The title to this gold is in the Government. None of it belongs to the banks or to the people. This is sufficient gold for the Government to issue its credit to the extent of $24,125,000,000, based upon a 40-percent gold reserve. We have five and one-half billion dollars of money in circulation and the Government is paying the Federal Reserve banks an annual bonus to keep a large part of this amount in circulation. No country has ever required more than a 40-percent gold base as coverage for its currency, and very few countries have ever had that much. It occurs to me as unsound for the Government to continue to issue tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds when it has ample gold that may be used as sufficient base for the issuance of approximately $20,000,000,000 more in money or credit.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD CHANGE IDIOTIC SYSTEM

The private banks owning the stock in the Federal Reserve banking system have an investment of $146,000,000. It is the Government's credit, and not this small investment that enables these banks to transact hundreds of billions of dollars worth of business annually. The Government should do the following:

First. The Federal Reserve banks should be taken over by the Government and operated in the interest of all the people, banks, industry, agriculture, and commerce.

Second. No private corporation or corporation owned by private corporations should have the right to issue money.

Third. The Government should issue currency when in need of money instead of tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds.

Fourth. Very few of the bankers of the country, even the real good ones, have ever studied or thought anything about this monetary problem.

Fifth. A billion dollars a year can be used by the Government to a better advantage than paying it as interest on Government bonds that may be used as a basis for the issuance of currency.

Sixth. Direct credits should receive the thoughtful consideration of the people.

Seventh. Opposition to any progressive proposal may be expected from those who will be deprived of special privileges, the die-hard, orthodox, hard-money advocates, and the poll-parrot satellites of Wall Street who only repeat what others say and never think for themselves.

Eighth. We need and must have more money as a circulating medium, but we should not issue more Government bonds in order to get it.

Ninth. The Government, through the ownership of the Federal Reserve banks, can gradually but eventually retire every outstanding dollar's worth of Government securities and save the Government a billion dollars a year in interest.

Tenth. The Government, through the use of these great facilities, can refinance the obligations of States, counties, cities, and political subdivisions by using the people's credit—the Government's credit—at a rate of interest not exceeding one-half of 1 percent. This rate of interest will protect the Government against loss and save the people who are obliged to pay these obligations from one-half billion to a billion dollars a year in interest charges alone, which will result in reducing the tax burden on property in many communities as much as 50 percent.

Eleventh. The Government, through the Government-owned Federal Reserve Banking System, could safely make loans to States, counties, cities, townships, and school districts and educational institutions for public improvement and education based upon adequate and sound security at one-half of 1-percent interest.

NO CHANCE OF INFLATION

This change in our banking laws and governmental system can be made without undue expansion of the currency and without the possibility of inflation by making the changes gradually instead of rapidly and by changing the reserve requirements of banks at the same time. In other words, under the present law a bank can issue $10 in credit to every $1 in money. As the Government pays money into circulation for services or in payment of Government obligations, the reserve requirement can be raised to where a bank cannot issue more than $5 to every one and then $3 to every one, until finally the bank will only be permitted to extend loans to the actual amount of money in its possession, which will cause a 100-percent reserve requirement.

POWER OF MONEY TRUST OVER CONGRESS

The power of the Money Trust over Congress seems to be irresistible, we are told; I think the indifference of Congress is the cause. In either case, Congress is to be blamed for the present Money Trust. The reforms I advocate have been attempted time and again. No person can possibly defend the idiotic system that the Government has in effect at this time of issuing and distributing money for the benefit of a privileged few. As the hidden nests of corruption are disclosed, the people's minds are always distracted in some way to prevent the proper reforms being made.

THE MORGAN OVERDRAFT

Before America entered the war J. P. Morgan's banking house was financing Great Britain in the war against Germany. Mr. Morgan would sell England's bonds to American people and purchase goods and supplies and send them to England in return for her bonds. Just before America entered the war, however, Mr. Morgan had furnished England $400,000,000 more in credit than he was able to sell England's bonds to cover. This was known as the "Morgan overdraft", and was discussed in official communications between the United States and England. A clamour for war was commenced on the eastern sea coast; the few who first desired war probably would never have sold this country on the theory that we should have entered the war had it not been for their tremendous power through the indirect and direct means of control over the newspapers and other means of communication in this country. However, with these great powers and privileges, and through the use of all sorts of propaganda, the people of this country were led to believe that they should enter the World War. The first $400,000,000 of the First Liberty Loan was loaned to England to pay Mr. Morgan. The House of Morgan was saved but we were in a war.

GOVERNMENT FARMED OUT GREAT PRIVILEGE TO PRIVATE BANKS

It is in the interest of Wall Street to prevent the issuance of Government money, if it is possible for them to do so. It is stepping on the toes of the big bankers and is a step in the direction of Congress doing what they have succeeded in preventing Congress doing; that is, coining money and regulating the value thereof as required by the Constitution of the United States. This great privilege of issuing money has been farmed out to them by our Government, and they do not want anything done that will be in the direction of denying them this great privilege that is worth billions of dollars and is probably the greatest racket on earth.

BONUS TO BIG BANKERS

Our Government is paying almost a billion dollars a year interest on its own credit to holders of Government securities. It is not right for the people to be compelled to pay a penny of this amount. If our Government were to borrow money from a foreign country or a foreign bank, it would be right for our Government to pay interest on the amount borrowed, or if our Government should borrow gold from our own citizens to use in international trade to promote the interest of our country, our Government should pay our citizens interest for the use of that gold.

Today, however, our Government does not borrow money from a foreign country or a foreign bank, neither is it borrowing gold from its own citizens; therefore, it should not be compelled to pay tribute, interest, bonus, or gratuity to a few big bankers for the privilege of using its own credit. That is exactly what our Government is doing. It is an imbecile and idiotic system that has grown up over a period of years that cannot be charged directly to any one political party or any one individual. The people have discovered this idiotic system. They have finally gotten the truth. The ones who enjoy these special privileges are making every effort to becloud the issue, deceive and mislead the people with red herrings, and all kinds of propaganda and downright falsehoods disseminated by their hired hands, puppets, and easily misled citizens.

CONSTITUTION ADVOCATES SILENT ON ONE PARAGRAPH

Article 1, section 8, paragraph 5, of the Constitution of the United States says that it is the duty of Congress to issue money and regulate the value thereof. Most of our Constitution advocates never refer to this particular section of the Constitution. If Congress should do what this section provides, most of our economic troubles would be solved. Why does the American Liberty (bond) League remain silent on this paragraph of the Constitution? It has much to say about the Constitution, but nothing about this particular paragraph. Why do all the newspapers and hirelings of Wall Street that have so much to say about Congress violating the Constitution in different ways never accuse Congress of failing to carry out this particular paragraph of the Constitution? If that paragraph is complied with by Congress the depression will be over, and all temporary expedients may be immediately repealed and there will be no doles, bread lines, or made-work relief.

WHAT IS MONEY?

One great economist defined money to be "that which passes freely from hand to hand throughout the community in payment for goods and in full discharge of debts, being accepted without reference to the character or credit of the person offering it, and without the intention of the person who receives it to consume it otherwise than in tendering it to others."

Suppose we did not have money. If you had wheat to spare and needed shoes, possibly you could trade the wheat for the shoes, but not likely; you would probably have to trade the wheat for hides and then trade the hides for shoes. This would be very inconvenient. It is much better that we have something called money that has a definite value measured in all commodities in order that anything may be exchanged for money and money may be exchanged for anything. Money is a standard or common denominator of value. Money itself is of no value; it is a simple tool desired for the purpose of making exchanges. Money is no mysterious thing, no mystic principles veil or obscure it; it is a tool for making exchanges, just as a hammer is a tool for driving nails.

SCRIP USED IN A THOUSAND CITIES

Different commodities have been used as money; knives were formerly used as money in China; tobacco served the same function in Virginia; some other commodities that have served this function are wheat, bark, cattle, iron, and shells. The Department of Commerce recently made a survey and discovered because of a necessity of money over a thousand cities and groups are using scrip and barter for money; it was acceptable to the people at these places in the absence of a sufficient medium of exchange.

HOT CHECK USED AS MONEY

Down at Farmersville, Tex., not so long ago, a customer bought a dollar's worth of goods from a merchant. He gave a dollar check in exchange for the goods. The check was endorsed by the merchant and transferred to 19 other people. When it reached the bank it had 20 endorsements on it, and the banker very promptly told the one presenting the check at the window that the maker did not have sufficient funds to cover that dollar check. Well, instead of each endorser going back on the other endorsers and collecting the dollar and letting those $20 in debts remain unpaid, the 20 endorsers got together, each contributed 5 cents apiece and deposited it to the credit of the man who gave the check. The check was promptly paid, and the $20 worth of debts were paid 95 cents on the dollar.

In this crisis it seems like people are using wooden money and hot checks to good advantage when they cannot have a sufficient medium of exchange furnished to them by their Government to do business with.

STABLE MONEY

It is desirable that we have a stable dollar. Our farmers borrowed money by voting upon themselves road, school, and other improvement bonds when wheat was worth $1.50 a bushel and cotton was worth 20 cents a pound. Later they were called upon to pay these debts when wheat was 40 cents a bushel and cotton 5 cents a pound. This resulted in the payment of $4, in what the farmer had to pay with, to every $1 borrowed; instead of being called upon to pay the 6- or 10-percent interest they contracted to pay, they were called upon to pay the equivalent or 24- or 40-percent interest in what they had to pay with.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND OF MONEY

Do not be misled into believing that supply and demand of a commodity is the sole controlling factor in determining the price of the commodity. Just as much depends on the supply and demand of money and credit. If our cotton and wheat farmers produce only one-fourth of a normal crop this year and money and credit are made scarce, high, and dear, cotton and wheat will be cheap.

Since the supply and demand of money, which includes credit, controls the price of all labor, services, and commodities, our Government should be careful about who controls this great privilege. The people are entitled to have someone in charge of that great lever that expands or contracts money and credit at will who has their general welfare at heart; no one should have charge of this lever who can manipulate it in a way to make profit for themselves to the detriment of the general welfare. What chance has a producer or wage earner of this Nation to earn a decent livelihood for himself and family if the value of his products or labor is fixed by someone who has in mind making a profit for himself?

CONSTITUTIONAL MANDATE

The framers of the United States Constitution in article 1, section 8, very wisely said:

Congress shall have the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

This provision of the Constitution is mandatory. All Members of Congress are sworn to uphold the Constitution. Why has this provision never been carried out? The answer is simple. In the early days of our national existence the people were deceived into believing that the subject of money was so mysterious and intricate that only a few of the financiers understood the subject, and therefore the great privilege of issuing and distributing money should be farmed out to them. This was done and it has never been changed, except to give them more power and authority. The strange part of it all is that the ones who are the beneficiaries of this great privilege are not even charged with the duty of furnishing the people a sufficient circulating medium.

FIAT-MONEY PARROTS

Do not blame the bankers for this. They are not to blame; they are doing what Congress has permitted them to do; Congress should be held responsible. However, when Congress seriously considers printing sufficient money to carry out this constitutional mandate the holders of this great privilege and their satellites repeat like parrots such phrases as "printing-press money", "rag money", "fiat money", "baloney money", and "greenbacks." They do not tell you that it is the same kind of money that is printed for them and that it will be backed by the same security which is the credit of this Nation. Let me make a prediction. The people are getting wise to such false, selfish, and greedy propaganda, and will, before very long, compel their Congress to change our idiotic monetary system by complying with the Constitution. I will admit, it takes a long time to sell the people of this Nation a good proposal.

GERMANY'S INFLATION

The inflation in Germany is cited as evidence of what will likely happen here if the power to issue money is taken away from private corporations and restored to Congress. The German situation is not in point at all. In Germany the people owed more debts than they could pay. They could not cancel the debts, but they could print more money to pay them with. In fact, that country deliberately printed money until it was worthless, so their people could use the money to pay their debts with and get out of debt. They accomplished their desires.

OUR AIM

We do not desire to and will not destroy our monetary system, but we do want the people to be allowed the privilege of paying their debts in dollars that are worth approximately what they were worth when borrowed, and to restore to Congress its constitutional duty to coin money and regulate its value.

MODERN, UP-TO-DATE PRINTING PLANT

Here in Washington City the Government owns and operates a modern, up-to-date printing plant for the purpose of printing paper money and Government securities. It is the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, employs 5,500 people, and at one time got behind with its money printing until it had to be operated 24 hours a day. The question is, Who gets this paper money; how do they get it; and who benefits by its issuance?

THE GREAT MONOPOLY WORTH BILLIONS OF DOLLARS

There are 12 Federal Reserve banks in the Nation; they are not the same banks or same system created in 1913. The law has been completely changed, so-called " perfecting " amendments have diverted these banks from the course intended by Congress in 1913. They are owned by the member banks—private corporations—which are in turn owned by individuals. The Government does not own one penny of stock in these institutions, neither does it at this time get one penny of profit from their operations, although they use the credit of the Nation free, are exempt from all taxes, except upon their real estate, and are given the greatest privilege that any institution on earth has ever had—a franchise that is worth billions of dollars.

POWER TO ISSUE BLANKET MORTGAGES

These banks have the right to issue paper money that our Government prints for them at their request; they do pay about 27 cents for printing every thousand dollars worth of bills. I will read from one side of one of these bills:

Federal Reserve note. The United States of America will pay to bearer on demand $5.

On the other side is the picture of the United States Treasury and the words, " United States of America, $5."

You will notice that the Government of the United States agrees to redeem this note that is issued by an institution that is owned solely by private corporations. The Government's agreement carries with it a blanket mortgage on all the homes, other property, and the incomes of all the people of this Nation.

ZERO RATE OF INTEREST

Do such banks pay for the privilege of issuing these blanket mortgages on the property and incomes of the people? The answer is no. The Federal Reserve act, section 16, provides that they shall pay an interest charge that may be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board. The Board fixed the rate at zero. Therefore these 12 banks have used the people's credit up to the amount of $60,000,000,000 dollars a year turnover for 20 years for the zero rate of interest. If they had paid a reasonable rate of interest, the Government would have collected hundreds of millions of dollars.

Practically all the money we have in circulation today is money issued by these banks. They use the Nation's credit free to issue it, but someone is paying interest on it every day it is outstanding. The only way the people can expand their currency under this system is to go into debt deeper and pay more interest. The people owe $203,000,000,000 in debts now. During the year 1932 the national income was $40,000,000,000; that year, when we had less than $5,000,000,000 in circulation, the people paid $10,000,000,000 in interest charges alone.

PEOPLE SHOULD GET MONEY MINDED

I hope the people get money minded, money conscious. Look at the paper money in your possession and do not stop investigating until you know all about why, how, and for whose benefit it was issued. It is the one big problem; when it is solved most of all our other problems will sink into insignificance. Congress is the branch of government charged by the Constitution with solving it or with submitting to the Executive proposals to that end.

TAKE THE GOVERNMENT OUT OF PRIVATE BUSINESS AND TAKE PRIVATE CORPORATIONS OUT OF THE GOVERNMENT'S BUSINESS

Our Government, under the leadership of a great President, is making a determined effort to restore prosperity to the people. Much has been done toward helping wage earners, laborers, farmers, home owners, business, industry, and commerce. Debts have been scaled down, extended, and interest charges have been reduced. It is almost inconceivable that we can continue this start on the road to recovery without the Government having control over its own media of exchange. The issuance and distribution of money is a governmental function. It never should have been farmed out to private corporations; since it has been, the Congress should immediately reassume this great privilege and exercise it in the interest of the people. Our slogan should be: " Get the Government out of private business and get private corporations out of the Government's business." The first step should be for the Government to take over the 12 Federal Reserve banks and coordinate their activities with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; then the Government's credit can be used for all banks—National, State, or private—all business, all agriculture, all commerce, and all people. Interest rates can be substantially reduced and the Government can obtain considerable revenue by charging a small sum for the use of its credit; all governmental financing can be handled through the new set-up without charging the Government interest which will eliminate the necessity for the issuance by the Government of another tax-exempt interest-bearing bond, or to increase taxes.

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL MONEY

Is there a need for additional money? During the last year there has been a shrinkage of actual currency in circulation of $1,600,000,000. There has been a contraction of commercial checking deposits of $20,000,000,000 since the depression began. Ex-Senator Robert L. Owen, framer of the Federal Reserve Act and one of the best-informed men in the world on our monetary problems, has pointed out that the effect of this contraction has been to destroy the value of property in terms of money and to give money a very extraordinary value in terms of property. The banks apparently are unable or unwilling to expand these deposits by loans and thus restore the volume of credit which we previously had, in whole or even in substantial part. The Government alone can expand the currency money to replace the check money contracted. In 1929 money was turning over or was being used in exchange at an average rate of 22 times a year; it is now turning over 11 times a year. The contraction of money and credit, together with the slow turnover, has reduced the business of the country more than $800,000,000,000 the last year. That situation can be cured by Congress doing what the Constitution says it should do, " coin money and regulate the value thereof."

CURRENCY INSTEAD OF BONDS

A few years ago Mr. Thomas A. Edison was inspecting Muscle Shoals. He remarked that the Government should operate that great project in the interest of the people. He was asked if he favored the Government borrowing the $30,000,000 necessary to make repairs. His answer substantially was: " No; why should the Government borrow its own credit? If it issues tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds and sells the bonds to Wall Street bankers to get the money, by the time the bonds are paid the bankers will have collected as much in interest as the Government received on the bonds. In other words, the bankers who will not furnish an ounce of material or a lick of labor will get as much out of it as the men who do the work and furnish the material." Mr. Edison also said at the same time: "Any government that can issue a dollar bond, interest bearing, that is good can issue a dollar bill, noninterest bearing, that is good; the only difference is the bill is easier to redeem because it does not draw interest." No one can answer Mr. Edison's argument.

HOW MUCH MONEY CAN THE GOVERNMENT ISSUE?

The Government has outstanding today about $30,000,000,000 in bonds and securities. Others are to be issued soon.

The interest this year to be paid by the Government will amount to almost one thousand million dollars. A program should be considered now that will call for the gradual retirement of all Government bonds upon maturity or when callable with new currency and issue no more of such obligations. It will be a simple process. We will merely substitute one form of Government obligation for another form of Government obligation. The stock argument against this is that every dollar issued will go into the banks and upon each dollar as a base the banks may issue 10 credit dollars, which will cause undue expansion of the currency. That is true, but the argument may be destroyed completely by changing the law allowing the banks to use 1 dollar to issue 10; as the actual money is increased, require the banks to use a larger reserve or prevent them from lending money they do not have if the facts and circumstances should warrant. Many people who are against issuing a few billion dollars in money are highly in favor of the banks issuing the same amount in credit, claiming it will serve the same purpose. It will serve the same purpose, but an enormous amount of interest would have to be paid on the credit that would not have to be paid on the money, and besides the banks could call in the credit, deflate values, and destroy prices as they did in 1920. They could not control the actual money in that manner; therefore, they are against it.

HOW WILL THE MONEY BE REDEEMED?

The Treasury has sufficient gold to be used as a reserve for the retirement of a large part of this money if a gold base is desired. Silver may also be used. We have and can obtain plenty of it for that purpose, and at the same time help our export trade. Neither gold nor silver is absolutely necessary, as the money issued will be good for the payment of all debts, taxes, and import duties, although from an international-trade standpoint it may be desirable to use silver and gold. It will be redeemable in services rendered by the post offices; in payment of all kinds of taxes, including income and excise; in payment of all debts, including debts due the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We will be using cash instead of interest-bearing credit as a medium of exchange. Money will go into channels of trade and production, instead of into tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds.

WILL WAGE EARNER BE INJURED?

It is contended that if more money is issued the dollar will become cheaper, which will be harmful to the farmers and those who live on fixed incomes. We can get on a currency basis, instead of a credit basis, without changing the purchasing power of the dollar, but most of us who advocate issuing more money really desire the return of what may be termed a cheaper dollar. As the dollar becomes cheaper real estate, common stocks, cotton, wheat, raw materials, labor, and all goods and services upon which there is no fixed price increase in value. This will enable the ones in these groups to have additional purchasing power.

Let us see how much it will affect the wage earner who receives one of these so-called "cheaper" dollars. He can use it to pay 100 cents on his debts, taxes, insurance, rent, electricity, gas, water, telephone, railroad freight, and passenger rates, and all other bills, goods, and services upon which there is a fixed and inflexible price. Any adjustment will be in favor of additional purchasing power, which will be in the direction of additional consumption of goods. The factory employee will probably pay a little more for eggs which will enable the farmer to buy more of what his factory produces. It will be better for the wage earner to receive a dollar that will not purchase so much in certain commodities than not to have a job which will enable him to earn a dollar. I much prefer to bring purchasing power up to the point where our surplus may be consumed rather than force production down to a very limited buying power.

PART OF PRESS SUBSIDIZED

We cannot overlook the power of that part of the press that is controlled by selfish, greedy interests. Many newspapers are at the mercy of the powerful few who control the finances of this Nation. They print what they are told to print. If they do not, they will find themselves in the position of one large newspaper in a great city not so long ago. It failed to get the eight pages of advertising on a certain day in the week that it had always gotten. The advertiser had told the newspaper editor to change his policy in which he opposed a certain candidate for office, and he refused. Later this policy was changed, and the advertising was resumed.

Less than 6 months ago in this country, the land of the free and the home of the brave, a newspaper chain that reaches forty or fifty million people every day, was compelled to change its policy in regard to monetary reform, and one of the greatest and most popular columnists, whose views are sound from the standpoint of the people, was put in the dog house so far as this monetary issue is concerned.

I am wondering what the outcome will be. The power of the great means of communication is unlimited, and with this power against you it takes a long time to sell a good cause to the American people.

MORE MONEY NEEDED

A sufficient medium of exchange is very much needed. In 1929, bank clearings in New York City aggregated $500,000,000,000; in 1933, only $157,000,000,000.

Chicago reduced from $36,000,000,000 in 1929 to $9,000,000,000 in 1933. San Francisco, from $11,000,000,000 in 1929 to $4,000,000,000 in 1933. In Detroit, a reduction of from $11,500,000,000 in 1929 to $2,000,000,000 in 1933.

From 1926 to 1929, the demand deposits in banks subject to check averaged $21,000,000,000. In 1933 and 1934 the average was $14,000,000,000. The banks deliberately canceled and destroyed $7,000,000,000 of our circulating medium.

Now, many of us are called radicals and fools because we want to restore $2,000,000,000 of that circulating medium that the banks have destroyed. The same people who criticize us say it is all right for the banks to put credit into circulation, but they don't want the Government to put money into circulation instead.

PROTECT THE FINE JERSEY COW

In other words, they are like the farmer who was purchasing medicine at the drug store. The pharmacist was wrapping up the two bottles, which had been filled in accordance with two prescriptions. The farmer said, "Mark plain them bottles, which is for the wife and which is for the cow. I sure don't want anything to happen to that fine Jersey cow."

Our critics say, "Be careful about who puts the money into circulation. We don't want anything to happen to the great and powerful privilege that a few banks now have to use the credit of the Nation freely."

Although the money that people have to pay with has considerably decreased, and the purchasing power of the dollar has gone up considerably, property values have been destroyed.

TAKE HAND OF GREED FROM THROATS OF PEOPLE

There is only one way to take this impossible and unfair burden off the American people, ourselves, and our children, and that is to take from the throats of the American people the hand of privilege and greed.

WORLD'S GREATEST RACKET

The world's greatest racket is the abuse of the United States Government's credit in the interest of a few.

A TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN AT LARGE CHARLES V. TRUAX OF OHIO

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, Members of this Congress who knew Charlie Truax as a colleague and friend often heard of "the little town of Sycamore in Ohio." Our colleague and friend has made his last trip home. I stood at his grave in the cemetery close to his "little town of Sycamore in Ohio." He was my personal and political friend. On the afternoon that he died I talked with him on the floor of the House of Representatives.

I was sitting beside him when he arose and made his last address in this forum. Characteristic of him, the last speech he made on the floor of the House of Representatives was in behalf of the farmers. The first speech he made as a Congressman was in behalf of the farmers. That first speech was made very shortly after he and I came to the Congress in March 1933 as Congressmen at large representing Ohio. His last utterance was:

Does not the gentleman believe that it does not make any difference how high the cost of hogs goes, nor how high the cost of cattle goes, when a particular farmer loses his farm he is out for the balance of his life? There are a half million going to lose their farms because of the refusal of this Congress to enact the Frazier-Lemke bill.

Congressman at Large Charles V. Truax was a conscientious Congressman. He was able, fearless, energetic, and most industrious. He faithfully represented in an outstanding manner the principles he believed in. I liked him a lot personally. He and I were political companions on the stump in Ohio on many occasions. It was a shock that he should be stricken down at the height of his power and in the fullness of his strength. But an hour or so before he died I sat beside him discussing pending bills, also a fishing trip he hoped to make and felt he could not because of the press of congressional business.

No Member of the House of Representatives worked harder than he. During the weary days that the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress dragged on he had no complaint to make. He knew that his duty was here in Washington representing a constituency 25 times larger than the constituency represented by district representatives. He took no vacation whatever. He gave all pending legislative measures careful consideration.

Charlie Truax had a quick mind, a keen intellect, a sense of humor that was a great asset, and, in addition, he was an orator of note. He was fearless in expressing his views. He was loyal to his friends and to his constituency. He was a champion of the cause of the farmers and veterans and of the underprivileged. Those who served with him in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses will not forget him.

The facts are he really wore himself out serving his constituency and the country. This grueling session of the Congress and the tremendous amount of work piled on him as a representative of nearly 7,000,000 people directly caused his death. Had Congress adjourned prior to these last blistering weeks I am confident that he would be alive today and looking forward to the great political future that his friends believed was his.

Charles V. Truax will struggle no longer in the arena of public life. His voice will be heard no more on the hustings back in the State he loved and served. He will answer no more roll calls here. He has answered the last roll call. Ohio and the Nation have lost a faithful public official. Our sympathy goes out to his fine wife and children.

IMPROVEMENT ON THE TOMBIGBEE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this item of $109,000 to be expended in improving the Tombigbee River in Itawamba County, Miss., is one of the most meritorious provisions of this bill. The Tombigbee is a navigable stream, and, in former days, it was a great highway of commerce for that section of the country. In recent years, it has been neglected and has become clogged with logs and debris to such an extent as to produce frequent destructive overflows.

When a flood comes on the Mississippi River, the Missouri, or the St. Francis, or any of the other large streams of the country, it is always given conspicuous display in the newspapers, while the disastrous floods on the Tombigbee are seldom mentioned. It is estimated that 25,000 acres of splendid farming land was inundated by the Tombigbee in Itawamba County alone last year. These floods can be prevented, and they should be prevented. If we would spend as much money on the Tombigbee in proportion to its importance, as we spend on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the people along the Tombigbee would be saved from the effects of these destructive floods.

In recent years, the landowners along the tributaries of the Tombigbee have floated bonds and constructed drainage canals, in order to reclaim the fertile lands along those tributaries. But the filling up of the Tombigbee with logs and debris has also clogged the mouths of these drainage canals, and backed the water up on these farmers damaging, if not destroying, thousands of acres of the richest farming lands in the South.

While this $109,000 will be inadequate to do the work, still it will go a long way toward relieving the situation. But the thing that disturbs me is that Members keep loading this bill down with expensive amendments until I fear they will so cumber it as to prevent its passage through the Senate. We need this work done on the Tombigbee River now, and it would be deplorable to have this bill so weighted down as to prevent its final passage and kill this appropriation.

It is our hope to secure the passage at the next session of Congress of a measure providing for an inland waterway connecting the Tennessee River with Mobile Bay down the Tombigbee. The Rivers and Harbors Committee is now waiting for a report from the Army engineers as to the probable freight load which this canal would carry or that would be available.

General Markham, Chief of the Army Engineers, stated before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors recently that the project is entirely feasible from an engineering standpoint, and that it could be made to lower the flood crest on the Mississippi River by several feet.

Such a waterway would shorten the water distance from Muscle Shoals and all points on the upper Tennessee River to the Gulf of Mexico by more than 650 miles, and would shorten the water distance from all points on the lower Tennessee and the upper Ohio to the Gulf of Mexico by more than 200 miles. It would shorten the distance from the mouth of the Ohio and from all points on the upper Mississippi and Missouri Rivers to the Gulf of Mexico by 102 miles.

It would turn down through this course the traffic on the upper Tennessee, the lower Tennessee, and the Ohio River, up as high as Pittsburgh, Pa., and would probably pick up a large portion of the freight on the upper Mississippi and the Missouri. This would be augmented by the enormous amount of timber, cotton, corn, and other agricultural products now produced in this section of the country, as well as by the billions of tons of mineral deposits such as bauxite, ceramic clays, coal, iron, asphalt, and so forth, that abound to an almost unlimited extent in this territory.

The probable freight load cannot be estimated; the possibilities are simply unlimited.

It has been pointed out by Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, who is one of the leading civil engineers of America—it has been pointed out by Dr. Morgan that this would be a much better route for ascending vessels than would the Mississippi River route because they would not have to battle against a terrific current.

In case of war, such a canal would be almost indispensable, for the reason that our supply of nitrates would be at Muscle Shoals, and this waterway would give us an additional outlet to the sea.

It is not at all improbable that we will soon be manufacturing millions of tons of fertilizer in this vicinity of Muscle Shoals, which would also go to swell the freight load on this canal.

It would be so easy to connect the Tennessee with the Tombigbee.

When the Pickwick Dam is completed the water level on the Tennessee River at the mouth of Bear Creek will be 155 feet higher above sea level than the water level of the Tombigbee at the confluence of Brown and Mackey's Creek, about 35 miles away. This canal would pass up Bear Creek and Little Cripple Deer, then cut through a sand ridge which is about 85 feet high, into Mackeys Creek, one of the chief tributaries of the Tombigbee.

This work could be done with electric dredges, using the surplus secondary power now going to waste at Muscle Shoals, reducing the cost therefor to the very minimum.

This canal could also be used as a spillway to take the surplus water out of the Tennessee and help to hold back from the Mississippi River the flood waters of that stream and the Ohio, and in that way reduce the flood crest on the Mississippi River by several feet. If they had reduced the flood crest 8 inches in 1927 the overflow would not have occurred and all that great destruction of human lives and property would have been prevented.

Since flood crests on the Mississippi and the Tennessee Rivers seldom synchronize with the floods on the Tombigbee, this outlet could be operated with little or no damage along the Tombigbee.

The Government could afford to purchase such lands as would be overflowed under these conditions and turn them into a national forest. They would produce the finest hardwood timber in the country—something that America will be greatly in need of as the years go by.

This canal is just as sure to be constructed as the night follows the day, and I hope to see it constructed at an early date. This $109,000 provided in this bill could be spent in such a way that not a penny would be lost when the time comes to construct this canal, and, as I said, it will relieve a distressful situation these overflows are now producing along the Tombigbee and will help to save some of the most valuable farming lands this country affords.

THE CHAIN-STORE PROBLEM

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress is now in its closing days. Much legislation has been adopted that, in my opinion, will be exceedingly beneficial to the masses of the people of this Nation. Of necessity there has been some legislation which would be beneficial that has not been adopted at this session of Congress. This legislation constitutes the unfinished business which must be considered by the Seventy-fourth Congress in its second session. To my mind, this Congress need make no apology to the American people for the legislative program which it has adopted.

It has at all times had uppermost in its mind the social and economic welfare of the people of this Nation. The legislation that it has adopted conclusively proves this fact. One of the fundamental principles that the present Congress has recognized is the principle that the individuals of this Nation embarked in any line of enterprise are entitled to fair competition. As a candidate for Congress in 1932 and again in 1934 I proclaimed the fact that the railroads of this country were being crucified upon the cross of unfair competition by competition of motor carriers. This Congress has recognized and rectified that problem.

As I have often stated, there still remains the fact that independent merchants of this Nation are likewise being crucified upon the cross of unfair competition. Recently this Congress saw fit to appoint a committee to investigate this condition. The disclosures made by this committee are alarming. They are alarming because they disclose the fact that if present conditions, trade practices, and unfair competition are to continue, the independent merchants of this country will be compelled and forced to retire from business because of the unfair competition of the large chain-store system. Among other things, the investigation of this committee, headed by my esteemed colleague, the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, disclosed the fact, as stated by Mr. PATMAN in a speech before the House of Representatives on July 29, 1935, that one chain-store system in this country during the fiscal year of 1934 received from manufacturing concerns more than $8,000,000 in secret and confidential rebates, discounts, advertising allowances, and brokerage. There can be no challenge made to the statement that the independent merchants of this Nation comprise the backbone of our great civilization. It has often been recognized by military leaders that in time of war the infantry is the backbone of the army. That truism, while unchallenged in time of war, in time of peace might also be unequivocally stated that the independent merchants of this Nation are the backbone of our civilization. Picture to yourself, if you please, a small community such as comprises the homes of most of us here, and picture to yourself a main street utterly devoid of local citizens engaged in business; a main street whose stores flaunt the banner of monopoly. Picture to yourself, if you will, your local citizens appealing to these selfsame stores for funds for the community chest and for other community projects, and you will have the realization of the fact that the chain-store system is concerned primarily with its own welfare, whereas the independent merchants are concerned not only with their own personal welfare but with the welfare of the community as a whole.

Fair competition is a matter of inherent justice; no one, no business, no enterprise, however large or small, should be crucified upon the cross of unfair competition. As a matter of justice the independent merchants of this Nation are entitled to fair competition. They are entitled to do business under the same conditions and with the same privileges as chain-store systems. Secret and confidential rebates, discounts, and advertising allowances must be outlawed. That is the problem to be solved by this Congress. Some legislation, such as the tax upon intercorporation dividends, has already been passed by this Congress. This will, of course, be beneficial, but it will not be a solution to the problem that we face.

Recently a bill has been introduced by my colleague, the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, which it is hoped will solve the problem confronting the independent merchants. I urge that each and every Member of Congress during the coming recess will carefully analyze the provisions of this proposed legislation, and also the report of the hearings of the committee dealing with this problem, to the end that when the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress convenes legislation may be enacted that will give to the independent merchants of America their God-given right to engage in business wherein they will be assured of fair competitive practices.

STAY OF DEPORTATION OF ALIENS OF GOOD CHARACTER

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the provisions of this bill, it provides for the suspension of the immigration laws until full and proper inquiry can be made pending the deportation of certain men of good character who have been allowed to enter this country, marry, and rear a family of children here. There are many close ties binding the human family which are hard and painful to sever. But the relations of man and wife, of parents, child, and children, are the most sacred of all ties which bind the human race. They are above man-made laws and take precedence over man-made regulations.

I do not know the merits of the claims of these husbands and fathers of children; but, regardless of the merits of claims, these men have been allowed to enter this country, they have been allowed to marry here and bring children into the world here and assume the sacred obligations of fathers and breadwinners.

The United States Labor Department and labor leaders in Congress, always more adverse to immigration than other departments and other classes, have requested the enforcement of these laws be suspended until full inquiry can be made before the separation of these men from their families.

The strict letter of the law is never held to be the unyielding law. Equity, justice, is always held higher than the law, and is always invoked by the court to relieve from the strict letter of the law.

If equity can be made to intervene to save and salvage mere property rights, equity can be made to intervene to save the sacred relations of father and child. The courts and the immigration bureaus should be assured of the facts and circumstances before these fathers are torn from their children and sent back across the seas to leave their wives and children here a public charge upon the relief rolls.

History shows the strict letter of the law is always appealed to by men to be enforced against others and never against family, friend, or self. The strict letter of the law is always for the other fellow. The belief in a literal hades is still maintained by some men. But no man who maintains this belief can be found who will claim that punishment is for himself. Hades, like the strict letter of the law, is always for other men.

I believe a consideration of humanity, the sacred ties of parents and children, warrant the passage of this bill to stay the enforcement of these laws for a few months and until the full and true facts of each case can be ascertained and presented to the Bureau. This is recommended by the Labor Department, and this course is approved by the labor leader of the House of Representatives, Mr. CONNERY, and by a broad, charitable view of humanity and of sacred family relations.

ARBITRATION ADOPTED TO SETTLE SHIPYARD STRIKE AT CAMDEN, N. J.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, in an order signed late last night, President Roosevelt has made possible a termination of the strike of 4,600 employees of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation at Camden, N. J.

The effectiveness of the Presidential order, however, is contingent on acceptance by both the company and the strikers. In event either party fails to subscribe in writing to the agreement the order is nullified. The indications are that it will be accepted. The Arbitration Board, appointed by the President to function in case of acceptance, is composed of Rear Admiral Henry A. Wiley, United States Navy, retired, chairman; Robert R. Bruere, New York, and Col. Frank T. Douglass, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Admiral Wiley retired from the United States Navy in 1929 after commanding the United States Fleet. He is a member of the National Steel Labor Relations Board and the National Textile Labor Relations Board. He also has served on a number of special boards and in railroad arbitration matters.

Robert R. Bruere was chairman of the Cotton Textile National Industrial Relations Board under N. I. R. A., and has had wide experience in industrial relations. He served as a member of the board of arbitration of the dress and waist industry and as director of the Bureau of Industrial Research in New York.

Colonel Douglass is a member of the National Textile Labor Relations Board and has served on four railway mediation boards by Presidential appointment. He is an attorney and during the World War attained a distinguished record in action.

The subject matter of the dispute between the workers and the officials of the company relates particularly to wages and hours of service, piece or incentive work, and general working conditions, including recognition of the representatives of Camden Local No. 1, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, as the duly authorized representatives of the workers for the purpose of collective bargaining.

Prior to the commencement of the strike, which became effective May 13 last, sincere and earnest effort was made to avoid it. Committees representing the workers met frequently in conference with officials of the company. Public officials and business men of the city of Camden interceded. Everyone recognized the distress that would result to the men and their families and the detrimental effect it would have upon the finances of the city and its business interests if a prolonged absence from work should ensue. It was a desire to prevent such an unfortunate situation that prompted and actuated all that was done to obtain an amicable settlement.

When every local effort had failed and the situation seemed hopeless, attention was directed to Washington. It was thought that by the intervention of governmental agencies the strike might be averted. The Department of Labor responded and sent representatives to intercede, but they likewise failed.

In a further effort to obtain a settlement of the differences without resorting to a strike, the committee representing the workers visited Washington to make a personal appeal to officials of the Navy Department to use its authority, or at least its good offices and influence, to procure a settlement. In this connection I addressed to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, under whose jurisdiction the matter might properly come, the following appeal:

MAY 9, 1935.

HON. HENRY L. ROOSEVELT,
The Assistant Secretary of the Navy,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ROOSEVELT: This will introduce to you Mr. William Pommerer, vice president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Ship Building Workers of America, and Mr. David Cole, secretary of the negotiating committee of the same union, and in such capacities these gentlemen represent the workers at the New York Ship Building Co. plant located in Camden, N. J.

At the present time negotiations are being conducted between the company and its employees as represented in this union, which, I understand, has a membership of about 94 percent of the workers, with respect to a new contract to be entered into for the coming year. The present contract expires on Saturday of this week, May 11.

There are some matters of dispute between the men and the company which relate to the writing into the agreement the decisions previously made by the arbitration board set-up under the terms of the present existing agreement, and also with reference to wages to be paid.

At a meeting of employees held within the past week at the Convention Hall in the city of Camden, N. J., there were approximately 3,800 of the 4,400 employees at the meeting and who voted with respect to a strike if the provisions requested by the workers were not entered into, and it showed a 5-to-1 vote in favor of a strike. This attitude, however, was taken solely and entirely because the men thought that their terms were just and that the company was unreasonable in the attitude that it was taking in this matter.

A strike is the last resort. The men do not want it, as it will incur great loss to them and to the community, both of which are sorely in need of continued employment by this group of men. It is only because of a very strong sense of justice due the men that occasions even the thought of a strike.

The gentlemen above named are in Washington today in an effort to have Government officials do everything possible to avert such strike, and to lend its offices to them to the end that the agreement shall contain the provisions which are requested by the workers as representing their union.

I will personally appreciate, as will these gentlemen, everything that can be done to effect the above proposition, and I will appreciate all the help that can be given to them and every possible courtesy.

I am, very sincerely, yours,

CHAS. A. WOLVERTON.

It is regrettable that no action was taken by the Navy Department. I am of the opinion that all matters then in dispute could have been brought to an immediate and satisfactory settlement if the Navy Department had interceded and taken an aggressive interest, and utilized, if necessary, the powers, direct and indirect, it possessed under the terms of the contracts and otherwise. The wide discretionary powers lodged in the Secretary of the Navy by the contracts in many important matters, having a direct relationship to the subject matter of the dispute, created a duty as well as constituted a justification for taking whatever action was necessary. However, as no action was taken the strike became effective a few days thereafter.

The effort to have governmental intervention continued even after the strike was in effect. Frequent contacts were arranged, in behalf of the workers' committee and city officials of Camden, with officials in the Navy Department, Secretary of Labor and other representatives of the Department of Labor, chairmen and members of appropriate committees in both Senate and House, in an effort to procure some basis of settlement that would make possible a resumption of work.

Within a few days after the strike started the Senate passed the Wagner-Connery Labor Relations Act. It was also favorably acted upon by the House about a month later. I voted for its adoption in the hope and with the expectation that it would provide a procedure that would enable a satisfactory settlement to be reached in this and similar labor disputes. It was, however, subsequently determined that it did not provide an appropriate or effective method of immediate solution in this particular case.

Consideration was then given to the possibility of having the special committee of the Senate, of which Senator GERALD P. NYE was chairman, intercede in the matter. After a hearing by the Senate committee the members of such committee, who had attended the same, prepared and authorized the issuance of a statement of its intention, as follows:

The committee gives assurance that if it obtains the additional funds which it is asking to continue its investigations the first inquiry will be into relative wages and hours and working privileges in private shipyards and navy yards.

The committee intends, if permitted, to develop and disclose the whole truth about these matters.

The committee is immediately asking the Navy Department to report the effect upon the naval program of construction contracts which eliminate penalties for delay during strikes.

The committee desires to know from the Navy Department whether this immunity is dangerous to the national defense.

Attending the executive meeting on behalf of the shipyard workers and the citizens of Camden were Congressman Wolverton, Francis X. McCann, and John Green.

The matter of procuring a more comprehensive hearing, by a congressional committee, to ascertain what should or could be done to provide governmental intervention in order that construction work at the yard might be resumed was then urged upon both the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and the Committee on Labor of the House. Communications were accordingly addressed to the respective chairmen of these committees:

JUNE 6, 1935.

Hon. CARL VINSON,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: This will introduce to you Mr. John Green, president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Ship Building Workers of America, and also Mr. Francis McCann, secretary of the same organization, who are in Washington representing the employees of the New York Shipbuilding Co., located at Camden, N. J. The men have been on strike for upward of a month. During my absence on account of the illness of my father, Mr. KENNEY, of New Jersey introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the matters at issue. I am in full accord with the purposes of this resolution, and if I had not been away from Washington I would have introduced the same.

These gentlemen desire to present to you the facts in the case to the end that a hearing may be had. I also understand that the committee has been considering the matter of the amendment to the Vinson construction bill which limits profits of shipbuilding companies to 10 percent.

The matters which they desire the committee to inquire into under the Kenney resolution would also have a direct bearing upon the question of profits.

I know the situation in Camden. I am in full accord with the aims and objects of the men, and wish to assure you that the strike was only a last resort. The men are entirely reliable and I vouch for them. They will merit whatever confidence you place in them. I will appreciate your giving favorable consideration to their request. I am,

Very sincerely yours,

CHAS. A. WOLVERTON.

JUNE 6, 1935.

Hon. WILLIAM CONNERY, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: This will introduce to you Mr. John Green, president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Ship Building Workers of America, and also Mr. Francis McCann, secretary of the same organization, who are in Washington representing the employees of the New York Shipbuilding Co. now on strike.

Knowing your interest in such matters, I will appreciate it if you will discuss the situation with them, and give such advice as you think would be helpful. Of course, they would appreciate it if by some procedure a hearing could be had before your committee. It is their thought that it might be done by introducing a bill and then having a hearing called, or in any other way that you can suggest. The men are responsible and reliable. I vouch for them. I will appreciate any help that you can give them. I am,

Very sincerely yours,

CHAS. A. WOLVERTON.

Hearings were subsequently ordered by the Labor Committee of the House, and Hon. GLENN GRISWOLD, of Indiana; Hon. JOHN LESINSKI, of Michigan; Hon. GEORGE J. SCHNEIDER, of Wisconsin; and Hon. VITO MARCANTONIO were appointed as a special committee to conduct the hearings.

In order that the fullest possible information might be available for intelligent and helpful determination of the proper course to pursue, I prepared an analysis of the contracts between the Navy Department and the New York Shipbuilding Corporation under which the naval vessels at Camden were being constructed. This study was made primarily for the purpose of ascertaining whether any direct or indirect right, power, or authority existed under the terms of the contracts that would enable the Secretary of the Navy to intervene and make a satisfactory settlement of the existing differences and thereby enable work to be resumed.

This analysis, when completed, was submitted, under date of June 25, 1935, to James Mullin, president of Local No. 1, Industrial Union of Marine and Ship Building Workers; John Green, executive secretary; Francis X. McCann, recording secretary; Thomas Gallagher, chairman of negotiating committee, David Cole, E. P. Baker, and John Diehl. A copy was also submitted to Hon. Frederick Von Neida, mayor of the city of Camden; City Commissioner George Brunner; and E. G. C. Bleakly, city counsel, all of whom, together with City Commissioners Harold W. Bennett, Frank J. Hartmann, and Mary Walsh Kobus, had participated in conferences between workers and officials of the company. At a subsequent date a similar analysis was delivered to the special labor committee for use in the conduct of its hearings. A copy of the same is as follows:

JULY 26, 1935.

Hon. GLENN GRISWOLD,
Hon. JOHN LESINSKI,
Hon. GEORGE J. SCHNEIDER,
Hon. VITO MARCANTONIO,
Members of Subcommittee of House Committee on Labor
Investigating the New York Shipbuilding Co. Strike Situation.

GENTLEMEN: I have obtained from the Navy Department copies of two types of contract covering construction work between the United States of America, represented by the Secretary of the Navy, and the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, of Camden, N. J., which said contracts are similar in type to those which cover all of the construction work being done at the present time under Government contracts by the New York Shipbuilding Co.

My examination of these contracts indicates that there are several portions thereof which have a direct relationship to the situation now existing as a result of the cessation of work and the consequent delay in the completion of the contract.

I direct your attention first to contract dated August 22, 1934, which relates to Light Cruiser No. 46 (U. S. S. Phoenix), because it would seem as if this contract contains more provisions giving the Secretary of the Navy opportunity to investigate the situation and take action with reference thereto.

On page 2, under article 3, there is a paragraph requiring a maximum amount of work within the first and second year, reading as follows:

"Owing to the national emergency existing making it imperative that the maximum number of men be returned to gainful employment without delay, and to effectuate the purpose of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, the contractor hereby expressly agrees that from the beginning he will prosecute the work with the utmost vigor and despatch and will make every possible effort, without reference to the otherwise normal rate of progress, to accomplish the maximum amount of work within the first and second year thereof."

The above clause indicates very clearly that the purpose and intent of the work is to provide employment, and under such circumstances seems to me to give the Secretary of the Navy right and authority to make inquiry why there is not a maximum amount of work and to take steps to see that the purpose of the contract in this respect is carried out.

On page 2, under article 3, there is a paragraph requiring prompt action on plans, containing the statement: "Time being of the essence of this contract." As a further indication of a clearly defined purpose to provide a maximum of labor, there will be found on page 2, under article 3, clause (o) relating to labor load, which reads as follows:

"A curve or tabulation by months of the total working force employed in the shops and on the ship, showing the distribution by trades and the split between mechanics and helpers."

And in connection therewith I also call to your attention clause (f), reading as follows:

"A brief chronology of such principal events during construction as, in the opinion of the yard, would be of assistance to an inexperienced organization in planning similar work."

There is a further reference to prompt action on plans on page 3 under Article 3, wherein the words are again used, "Time being of the essence of this contract." I am assuming that this phrase is used not only in connection with the delivery date but also in view of the paragraph to which I have called your attention on page 1 relating to the maximum amount of work within first and second year in order to provide employment.

There are also on page 4 clauses (e) relating to labor load and (f) relating to chronology of building, similar to those above mentioned.

Your attention is also directed to article 11 on page 5, relating to the time of completion and liquidated damages for failure to complete within the required time. This article contains several provisions that have a very direct bearing upon the situation now existing, with particular reference to the delay occasioned by failure to proceed with the work. The clause to which I refer reads as follows:

"(a) Said vessel shall be completed in accordance with the drawings, plans, and specifications, and duly approved changes therein, and ready for delivery within 36 months from the date hereof. In case the completion of the vessel as aforesaid shall be delayed beyond the period herein fixed therefor, plus any extension thereof approved by the Secretary of the Navy, deductions on account thereof shall be made from the price stipulated in this contract, as for liquidated and ascertained damages for each and every day (excepting Sundays) during the continuance of such delay, and until the vessel shall be completed as aforesaid and ready for delivery to the Department, as follows, viz: $300 a day during the first month next succeeding the expiration of said period as extended as aforesaid, and $600 a day thereafter; such amounts to be provisionally withheld from time to time, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, from any payment or payments falling due under this contract after such liquidated damages shall have begun to accrue: Provided, That in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such delay shall not have been due to fire or to unforeseeable causes beyond the control and without the fault or negligence of the contractor, including, but not restricted to, acts of God or of the public enemy, acts of the Government, fires, floods, epidemics, quarantine restrictions, strikes, freight embargoes, and unusually severe weather, and delays of subcontractors due to such causes: Provided, also, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that the contractor ordered all necessary materials at the proper times and used every reasonable effort to obtain delivery of such materials at the time and in the order required to carry on this work properly, but that nondelivery of such materials delayed the completion of the vessel, he may, in his discretion, grant such extension of time for the fulfillment of the contract as he may deem proper under the circumstances.

"(b) In case any question shall arise under this contract concerning delay, such question, with all the facts relating thereto, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Navy for determination; and for all delays that he shall find to be properly attributable to any cause contemplated by the foreging provisions of this article, and to have been delays affecting the completion of the vessels, the Secretary of the Navy shall grant the contractor a corresponding extension of the period prescribed for the completion of the vessel: Provided, That no delay in the completion of the vessel, or the alleged cause or causes thereof, shall be considered by the Secretary of the Navy unless the contractor shall, within 10 days from the time of the occurrence thereof, notify the Department in writing of the facts and circumstances in each case, and where possible of the extent to which the contractor claims that the completion of the vessel is thereby delayed: And provided further, That the said Secretary may, without prejudice to the rights of the contractor, reserve his decision on any or all requests for extension until such time as he may consider desirable, and if deemed expedient until after the completion of the vessel, the work on her in the meantime, in accordance with the contract, plans, and specifications, not to be discontinued or delayed on account thereof."

In connection with article 11 it is also important to read the provisions of article 13, on page 6, which provides for the termination of the contract:

"In case of the failure or omission of the contractor, at any stage of the work prior to its completion, from any cause or causes other than those provided for in article 11 hereof, to go forward with the work and make satisfactory progress toward its completion within the period prescribed, the Secretary of the Navy may, by written notice to the contractor, terminate its right to proceed with the work."

It seems to me that article 21, on page 11, is a very important provision, particularly clause (a), which requires compliance with the National Industrial Recovery Act, and clause (b), which requires compliance with codes, reading as follows:

"(a) The contractor expressly agrees that in carrying out the terms and conditions of this contract, he will be governed by the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act approved June 16, 1933, and such rules and regulations as may be promulgated thereunder by the President or his duly authorized representative, and he will upon request of the Department furnish such evidence as may, in the opinion of the Department, be necessary to show compliance with this requirement.

"(b) The contractor shall comply with each approved code of fair competition to which he is subject, and if he is engaged in any trade or industry for which there is no approved code of fair competition then as to such trade or industry with an agreement with the President under section 4 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act (President's reemployment agreement), and the United States shall have the right to cancel this contract for failure to comply with this provision and make open-market purchases or have the work called for by this contract otherwise performed at the expense of the contractor, and the contractor shall not accept or purchase for the performance of this contract or purchase order or enter into any subcontracts for any articles, materials, or supplies, in whole or in part produced or furnished by any person who shall not have certified that he is complying with and will continue to comply with each code of fair competition which relates to such articles, materials, or supplies, and/or in case there is no approved code for the whole or any portion thereof then to that extent with an agreement with the President as aforesaid."

Notwithstanding the fact that the National Industrial Recovery Act has been declared unconstitutional and codes have fallen as a result thereof, yet I think it might be properly assumed that in view of the fact that the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and codes have been written into the contract, it thereby becomes a part of the contract by agreement between the parties, notwithstanding the Supreme Court has declared such unconstitutional where compulsory action was taken to compel compliance with the codes. The reasoning that would sustain the Court's decision does not necessarily apply to this particular contract for the reason that the parties have agreed to be bound by the provisions.

Your attention is also directed to clause (d) under article 21, which requires the contractor to report monthly as to labor statistics, reading as follows:

"The contractor will report monthly, and will cause all subcontractors to report in like manner, within 5 days after the close of each calendar month, on forms to be furnished by the United States Department of Labor, the number of persons on their respective pay rolls, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the man-hours worked, and the total expenditures for materials. He shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable: Provided, however, That the requirement of this paragraph shall be applicable only for work at the site of the construction project."

Article 25, on page 12, relates to disputes, and reads as follows:

"Except as otherwise specifically provided in this contract, if any doubts or disputes arise concerning any question under this contract or as to anything in the drawings, plans, or specifications, or if any discrepancy appear between said drawings, plans, or specifications and this contract, the matter shall be referred at once to the Secretary of the Navy for determination; and his decision in the premises shall be conclusive and binding upon the parties hereto."

The provisions of article 27, on page 12, relating to adjustment in labor and material costs are very important, because they contemplate adjustments for changes in labor and material costs, such changes involving an increase or decrease in the said contract price, to be determined in accordance with the method provided in the contract. In this connection it is stated as to labor that the proportion of the contract price represented by direct labor is accepted as 30 percent of the contract price, or $3,592,500. And, under clause (b) of article 27, on page 13, there is provided a standard curve of direct labor costs, whereby the same is divided into quotas for each quarter period of the contract, and under clause (c) average hourly earnings are to be compiled as therein provided in order that calculations may be made of the rates of change of average hourly earnings. This article, as I have already said, is extremely important and requires careful study and consideration. It would seem to indicate that there is a purpose and intent to keep labor costs up to a quota and to make such changes as may be necessary. There is, however, a provision in clause (h) which states: "It is expressly agreed that quotas for labor and material will not be altered on account of delays in the completion of the ship", which must be considered in connection with the above. This same clause (h) also provides for determining increases or decreases in contract prices, rates of change, etc., and the conditions under which payments for increases or deductions for decreases in contract prices are to be made by the Secretary of the Navy.

The subject matter of a portion of this clause (h) is so important that I desire to call your particular attention to the exact wording. It will be found at the top of page 14, and reads as follows:

"The Secretary of the Navy reserves the right to substitute for the index for labor or material any other method or index should it at any time, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, appear that the specified indices do not reflect equitably the increases or decreases in costs of material or labor under the contract.

"Should it appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that during the existence of the contract the contractor is making excessive profits from allowances resulting from the application and operation of the provisions for increasing or decreasing labor and material costs, as provided in paragraphs 1 and 2 above, the Secretary of the Navy may convene a board to consider the matter and determine the sum for increased labor and material to be paid the contractor, and the contractor will be bound by the findings of the board upon approval thereof by the Secretary of the Navy."

Article 28, on page 14, relating to limitation of profit has an important bearing owing to the fact that it gives the Secretary of the Navy the right to inquire, to investigate, and examine the books of the contractor with respect to this important matter. This provision is based upon a limitation of profit requiring the payment into the Treasury of any profit in excess of 10 percent of the total contract price. The importance of this provision at the present time arises from the fact that it gives the Secretary of the Navy ample opportunity to make inquiry to determine not only the profits but particularly whether the labor cost is proper in view of the representation that "direct labor is accepted as 30 percent of the contract."

There are many other provisions which probably would have bearing of more or less importance, but the above are the outstanding provisions in the contract to which your attention is particularly directed.

I enclose a complete copy of the contract above mentioned in order that you may have the fullest possible information with respect to the matter.

I am enclosing also contract between the New York Shipbuilding Corporation and the United States of America, represented by the Secretary of the Navy, dated August 3, 1933. It does not seem to be as specific in its details as the provisions in the first-mentioned contract to which I have referred. However, on page 1, under article 1, there is a requirement that there shall be a maximum amount of work within the first and second year, reading as follows:

"Owing to the national emergency existing making it imperative that the maximum number of men be returned to gainful employment without delay, and to effectuate the purpose of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, the contractor hereby expressly agrees that from the beginning he will prosecute the work with the utmost vigor and dispatch and will make every possible effort, without reference to the otherwise normal rate of progress, to accomplish the maximum amount of work within the first and second year thereof."

It will be readily seen from a reading of these contracts that there is a clearly defined purpose in the national emergency now existing to provide work for the unemployed. The provisions of the contracts are adequate and appropriate to enable the Secretary of the Navy to require that work shall proceed and thereby effectuate the purpose of the contracts.

If there is any further assistance that I can give in the matter, do not hesitate to call upon me, as I will be glad to respond.

Very sincerely yours,

CHAS. A. WOLVERTON.

In the same connection, I further pointed out to the congressional committee and emphasized the powers that could be exercised by the Secretary of the Navy to inquire as to the underlying causes of the existing differences, and suggested that Navy, company, and union officials be requested to appear before the special committee in order that the members of the committee might thereby obtain first-hand information as to the causes and reasons that prevented immediate resumption of work. A telegram urging this course of procedure was addressed to the chairman of the committee, reading as follows:

CAMDEN, N. J., July 26, 1935.

Hon. GLENN GRISWOLD,
Chairman Subcommittee,
Care of House Labor Committee,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Detained in Camden for reasons stated in my conversation. Have sent for use before committee today my analysis of Navy construction contracts now in force between Government and New York Shipbuilding Co., which contain provisions which in my opinion give Secretary of Navy ample authority to require resumption of work. Union officials indicate willingness to arbitrate generally along lines indicated by Secretary of Labor, but company has refused. Suggest Navy officials be examined as to failure or unwillingness to utilize power contained in contracts and that company officials, including Metten, Kaltwasser, Manning, and Major Holthauser, be requested to appear before committee on Monday or Tuesday and that union officials be requested to be present at same time, together with Chappell, who has represented Secretary of Labor in negotiations. This will produce quicker and more intelligent results and give better indication of course to be pursued by committee than any other means that I can suggest at this time. Will keep committee advised as to result of court proceedings for restraining injunction which is being heard today by Vice Chancellor Davis in Camden. Kindly wire decision of committee as to hearing to be held as above suggested in order that I may complete arrangements here with interested parties.

CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Member of Congress.

I also suggested to the special labor committee that if, after such hearing, it should appear that there was not sufficient authority in either the Secretary of the Navy or other governmental agency, then appropriate legislation to accomplish the purpose should be recommended by the committee to Congress for immediate adoption.

However, it is my opinion that sufficient authority did exist to enable the Secretary of the Navy to provide adequate relief in a situation that vitally affected the welfare of the community, brought distress to those dependent upon work in the shipyard, delayed and circumvented the national policy of providing adequate national defense, and interfered with the program of work relief.

The primary purpose of the Government entering into these contracts at this time was to provide work for the unemployed. The very first article of the contract required a maximum amount of work within the first and second year. It clearly and specifically set forth the purpose by using language that leaves no doubt of the object to be attained. It says:

Owing to the national emergency existing making it imperative that the maximum number of men be returned to gainful employment without delay, the contractor (New York Shipbuilding Corporation) hereby expressly agrees that from the beginning it will prosecute the work with the utmost vigor and dispatch, and will make every possible effort, without reference to the otherwise normal rate of progress, to accomplish the maximum amount of work within the first and second year.

This language leaves no doubt as to the purpose and intent to provide employment. It therefore created a certain and distinct obligation upon Government authorities to see that the object of the contract was complied with and that any circumstances that prevented or delayed its fulfillment should be properly settled. But notwithstanding this positive obligation, there was no response made by the Navy Department to the appeals of workmen, city officials, and Members of Congress that something be done.

The special committee from the House Committee on Labor worked hard in an endeavor to bring pressure upon all interested parties, particularly the Navy Department, in an effort to break down a hands-off policy and get action in order that a settlement might result. The Navy Department, because of its direct interest in the subject matter, as well as being one of the parties to the contracts, was undoubtedly the most logical department of the Government to take some action. However, 3 months were permitted to pass without any decisive or worth-while action being taken, and the Labor Department, apparently willing to help, seemed handicapped in its effort because of the indecision of the Navy Department.

Under circumstances such as these, with distress among the workmen and their dependents becoming more pronounced, adding daily to the list of those on relief, some action was necessary. Consequently, it was decided to make a direct appeal to the President, and I accordingly joined with the special Labor Committee of the House and representatives of Local No. 1 in this endeavor. My appeal addressed to the President was as follows:

AUGUST 22, 1935.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The President of the United States,
White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I desire to call to your attention a condition which alone seems to prevent acceptance of arbitration as a means of settling the differences now existing between the workers and officials of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, of Camden, N. J.

It appears that in recent days negotiations have been carried on between representatives of the Navy Department, Labor Department, the workers, and the company in an effort to agree upon the questions to be submitted to arbitration, and as a result of such discussions it was agreed by all parties that wages and hours of service, piece or incentive work, and other working conditions should be submitted for decision to a board of arbitration to be selected by you.

It is my further understanding that every subject of arbitration was agreed upon except the question as to whether the present representatives of the workers are their duly authorized agents for the purpose of collective bargaining. The company officials, it is reported, steadfastly refused to accept any arbitration that did not include this question, and the representatives of the workers maintained that throughout the entire strike, continuing for more than 3 months, all negotiations have been carried on between them and representatives of the Government and the company, and that their selection was the result of a direct vote of the workers, and that no doubt, question, or controversy can legitimately be raised as to their representative capacity.

In view of the fact that this one question remains to prevent a complete acceptance of settlement by arbitration, and, thereby enable approximately 4,000 workers to return to work immediately, I appeal to you to use the influence of your high office to the end that this question may be eliminated as a subject of arbitration, and that arbitrators be immediately appointed by you to determine the remaining questions at issue as agreed upon by all parties.

The elimination of this question as a subject of arbitration is in my opinion justified because, (1) the present representatives of the workers are the same individuals who from the first have conducted all negotiations in behalf of the workers, (2) they have reported all negotiations from time to time to meetings of the workers and in each instance their actions have been ratified and their authority to act continued, (3) the Departments of Government, both Navy and Labor, have always negotiated with the present representatives of the workers, and it is inconceivable that they would have done so if not satisfied they were duly authorized representatives, (4) there has never been any evidence to indicate that they were not fully authorized, (5) company officials negotiated with the same individuals prior to the strike being called, without raising any question of authority upon their part, (6) the company in 1934 entered into an agreement with the workers that had been negotiated for by the same organization through the same representatives, (7) the workers do not demand that the company representatives submit to arbitration their right to represent the stockholders of the company, and yet the analogy is plain.

May I further urge that in my opinion there is both a duty as well as a right upon the part of the Government to intervene in this matter. In the first place, the building of the ships is a part of our national defense, and second, their construction at this time is a part of the work program inaugurated to give employment.

I can testify from personal observation and knowledge to the distress that has been occasioned both to workers and the community in general as a result of the cessation of work, and I most sincerely urge that by arbitration or otherwise a means shall be provided for work to be resumed, otherwise the existing distress will become greater and more pronounced.

I therefore respectfully urge that the matter be given such consideration and action as will eliminate the one question above referred to that prevents arbitration and return to work of approximately 4,000 men who are now in great need.

I am, most respectfully and sincerely,

CHAS. A. WOLVERTON.

Late in the evening of the same day on which the appeal to the President had been made it was announced that the President would apopint a board of arbitration with the view of terminating the strike, and I received the following letter from the President with respect to the subject:

Hon. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLVERTON: I have your letter of August 22 with respect to the differences now existing between the workers and officials of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation at the Camden, N. J., yard. As you have perhaps noticed in the paper, on the same day that you wrote to me I issued an Executive order (a copy of which is enclosed) suggesting that both parties submit the questions in dispute, with one or two minor exceptions, to arbitration by a board appointed by me.

It seems to me that the Executive order that I have issued is consistent with the suggestions that you make in your letter, and ought to accomplish the purposes which we both have in mind.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 24, 1935.

The following is a copy of the text of the Executive order issued by the President to make effective the arbitration and to which reference is made in his letter:

EXECUTIVE ORDER

Creating the Camden Board of Arbitration

By virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in me under title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195), as amended by the act of June 14, 1935 (Public Resolution No. 26, 74th Cong.), and other provisions of law, it is hereby ordered as follows:

SEC. 1. The parties to the labor dispute at the Camden, N. J., yard of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, having been unable to reach a mutual agreement with respect to matters in dispute between them, there is hereby created "The Camden Board of Arbitration", which shall be composed of Rear Admiral Henry A. Wiley, United States Navy, retired, chairman; Robert Bruere, of New York City; and Col. Frank P. Douglass, of Oklahoma City. Each member of the Board shall receive necessary travel and subsistence expenses, and, in addition thereto, each member who at the time he is serving on the Board is not receiving any other salary from the United States shall receive $25 per diem.

SEC. 2. The Board shall proceed immediately to investigate, hear evidence, and make findings of fact with a view to formulating, within 60 days, arbitration awards with respect to the following issues in controversy:

(1) The matter of piecework or of incentive work;

(2) The matter of adjustment of wages;

(3) Matters relating to employment and working conditions which have been in dispute in connection with the renewal of the agreement between the parties of May 11, 1934; and

(4) Miscellaneous questions which have been the source of dispute in connection with the recent stoppage of work at the Camden, N. J., yard of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation.

Provided, That the Board, notwithstanding generality of the foregoing language, shall not entertain any request by Local No. 1 of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America for a preferential or closed shop, but in lieu thereof shall include in its award a provision that the New York Shipbuilding Corporation will not fill any vacant or new positions with other persons so long as employees who have been employed since August 1, 1933, are available, are competent, and willing to accept the same positions.

SEC. 3. In order that it may make its awards, the Board—

(a) Shall request the New York Shipbuilding Corporation and Local No. 1 of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America to file with the Board, not later than noon, Tuesday, August 27, 1935, their separate written agreements to abide by the awards of the Board and to embody them in an agreement, to be signed by the parties, to continue until the completion of the existing naval contracts.

(b) Shall request that the New York Shipbuilding Corporation file with it not later than noon, Tuesday, August 27, 1935, a signed agreement that all of the employees upon the pay roll on May 11, 1935, will, upon their application, be taken back without discrimination and under the same hours, wages, and working conditions as prevailed when the strike commenced, and that the corporation will, pending a new agreement with the employees, operate the plant in every respect in accordance with the provisions of the expired agreement of May 11, 1934, except that while the Camden Board of Arbitration is in existence, questions which are not settled by the employees, stewards, foremen, general manager, or vice president, as provided in section 3 of said agreement of May 11, 1934, shall be referred for arbitration to said Camden Board of Arbitration and during such time no other board such as is contemplated in section 4 of said agreement of May 11, 1934, shall be created or shall arbitrate such questions.

(c) Shall request that Local No. 1, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, file with it not later than noon, Tuesday, August 27, 1935, a signed agreement immediately to terminate the strike now in existence: Provided, That no agreement requested by the Board, in accordance with paragraphs (a), (b), or (c) above shall be effective or binding, unless all such requested agreements are filed.

SEC. 4. The Board shall transmit copies of its findings and such awards as it formulates to the President and to the parties to the dispute.

SEC. 5. In order to effectuate the purposes of this order, there is hereby allotted to the Board the sum of $2,500 from the funds appropriated to carry out the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 22, 1935.

In conclusion, I wish to express my favorable opinion of the fortitude, faithfulness, and courage with which the representatives of the workers with whom I had contact untiringly and unceasingly sought to advance the interests of those whom they represented; and also to express appreciation to each and every member of the Special Subcommittee on Labor of the House, with particular reference to Messrs. GRISWOLD, SCHNEIDER, and MARCANTONIO, for the intelligent, sympathetic, patient, and helpful consideration and assistance they each gave to the effort to settle a controversy that was becoming increasingly distressful to the ship workers, their families and dependents.

I sincerely hope that the ultimate result of the arbitration, provided by Presidential order, will be to establish a basis of mutual understanding that will insure a peaceful relationship in the future between the workers and the company.

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until tomorrow, Saturday, August 24, 1935, at 10 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

487. 9340. Also, petition of the Workmen's Circle, Branch No. 989, Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against religious persecutions in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9341. Also, petition of the Jewish Youth Federation, Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against religious persecutions in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9342. Also, petition of the Minneapolis Union Board of Business Agents and Railroad Organizations, Minneapolis, Minn., opposing the religious persecutions in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9343. Also, petition of the Oak Leaf Grange, Harris, Minn., urging the placing of a license on users of butter substitutes and a tax on butter substitutes used and sold in this country; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9344. Also, petition of the Independent Dairy Dealers Association, Minneapolis, Minn., urging Congress to appropriate funds for the purpose of allowing the Federal Trade Commission to hold investigations into the abuses and unfair practices in the Minneapolis milkshed area; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9345. Also, petition of the Maccabees, Flour City Tent, No. 72, Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against the religious persecutions in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9346. Also, petition of Division 912, Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen, Minneapolis, Minn., opposing the railroad retirement bills (S. 3151 and H. R. 8651) and favoring the committee bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9347. Also, petition of the Minneapolis Lodge, No. 271, B'nai B'rith, Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against Jewish persecutions in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9348. Also, petition of L. S. Donaldson Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., opposing measures restricting the Federal Housing Administration in the work in encouraging distribution of home accessories; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

9349. Also, petition of the Twin City Committee, St. Paul, Minn., urging the enactment of the amended Wagner-Crosser railroad retirement bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9350. Also, petition of St. Paul Chapter of the American Jewish Congress, St. Paul, Minn., protesting against the persecution of religious and racial groups, as well as of liberal organizations in Germany, by the German Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9351. By Mr. SCHNEIDER: Memorial of the Wisconsin Legislature, asking Congress to formulate a program by which drought relief loans may be repaid in work or services or in a manner other than by cash payment; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9352. By Mr. SHANLEY: Petition of the American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Connecticut, Hartford, Conn., Evelyn S. Parker, department chairman of Americanism; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

9353. Also, petition of the Warsover Relief Society, I. Joseph, secretary, New Haven, Conn.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9354. By Mr. SAUTHOFF: Joint resolution of the State of Wisconsin, relating to the replacement of the broken bridge across the Mississippi River at La Crosse; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9355. By Mr. WITHROW: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to the replacement of the broken bridge across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9356. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to relief for farmers in drought areas; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7623) to amend section 616 of the Revenue Act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HAYDEN submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO ENLARGEMENT OF THE YELLOWSTONE AND GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARKS—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. ROBINSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I call it to the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the resolution read?

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the resolution be read, please.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 199), as follows:

Resolved, That the amount allotted for the investigation of the proposed enlargement of the Yellowstone Park, and the activities in the Jackson Hole region as thereto related, by authority of Resolution No. 226, agreed to February 11, 1933, be, and hereby is, increased to the extent of $310 to pay outstanding obligations incurred in pursuance of the purposes of said resolution to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The late Senator Kendrick, of Wyoming, was chairman of the committee under the resolution referred to. At the time of his death there was a balance of the amount stated in the resolution due Miss Minerva V. Scott for services rendered the committee. The claim has been audited and the vouchers have been presented. This small expansion of the amount is necessary in order to discharge the obligation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, does the Senator from Arkansas ask immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. Let it go to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

DAILY LIFE OF SENATORS—ARTICLE BY SENATOR ASHURST

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article published in the Washington Herald of December 16, 1923, by Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, depicting the daily life of Senators.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Dec. 16, 1923]

SENATOR HENRY F. ASHURST: DETAILS ABSORB VAST AMOUNT OF LEGISLATORS' TIME; THEY NEED MORE OPPORTUNITY FOR STUDY AND SEARCH—"THE PRESIDENT, CABINET MEMBERS, BUREAU CHIEFS AND MEMBERS OF FEDERAL COMMISSIONS MAY ADHERE MEASURABLY TO A SCHEDULE, BUT SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES FIND IT IMPOSSIBLE TO DO SO"

By HENRY F. ASHURST, Senator from Arizona

Public men in the United States, particularly our Presidents, Cabinet Ministers, Governors of States, Senators and Representatives in Congress, age rapidly nowadays and show wear and tear more quickly than do those of Europe. A variety of factors contributes to this premature fading out and oozing away of the vitality of American statesmen.

Amongst the most prominent of these factors are: The absurdly extreme anxiety of present-day officials to maintain their prestige or their "hold" on popularity; their constant strain of guarding their emotions; their accepting many invitations to deliver speeches when they should attend to public business or seek repose; the consciousness that they are serving a nervous and hurrying people who are hotly pursuing material success and who (whilst generously disposed toward those who fairly serve) demand quick "results" and unceremoniously displace the official who seems slow in "bringing home the bacon." Many American officials are harassed by the delusion that some fortuitous event may continue them in office or transfer them to a more attractive one. Most debilitating of all, however, is their inveterate fear that some unfortunate phrase, some act, innocent enough at the time, may at a later date assume an awkward posture or impale them and prove deadly to their ambitions.

All this burning up of their nervous energy is going on amidst their honest efforts to keep abreast with their enormous tasks.

Not a few public men of ability and character waste time and strength in a refined desire to please many and offend none, hence they are overtimid; are desperate to avoid emphasis and final decisions, and thus they whittle away advantages and qualify their speeches so much as to make them colorless.

Many persons nowadays have a nebulous idea that the Government could (in some way, they know not how), if it were not careless or heartless, make each citizen opulent or at least relieve each citizen from all the annoyances that betide mortal destiny, and but few—very few—public men will face the disfavor that flows from disillusioning those persons who hug such a phantom to their breast.

The President, Cabinet members, bureau chiefs, and members of Federal commissions may adhere measurably to a schedule, but Senators and Representatives find it impossible to do so.

SENATOR'S RESOLUTION

"I will divide my time for interviews into 10-minute periods from 9 to 11 a. m., I will read my mail and sign replies thereto at a stated time, and I will reserve to myself at least 2 hours each day during which I shall study some of the ever-present and complex problems of the Nation's life", says Senator Punctilio, who held his place for years at the head of a large manufacturing concern because he knew how to make every minute count.

"No idler, no lobbyist shall interrupt me in my vital work", says Colonel Plunger, noted for his precision and courage with our A. E. F., and just elected to the House of Representatives.

You will soon sing a different tune, Senator Punctilio. We are waiting, Colonel Plunger, to see how your fine plan turns out.

Senator Punctilio reaches his office in the Senate Office Building at 8 a. m. (early for Washington), where his secretary lays before him 120 letters, 8 telegrams, and 10 newspapers that came in this morning. The Senator begins jauntily to dispose of these letters and has dictated replies to 17 thereof when a messenger from his party leader summons him to a caucus to be held immediately where final action will be taken on a party measure. Will Senator Punctilio ignore the caucus? He will not. Before leaving his office his secretary hands him an editorial from the Daily Fogg, which he thinks "misquotes him", but which in truth printed what, in his haste, he actually said yesterday.

While at caucus his secretary sends him a note advising that a delegation of biogenetists from his State is at his office to solicit his vote on a bill that soon comes up. The doorkeeper of the caucus then calls him to the phone where rich young Mr. Speedsome Highlow, from the Senator's State, urges him to come at once to the District jail, where Mr. Highlow is now confined for repeated violations of the speed limit in his high-power automobile. When the Senate convenes at 12 o'clock the opposition will attempt to bring up a bill obnoxious to his constituents and he must be present and exhibit at least a faint glimmer of familiarity with the provisions of this bill.

"POLLING COMMITTEE"

The caucus adjourns; Senator Punctilio starts to his office but meets Senator Obsession, who is "polling the committee" to secure favorable report on a pet bill; at Senator Obsession's request he examines the papers, finds the subject unimportant, begs to be excused from joining in favorable report until he shall have examined further, but says Senator Obsession, "I will step into your office now and explain the bill to you in detail."

"Certainly, do come in", says polite Senator Punctilio; buzz goes the Senate bell; the Senate is calling for a quorum, so they go to Chamber.

Now he will listen to the debate. Oh, will he? It is now 12: 10, he has replied to but 17 of the 120 letters which came this morning, and another bulky mail was delivered at 12 o'clock which he has not as yet even seen, much less answered. "But," thinks Senator Punctilio, "I will have my secretary and my stenographer both come to the marble room and bring all my mail where I can examine it and also keep an ear to the proceedings in the Chamber."

Foolish Senator Punctilio. The page boys know where you are, for just at this point the page brings him the card of Mr. Author, a tourist, who presents a letter of introduction from one of Senator Punctilio's best friends at home, who urges that Mr. Author be given especial consideration.

It is now incumbent upon the Senator to take Mr. and Mrs. Author to the Senators' gallery, explain the modus operandi of the Senate, and point out the celebrities—wise and otherwise. After 10 minutes of this he is again with his secretary and they make some headway on the correspondence until the offensive bill comes up. He then muddles through the debate.

It is now 2:30, another mail has come in, and the Senator suddenly recalls that he has had no lunch and that on last Sunday whilst at the art gallery Mr. Ghandy, one of his constituents, made him promise that he would meet Mr. Ghandy at the State Department in the office of passport control at 3 p. m. today, as Mr. Ghandy desires to go abroad but has no certificate of his birth in the United States, hence the Department must have the Senator's affidavit as to Mr. Ghandy's nativity.

MUST HEAR EVERYBODY

When Senator Punctilio returns to Capitol Hill he is met in the Senate reception room by Mr. G. O. Gettit, of the Daily Reminder, who asks the Senator's view on a vital subject upon which the Senator must not exhibit indifference. He was not ready to commit himself on this subject now, but must not be quoted as "declining to be interviewed."

His party whip now tells him that the Committee on Military Affairs, of which he is a member, must have his presence as it will vote within 5 minutes upon the promotion of Major Domo and that the State militia is opposing this promotion.

On his way to the Military Committee room he is accosted by a representative of the Seamen's Union who tells him that pelagic sealing amongst our seal herd at the Pribilof Islands must be stopped or our seal herd there will soon be extinct. Senator Punctilio thinks he knows what "pelagic sealing" is, but he says to himself, "Where in Sam Hill are the Pribilof Islands?"

He remembers how the Duke of Newcastle was lampooned, when he was reported to have said: "Cape Breton, really an island; how wonderful; show it to me on the map; so it is, sure enough"; therefore, he will make no untoward utterance but assures the seaman that he will "give the subject the attention which its importance deserves."

At the door of the Military Committee room he is waylaid by an anxious political lieutenant who again warns him, as he warned him Saturday, that tomorrow the committee on Interstate Commerce, of which Senator Punctilio is a member, will consider an amendment to the Esch-Cummins railroad law, proposing to restore to the States the right to fix railroad rates on intrastate business, and that the manufacturing concerns and large business generally are opposed to such amendment, but that the resentment in his own State against the Esch-Cummins bill is strong enough to be seriously considered, and that his vote upon this amendment will be narrowly watched, as it will determine whether he is veering toward the standpatters or is adhering to the progressives, whose votes he obtained in his last campaign.

THEN BILLS TO READ

Senator Punctilio is a member of the following committees: Education and Labor, Finance, Foreign Relations, Interstate Commerce, Military Affairs, Patents.

Pending before these committees are bills aggregating 456 in number; he is also a member of five subcommittees holding hearings from time to time which he is expected to attend. On the Senate calendar are 398 bills reported favorably and subject to call any Monday morning, but he will not admit that he has not read one-tenth of these bills.

At the military committee room he is called to the telephone by his daughter, who tells him to come with her and mama to a lawn fete given by Mr. and Mrs. Secretary of the Exterior and that it would be inelegant for them to go without him. He orders his car, joins his family, and arrives at the lawn fete as the guests are leaving the grounds.

Reaching home, his secretary phones that he must not forget the Kiwanis Club banquet at 8 p. m. tonight, where he is to speak on the hydroelectric possibilities of Great Falls in Potomac River. Going home at midnight he reproaches himself that his speech was weak and inconclusive; his day has been frittered away with chips and whetstones; he has made mud pies; he has touched nothing deeply; he has begun much, but will finish nothing.

This condition exists whilst the days glide into months and the months glide into years, and thus Senator Punctilio, who could be useful to this Republic (he is a man of large executive ability, much force, broad vision, and not a few statesmanlike qualities), is only carrying around a little fork with which he is constantly picking up small rags of somebody else's self-interest. He spins much, but weaves nothing. He has had no time to study and search for truths that make nations great or peoples happy.

His schedule may be lived up to only by his refusal to visit departments or to receive cards brought to him at the Senate Chamber, and when a Senator or Representative adopts this policy the rumor of his "top-lofticallity" in a magnified form reaches his constituents, who are told that in Washington he is a "buttoned-up, cold, selfish recluse, who is neglecting the wants and wishes of his constituents."

COLONEL BUSY, TOO

Colonel Plunger jumps like a grasshopper from an interview with the Postmaster General to the Bureau of Standards, 4 miles away. Six different men expect him to recommend them for postmaster at Hickville, and whilst the colonel proved himself to be a hero at the Argonne, he cannot place 6 pegs in 1 hole; his truth-telling mortally offends three of the applicants when he writes them they are not competent.

In the town of Bargy Rusaert, in his district, business has been slack ever since the sawmills moved away 10 years ago, although the selection by the Government 5 years ago of Bargy Rusaert as a place for target practice and explosive testing stimulated business there somewhat.

The Boosters Club at Bargy Rusaert brings forth a heaven-born idea: An explosive-testing and target-practice range brought a disbursement of Federal money to Bargy Rusaert; therefore, why not a large hospital there for neuropsychiatric ex-service men? Such a hospital would carry a large personnel and much Federal money would be disbursed there each month.

Resolutions are passed by the Boosters Club and Colonel Plunger is called upon to secure this hospital. He replies that Bargy Rusaert is not a suitable place for a hospital as the nerves of the patients there who require quietude would be shattered by the volleys of the guns on the target range and by the repercussions of the explosive testing.

Most of the members of the Boosters Club clearly see the point, but some of them declare that whilst Colonel Plunger is a gallant soldier he is a failure when it comes to bringing home the bacon.

He soon perceives that the party caucus is dominated by the chairmen of seven or eight important committees, and that he must be in the House about 20 consecutives years to reach the head of an important committee.

His superb intellect and his vitality are exercised, not in concentrated attention to subjects of import to the Nation at large, as politicians in his own party, important men that may not be denied an audience, break in upon him with details that a competent clerk could dispose of within 10 minutes.

The above is not what happened to one Senator or to one Representative on one day; it is not remote from what happens to many Senators and Representatives every day.

RECOVERY FROM MARCH 1933 TO JUNE 1935

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an informative statement on the subject of recovery during the period from March 1933 to June 1935.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECOVERY—MARCH 1933 TO JUNE 1935

I. SUMMARY

The record of business recovery since the early months of 1933 is an impressive one.

The rate of activity in the basic industries has quickened until a substantial part of the ground lost during the previous drastic recession has been regained.

Increased output has been accompanied by a remarkable recovery in consumer income, evidenced primarily in expanding pay rolls, cash farm income, dividends, and profits, and expressed also in the increasing volume of retail trade in both city and country areas.

Our foreign trade, while still hampered by international uncertainties and by the reduced purchasing power and trade restrictions of our overseas customers, nevertheless has made appreciable gains since the depths of the depression.

The better tone of business sentiment has been reflected in the stock market where successive new highs for the recovery period have been registered during 1935. Moreover, during recent weeks shares of the basic industries, such as steel and heavy equipment, have been taking the lead.

The pronounced decline in interest rates and the healthy condition of the money market indicate ability to support a considerable volume of new capital issues. The large volume of refunding operations that are being conducted at very low interest rates are evidence of the magnitude of the funds seeking employment and of investment confidence. These factors, as well as improved profit possibilities, may well be the forerunners of large-scale new investment.

An important factor in the improvement recorded since March 1933 has been the influence of vigorous administration measures aimed directly at the correction of certain maladjustments in the price structure. As a result of the policies adopted, a reduction of price disparities and a lift in prices generally has taken place. This contribution to the renewed flow of economic activity has promoted, in particular, a more equitable exchange basis between the various producing groups in the country. Higher relative prices for farm products have given farmers more money to spend for manufactured articles, thus aiding the expansion of factory pay rolls and so bringing more money into urban as well as rural areas.

II. THE RECORD

1. Basic industry

Total industrial production: Looking first at the record of the basic industries, we find that industrial production as a whole, as measured in the Federal Reserve Board adjusted index, rose from 59 percent of its 1923–25 average in March 1933 to 86 percent in June 1935. This represented a gain of 46 percent over the 27 months' period. Manufacturing production during the same period gained 50 percent, while mineral output, which had held up much better during the depression than manufacturing, rose 21 percent.

During the first 6 months of this year, the index of industrial production averaged 87 percent, as compared with 65 in 1932, 70 in 1933, and 83 in 1934. Manufacturing production averaged 86 percent against 64 and 82, respectively, in the like periods of 1932 and 1934.

Durable and nondurable goods industries: By June of this year, output in the manufacturing group representing durable goods was more than double the very low volume to which it had fallen in March 1933. Nondurable goods, including such products as textiles, shoes, and foods, advanced 21 percent in output between March 1933 and June 1935, although the losses of this group during the depression were not so heavy as those of the capital goods industries.

Employment: Matching the gains in output, total factory employment, which had fallen to 59 percent of its 1923–25 level in March 1933, rose to 80 percent in June of this year. During the first 6 months of 1935 the index averaged 81 percent, as compared with an average of only 64 percent during the year 1932, a gain of 26 percent.

2. Individual industries

Automobiles: Turning to individual industries, we find the most spectacular recovery registered by automobile output. Production in the United States during the first 6 months of this year reached 2,262,000 cars and trucks, a first-half total which has been bettered only twice—in 1926 and again in 1929.

Consumer purchases have kept pace with rising output. More cars were bought in June and July of this year than in any like period since 1929. Particularly encouraging has been the recent gain in truck sales, reflecting the increased desire and ability of business men to replace or enlarge their business equipment.

Steel: Recovery in the steel industry has been substantial. The 18,295,000-ton steel-ingot output of the first 7 months of 1935 is 2.3 percent greater than the like period of 1934, sharply higher than the January-July total in 1933, and 42 percent greater than the 13,228,000 tons produced during the entire year 1932. Moreover, in recent weeks the rate of operation in the steel industry has accelerated, the New York Times index of steel-mill activity, adjusted for seasonal variations, reaching 70 percent of the estimated normal in the week ending August 3, compared to 40 percent on the corresponding date in 1934.

Machine tools: Additional proof of the recovery which is under way in the heavy industries is the reappearance in recent months of purchases for the replacement and improvement of capital equipment. The machine-tool industry, although in itself only a small portion of the total machinery industry, is nevertheless a sensitive indicator of this revived demand. The index of new machine-tool orders, which during 1932 averaged only 20 percent of the 1926 level, moved up to an average of 68.5 percent during the first 6 months of 1935. Although the automobile industry is reported to have been the chief domestic buyer, orders are recently stated to have been coming in from a broad industrial field.

Building construction: Building construction, which lagged behind other industries in the recovery, has recently given strong evidence of revival.

Compared with the very low level reached in the first 6 months of 1933, building construction showed an advance of 61 percent for the first half of 1935. The improved condition of residential construction is apparent from the value of residential contracts awarded in 37 eastern States, which totaled $208,000,000 during the first 6 months of 1935, as compared with only $113,000,000 during the first half of 1933 and $132,000,000 in the like period of 1934. Although these totals are still extremely low relative to 1929, it is encouraging that gains in residential construction are becoming more pronounced each month, with the result that the F. R. B. adjusted index placed residential construction in June 1935 at 23, as compared with only 8 in March 1933.

A sound basis for continued gains in new home building is provided by the prevailing low-money rates and by the current rise in rents, underway now for 16 months. Likewise encouraging to residential building is the improvement of the mortgage market, as a result, in part, of the activities of Federal housing agencies. The revival in the mortgage market is reflected in the increased investment by insurance companies in urban and rural mortgages during recent months, although the proportion of their funds placed in these types of investment is still very much lower than it was during the predepression years.

Consumer-goods industries: While revival in the basic capital goods industries, essential to reemployment in volume, has been substantial, the recovery registered in the nondurable consumer-goods industries also presents a heartening picture.

Cotton consumption amounted to 2,900,000 million bales during the first 6 months of this year, as against 2,400,000 in the like period of 1932, a gain of 22 percent.

The wool industry, which has made remarkable strides during the current year, showed an increase in output of 153 percent between the first 6 months of 1932 and the same period in 1935. In addition to this showing, as compared with depression years, wool consumption for the year to date has exceeded the like 1929 consumption figures by a substantial amount.

Gasoline production of 180,600,000 barrels during the first 5 months of this year is also above the 1929 comparable output, pushing rapidly forward from 169,000,000 barrels a year ago and 167,000,000 in 1932.

There were 183,800,000 pairs of boots and shoes produced during the first half of 1935, a figure slightly under last year's comparable total, but 23 percent above the output for the first 6 months of 1932.

Electric power and electrical goods: Reflecting the recovery which has taken place over a wide field of economic activity, electric power output this year has reached a new high for the recovery period and has almost touched the 1929 rate of output. While the total demand for electricity fell off relatively little during the depression, due in part to continued growth of household consumption, the recent gains have been due to greater industrial as well as domestic use of electric power. Paralleling the increased output, orders booked for electrical goods, which fell off 78 percent during the depression, have advanced 69 percent between the second quarter of 1933 and the like quarter of 1935.

3. Consumer income and consumer purchases

Pay rolls: Examining the evidence of increased consumer income which has accompanied the brisker pace of industrial activity, we find that factory pay rolls, which stood at only 37 percent of the 1923–25 level in March 1933, by June of this year had advanced to 67 percent. For the first 6 months of 1935 they have averaged 69 percent, as compared with only 46 percent during the year 1932.

Farm income: Farm cash income, which had fallen to a depression low of $4.3 billion in 1932, rose to $6.4 billion in 1934, and is estimated this year at $6.7 billion. (Government payments are included in 1934 and 1935 figures.)

National income: Preliminary official estimates of the Department of Commerce place the national income paid out in 1934 at $49,440,000,000, an increase of 11 percent over 1933. A series relating to national income paid out, calculated monthly by the Cleveland Trust Co. on a yearly average basis, dropped almost without interruption from October 1929 to March 1933. From that month to the end of 1934 there was an increase of 30 percent, and the total annual income in 1934 is estimated by this organization as showing a gain of 15 percent over the year 1933. A calculation of national income produced, made by the National Industrial Conference Board on a somewhat different basis, shows an increase of 14 percent in 1934 over the previous year.

Purchases: Expanding consumer purchases reflect the great increase which has been taking place in individual incomes. The renewed demand for automobiles has already been mentioned. Electric-refrigerator sales during the first 5 months of 1935 were 16 percent higher than in the like period of 1934. During the entire year 1934, one and four-tenths million units were sold, as compared with only one million in 1933.

Reflecting largely the increased purchases of nondurable consumer goods, department store sales by June of this year had risen 40 percent from their March 1933 level. During the first 6 months of 1935 they have averaged 21 percent higher than during the first 6 months of 1933. Sales in rural districts during the first half of 1935 averaged 76 percent of 1929, as compared with 47 percent in the like period 2 years ago.

4. Foreign trade

Expanding foreign as well as domestic trade has accompanied an increased volume of industrial production. Our total exports, which had fallen off to $1.6 billion in 1932, rose to $2.1 billion by 1934, a gain of 32 percent. Our imports rose from $1.3 billion to $1.6 billion between 1932 and 1934.

5. Finance

Stock prices: Supplementing the evidence of increased output is the record of stock prices and corporation profits. During recent months the course of stock prices, as represented by the Dow-Jones index of 30 leading industrial shares, has been steadily upward, reaching successive new highs for the recovery period. This movement has obtained support from the profits records of leading corporations for 1934 and for the current year to date.

Corporation earnings: According to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, the net profits of 659 corporations amounted to $911.1 million in 1934, as compared with $598.9 million in the preceding year and $41.2 million in 1932. It should be noted, however, that the profits of this group amounted to $2,693.8 million in 1929.

Available data indicate continued improvement in 1935. Moody's estimates that earnings of 105 leading industrial companies were up 30 percent in the first quarter of this year and 20 percent in the second, as compared with the like periods of 1934. Standard Statistics estimates corporation earnings on the basis of 136 company reports up 27 percent the first 6 months of this year as compared with last. The National City Bank reports net profits of 260 corporations at $313,000,000 for the first two quarters of 1935, against $265,500,000 a year ago.

Corporate issues: New capital issues, while still low, give evidence that idle capital is beginning to find employment, though not yet and in a volume comparable to predepression years. Domestic corporation stock and bond flotations of new issues in the first 6 months of 1935 were 69 percent above new issues in the same period of 1933.

A refunding movement, the logical forerunner of substantial new investment for capital purposes, has been stimulated by falling bond yields. The average yield of 60 domestic corporation bonds in the first 6 months of 1935 was nearly 30 percent under the average for the first half of 1933. Corporations taking advantage of the favorable conditions in the capital market refunded $469,000,000 stock, bond, and note issues in the first 6 months of 1935. The comparable figure for 1934 was only $102,000,000.

United States Government finance: During the first half of 1935 the Treasury refunded $5,888,000,000 of its obligations, including Treasury bills, and floated $524,000,000 in new securities. United States Treasury bond yields averaged 2.69 percent in the first 6 months of 1935, compared with 3.64 percent in the same period of 1929 and 3.91 percent in the first half of 1932. The refunding operations, combined with the more favorable rates at which new securities have been issued, served to reduce the average annual rate of interest on the public debt to 2.715 percent in June 1935 from 3.181 percent in June of 1934 and 3.946 percent in June 1929.

6. Prices

In March 1933 the wholesale prices of farm products had suffered a depression loss of 57 percent from 1926 levels, whereas the average wholesale prices of commodities other than farm products and foods had dropped off only 34 percent. By June of this year, however, the wholesale prices of both farm products and commodities other than those of farm origin stood at 78 percent of 1926 levels. Meanwhile the prices received by farmers at the farm advanced 89 percent between March 1933 and June 1935. Over this period the ratio of prices received and prices paid by farmers has improved greatly, rising from 55 in March 1933 to 81 in July of this year—a remarkable reduction of price disparities over a comparatively short period.

CURRENCY MANAGEMENT

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. James H. Ryan, Jr., together with the accompanying papers.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE FOR THE NATION,
New York, August 21, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT J. BULKLEY,
Banking and Currency Committee United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BULKLEY: Please permit us, from a business viewpoint, to endorse and supplement the letter of July 15, 1935, addressed to all Members of the Senate by the five national farm organizations.

The farm organizations simply asked Congress to provide the mechanism which England has found essential for currency management. The best short statement of the case for a managed currency is in the June-July issue of the Monthly Review of the world's largest bank, the Midland, of London, of which the Right Honorable Reginald McKenna, formerly chancelor of the exchequer, is chairman. For the information of Congress and the American public will you please introduce the complete text into the RECORD, with our added comment on page 4 of the reproduction?

We do not take the position that agriculture is always asking for something and is never satisfied. Agriculture is always the first victim of a major depression. Farmers of the United States lost $22,000,000,000 of their normal income in the last 5 years—a levy of destruction upon one group of our citizens equivalent to the total national debt in 1933.

As a group of business men, we realize that we can have no real recovery until agriculture's power to buy from industry is restored. In our own interest as well as in the national interest we appeal to Congress to give painstaking study to the request of the farm organizations.

We believe, with them, that Congress should rise to its constitutional duty to regulate the value of money. We believe that depression and unemployment were caused primarily by the abnormal buying power of gold, brought about by world conditions. We believe that the United States could have escaped, as did some other nations, the worst effects of the world-wide depression if Congress had taken steps earlier to reduce the gold value of the dollar.

Secretary Morgenthau, appearing before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Banking and Currency on March 1, 1934, presented a chart showing how farm prices had risen almost parallel to the rise in the dollar price of gold. Yet he pleaded for Congress to refrain for at least another 8 months from establishing some standard and creating an administrative agency to which it could delegate its constitutional function to regulate the value of money.

Seventeen months have passed, and still the power to regulate the value of money—the highest act of national sovereignty—is left by Congress uncoordinated, partly in the hands of the Executive and partly in the hands of the Federal Reserve Board, with no mandate from Congress as to what the value of the dollar shall be.

When the decision was made to abandon the President's 1933 monetary policy and return to a $35 fixed price of gold, the United States abandoned the recovery measure which is mainly responsible for restoring prosperity to England and her "Sterlingaria" one-third of the world. England manages money but does not attempt to have the Government manage everything else.

The United States abandons its dollar to world forces acting upon the value of gold, and attempts to manage everything else.

Instead of following England's example, the United States accepted the advice of Britain's semi-Socialist economist, John Maynard Keynes, to unbalance our Budget and substitute for private enterprise a public-works expenditure at the rate of $400,000,000 a month.

England changes her price of gold every day. John Maynard Keynes, in his Agenda for the President, point 8, said, "Cease manipulating the price of gold."

England balances her budget. John Maynard Keynes tells us to keep our Budget unbalanced. Thus we pile up a menacing burden of debt that would cripple the international power of the United States if any war danger arose.

The Banking Act of 1935, as originally drafted, gave the administration coercive control over the Federal Reserve banks to finance deficits that must arise from the Keynes spending plan of recovery. Is it better for us to follow what England does for herself, or the advice of her semi-Socialist economist, which she rejected?

England's greatest increases in exports of manufactured goods have gone to sterlingaria agricultural countries which, under her guidance, raised their prices of gold to equivalents of $45 to $50 an ounce or more.

Brazil has increased its price of gold over the old parity by 145 percent, the United States by 69 percent. In 4 years Brazil has trebled its cotton production, while the United States has lost one-third of its cotton production. From 57 percent the United States has dropped to 43 percent of world production—largely because this administration abandoned its monetary policy of 1933.

The future of the cotton-growing and textile industries of the United States is bound up with currency legislation. These industries are in grave jeopardy. Our position as the world's dominant cotton-growing Nation is already undermined because of the failure of Congress to lift the strait-jacket of monetary disadvantage from American producers.

Here is the inescapable fact that must be dealt with:

A bale of cotton was exchangeable in Liverpool for 5½ ounces of gold between 1921 and 1929. Now it brings only 1.7 ounces. As the value of gold went up the amount of gold received for basic commodities like cotton decreased.

4.6 ounces of gold bought a bale of cotton in 1929.
3.1 ounces of gold bought a bale of cotton in 1930.
2.1 ounces of gold bought a bale of cotton in 1931.
1.6 ounces of gold bought a bale of cotton in 1932.
1.6 ounces of gold bought a bale of cotton in 1933.
1.8 ounces of gold bought a bale of cotton in 1934.
1.7 ounces of gold buys a bale of cotton in 1935.

Manifestly, if we keep the same amount of gold in the dollar, this makes cotton worth fewer dollars.

Why should we allow irrational world forces acting on gold to cut to one-third or one-half the prices received by a million families growing cotton in our South? We can prevent it by simply adjusting the amount of gold in our dollar enough so that the smaller number of ounces will still make as many dollars as formerly. That is what the countries have done that follow England's managed-currency policy. They have raised their prices of gold per ounce enough to offset the reduced number of ounces of gold now given in exchange for all basis commodities. In this way they have rebuilt normal basic commodity prices, removed the chief cause of their depression, and insured their recovery.

The countries whose legislative and financial leaders were wise in monetary matters did this promptly and fully. Their farmers prosper. Instead of A. A. A. restrictions, the crossroads of the Argentine are placarded: "Farmers, your day of opportunity is here! Plant more wheat! Grow more cotton!"

The Central Hanover Bank of New York reports—

"Argentina * * * is 'sitting on top of the world.'

"To appreciate how remarkably good conditions in the Argentine are as compared with the United States, suffice it to say that there is practically no unemployment in the country (there are always, even in boom times, some 300,000 unemployed in the entire country), no labor or political troubles, and the Government's budget is practically balanced. In 1934 the Government had a deficit in its budget of only about 18 percent, of total revenues, due in part to amortization of the public funded debt, and also to investments in productive public works. And for relief purposes, the Government disbursed during 1934 slightly over one-half of 1 percent of her total revenues."

Why? Because the Government and the bankers of Argentina had financial insight. They did what the Congress of the United States has neglected to do. Beginning in December 1929 they raised the peso price of the ounce of gold as fast as the value of gold went up, and the amount of gold exchangeable for cotton, wheat, and other basic products went down. Thus they avoided the destructive price collapse for their farmers and basic producers, whose buying power for industry was never undermined to cause nation-wide unemployment, as in the United States.

During the period 1929–35 the Argentine peso price of gold corresponded to the following dollar prices:

December 1929	$21.50
June 1930	23.56
December 1930	26.46
June 1931	28.32
December 1931	34.11
June 1932	34.11
December 1932	34.11
June 1933	34.52
December 1933	41.13
June 1934	44.03
December 1934	45.06
April 1935	46.09

Increasing the price of gold has brought prosperity to Brazil as to the Argentine. The President of Brazil recently stated to the press that his country has no unemployment. The Central Hanover Bank, in its recent publication on "The Cotton Empire of Brazil", states that a "contributory factor in Brazil's cotton progress has been the depreciation of the milreis, currently quoted at about United States $0.054 as against United States $0.08 2 years ago.

The Brazilian price of gold in milreis today is the equivalent of $50 an ounce. When an American farmer sells in world markets cotton enough to exchange for an ounce of gold, he gets $35, or 12 cents a pound of cotton. The Brazilian cotton producer gets, for the same cotton, the same weight of gold. But his government has increased the price of gold, in milreis, so that he receives, in the money which represents his debt-paying and domestic purchasing power, as much as American cotton growers would receive in their money if the United States price of gold were $50 an ounce instead of $35, and the American price of cotton were 18 cents a pound.

United States cotton production is being undermined because Congress, in the Gold Act of February 1, 1934, and the President in his subsequent proclamation, decreed that the cotton producer of the United States should receive for the 1.7 ounces of gold he gets for his bale of cotton, $35, or only $59.50 a bale, while Brazil was wise enough to raise its price of gold so that, despite the fact that a small quantity of gold now represents an abnormally large quantity of basic products, this small quantity of gold would convert into enough Brazilian milreis to keep the price of cotton and basic products at normal levels.

By the Banking Act of 1935 Congress has failed to recover and exercise its constitutional function to regulate the value of money. It has condemned the cotton-growing South to low prices, low purchasing power, and loss of its foreign markets. It has likewise condemned all American producers of basic commodities whose prices are determined by the buying power of gold in international markets.

Before the United States can have assured recovery, Congress must exercise its constitutional function to regulate the value of money. It must establish some standard by which the value of the dollar can be regulated. And Congress must create its own administrative agency to carry out its mandate.

Mandatory restoration of a price level that will bring costs and prices into equilibrium and assure a national income sufficient to liquidate public and private debts is essential for agriculture and industry alike. An effective administrative mechanism for managing the currency is indispensable.

The committee for the Nation, cooperating with Frank A. Vanderlip, proposed such a mechanism in the bill for a Federal monetary authority. This would give the United States a monetary mechanism as effective as that created by Great Britain for its Empire and the sterling-bloc countries. These now include, according to Bank for International Settlements classification: Argentina, Australia, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Denmark, Egypt, Estonia, Finland, Great Britain, India, Irish Free State, Japan, Norway, British Crown Colonies, New Zealand, Paraguay, Portugal, Siam, South Africa, Straits Settlements, and Sweden. In addition, Great Britain is now moving to bring China into the sterling group.

We shall renew before the Congress, at its session next January, our petition for enactment of currency legislation that will put the United States on a basis of equality with sterlingaria.

Further to clarify public and congressional thinking on the problems of how to attain the monetary stability which all the world desires, we refer to the accompanying "Appendix III: Variations in the Value of Gold", in the pamphlet "The Mechanics of Managed Currency", by George Jackson Eder, published by the Committee for the Nation in April 1935.

COMMITTEE FOR THE NATION,
JAMES H. RAND, JR., Chairman.

[From the Midland Bank Monthly Review, London, June-July 1935]

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF PROGRESS IN CURRENCY AND BANKING

It is characteristic of human experience that changes taking place within the term of a generation are often overlooked by those living through them. Memory is a servant who often sleeps, and who fails at the task of comparing accurately the new with the old. In the field of money and banking this failure of observation is easily understood, for over the past 25 years comparatively little external evidence of change is revealed, apart from the disappearance of gold coin from circulation and the multiplication of banking offices, bearing fewer separate names. Moreover, special circumstances have concentrated attention largely upon the international aspect of monetary affairs, to the neglect of a general appreciation of development in our own organization. Yet within the system of currency and credit as it operates in this country the period has witnessed vital changes, not only in the machinery, but in the very philosophy of monetary operations. It is worth while recording these if only to remove the unduly pessimistic notion that monetary affairs in modern times have nothing to show by way of progress in any degree approaching the contemporaneous achievements in the technique of making and selling goods.

CURRENCY AND BANK BALANCES

We have mentioned already the most obvious change of all, in the composition of the currency. Gold coin is no longer available for circulation; even when the post-war gold standard was operating there was no means of obtaining it in exchange for paper currency. The concentration of the country's gold stocks in the hands of a central authority, brought about by war-time requirements, was perpetuated in order to avoid the inevitable waste of dissemination. In 1925 our currency was placed on a gold-bullion standard rather than on the pre-war type of gold standard, and there is now not the slightest probability of the reappearance of gold coin in active circulation. The note circulation, moreover, has been simplified.

In 1910 there were still in England and Wales a number of banks other than the Bank of England which issued notes, in quantities defined under act of Parliament in 1844. Now, by the operation of that act, all these issues have passed away, and English currency has attained the utmost simplicity: token paper, all from one source, for larger sums and token coin for smaller. The change has been accomplished without any loss of confidence whatsoever—no one is in the slightest degree worried by the fact that he no longer possesses the right to change his notes into gold coin, a quality which 25 years ago was regarded as an essential attribute of good paper money.

Along with the change in the composition of the currency has gone a change in the relative importance of currency and bank balances as media of payment. Since 1910 the quantities outstanding of both currency and bank deposits have greatly increased. The figures cannot be accurately stated, but in rough approximation the amount of currency in circulation has been multiplied probably by well over 2 and of bank balances by about 3. The increase in the total supply of money must be associated partly with the growth of population and the enlargement of the proportion of adults included in it, and partly with the rise in the average standard of living and the higher general level of prices. The striking fact is, however, that so much more of the country's business is transacted by transfers of bank balances. In the financial year 1910–11 about 250 millions of checks were used in England and Wales; in 1934–35, notwithstanding the doubling of the stamp duty on checks, the total was well in excess of 400 millions, the increase amounting to roughly 70 percent. The turnover on bank accounts cannot be measured for the earlier year, but a rough indication of its growth is given by the returns of the London clearing house, which in 1934 dealt with a sum two and a half times as large as in 1910. In short, more people are using the banks and using them far more freely than before; this is true, moreover, not only in respect of remittances by the safe and convenient method of checks but in respect of a broadened and far more readily available variety of services. Many people who in 1910 would never have dreamed of entering a bank now use a bank in a variety of ways, even though the essentials of their financial position may be unchanged.

THE STRUCTURE OF BANKING

One reason why the banks have found possible this enlargement of services lies in the progress of structural integration between the two dates. By 1910 the amalgamation movement had gone far, but there was room for it to go further. At the end of that year there were still about 40 joint-stock banks engaged wholly or mainly in domestic commercial banking in England and Wales, but since then the number has been reduced to roughly a dozen. The list of names then extant reads strangely in these days, and the figures seem comparatively small; the largest of the joint-stock banks showed deposits of less than £80,000,000, and only four recorded amounts of £50,000,000 or more. But the change is much more than a matter of figures: the fusion of smaller banks into large institutions brought with it the possibility of rendering more efficient service on more economical terms, while competition between large units has ensured the full exploitation of that possibility.

The process of integration, however, was followed by a deeper change, whose significance lies rather in the realm of monetary science, though fully as important from the public point of view as the greater serviceability already mentioned. In short, the structural consolidation of the banking system made possible the pursuit of a deliberate monetary policy—put in another way, it made continuous and conscious monetary management a practical possibility. For one thing, it brought the cash reserves of the banks into more ordered form. Hitherto there had been no settled and regular practice among the commercial banks regarding their cash reserves; each had its own ideas as to how much cash it should hold, and in what form. The degree of dissemination of reserves is indicated by the fact that several of the banks had accumulated gold stocks of their own.

Nowadays, by contrast, the gold reserves for the entire banking structure are concentrated in the Bank of England, where they are far more effectively mobilized than in the hands of various banks and innumerable members of the public. The cash reserves of the banks are now held solely in the form of balances with the Bank of England and notes in their tills and vaults. Moreover, the banks have by now become ratio conscious: that is to say, they have come to maintain in their day-to-day operations a regular minimum relationship between their cash reserves and deposit liabilities. The result is that the central bank, when it thinks it necessary to increase or decrease the amount of cash available to the banks, can be reasonably sure, in all but extraordinary circumstances, that its expansive or contractive action will be quickly and faithfully expressed in the liabilities of the banks to the public. Clearly, if the banks were still at sixes and sevens in this matter of cash-reserve relationships, the central bank would be severely handicapped in its attempts to regulate the supply of money. The integration of the banking system contributed to the removal of this handicap and made scientific management of money supply practicable. True, it was the abandonment of the gold standard which rendered a managed currency inevitable: but management, whether on gold or off, could operate efficiently only by means of a highly coordinated banking system.

THE METHOD OF MONETARY CONTROL

Associated again with this close integration of the banking system has gone a vital change in the method of monetary regulation. In a highly developed system a central bank has two principal instruments available to its hand in the execution of its policy—whatever that policy may be. It can act on the quantity of money available for the use of the public; and it can act on the rates charged for the use of money; or, to look at the other side of the picture, on the rates of return obtainable by the lending of money, either at short or long term. Twenty-five years ago, by the very nature of the banking system, the first instrument was almost unknown, or at any rate very little used. If the Bank of England thought it to be its duty to pursue a restrictive policy—perhaps to check an outflow of gold or to arrest a speculative movement on the stock exchange or commodity markets—it raised money rates, and only in extreme circumstances did it take action which directly curtailed the quantity of funds available within the narrow area of the money market. Nowadays, instead of a mild and occasional form of quantitative regulation being used as an auxiliary to rate control, regulation of the total supply of money is the dominant instrument of policy. From time to time the quantity of money undergoes alteration without any accompanying effort to vary the rates charged for its use. The rate instrument has, indeed, become far less effective than formerly, and quantity is the dominant force in present-day monetary policy.

The importance of this particular change is twofold. First, it relieves the economic system of the effects of frequent variations in the basis of lending rates. Industry and trade are subject to less disturbance now than before the war from oft-repeated changes in bank rate. And, secondly, it has rendered monetary management far more effective. A rise in interest rates, if it went far enough, was in the old days moderately successful in checking a boom, but a fall in interest rates was very slow indeed to stimulate recovery. Restriction of quantity, especially when undertaken along with a rise in rates, is even more effective as a check to unhealthy developments; and positive expansion of quantity, together with a fall in rates, is far more powerful—as we have seen in the past 3 years—in promoting recovery from depression. Clearly, then, the change of method in monetary management represents a pronounced improvement in the technique employed.

THE NEW OBJECTIVE OF MONETARY POLICY

But perhaps most important of all is the fact that along with a change of instruments has gone a radical change in objectives, a change not so much of character as of relative weights. This, the unexpected benefit of a very ill wind, is a result of the disturbances of the past 25 years, which have enforced the adoption of new standards and principles for the formulation of policy. It must be remembered that by 1910 the gold standard as an international mechanism had operated continuously, and on the whole beneficially, for 40 years. Out of the past 25 years, however, the gold standard has operated for no more than 10, and even then has worked only haltingly and with gravely damaging results. We cannot at this point go into the reasons for the change, beyond remarking that the gold standard of 1910 was really a sterling standard, subject to almost undivided management, when need arose, from London. After the war it was a machine subjected to divided control from three centers having little in common as to either objectives or instruments or surrounding conditions. The gold standard in the old sense proving unsuitable to post-war conditions, some new standard of monetary policy, at first on a national rather than international basis, had to be evolved.

The history of this evolution is worth briefly recounting. Up to the outbreak of war, monetary policy was formulated with a single end in view—the fulfillment by the central bank of the duty, laid upon it by the legislature, of maintaining the statutory parity between the pound sterling and gold. On the outbreak of war this objective was submerged with the effective suspension of the gold standard. Monetary policy was then designed to meet the financial requirements of war and at the same time maintain public confidence; to that end it confined within what seemed the narrowest possible limits the inevitable process of inflation.

When the war and demobilization were over the guiding principle of monetary policy became definitely restrictive; the expansion of the money supply, which had reduced the value of the pound in relation to gold, was to be undone, and the old relationship between sterling and gold re-established. Already, however, a new conception of monetary rectitude was obtaining limited and occasional recognition. It was perceived that the restrictive policy was having injurious effects on our economic life, and from time to time its strict enforcement was modified in the interests of British industry and trade. Accordingly, whereas the restoration of the old parity required relentless deflation, and therefore seemed of doubtful wisdom, the process was in fact softened in an attempt to revive British trade. The result was the worst of both worlds, for the old parity was in fact restored without the prior fulfilment of the conditions necessary for its maintenance. In consequence, from 1925 to 1931 monetary policy was concerned mainly in a continuous struggle—unavailing and injurious to industry—to sustain a parity with gold which the basic conditions could not support. Hence the second departure from gold, in 1931.

A REVOLUTION IN IDEAS

In the past 4 years the progress of ideas has been rapid. This is evident to any reader of speeches on monetary policy delivered 10 years ago and today by members of the governments in office. The maintenance or restoration of any particular gold value for sterling—or, if the expression be preferred, of any particular sterling price of gold—is no longer regarded by both Government and central bank as the dominant objective of monetary policy. In fact, the gold value of sterling has dwindled by 40 percent—neither the Government nor the bank does anything about it, and no one is in the slightest degree disturbed, since the pound buys just as much goods and services as in 1931. Stability of the value of the pound in terms of goods has replaced stability in terms of gold. The essence of the matter is that Britain's monetary policy since 1931 has come to be formulated with first regard to the interests of British industry and trade. For a time after the departure from gold the old measures of restriction, regarded as inevitable in a time of crisis, whatever its nature, were enforced. But the Government shortly adopted and secured the pursuit of a more progressive policy, based on the needs of the time rather than the traditions of an earlier epoch. Hence the great expansion of credit which took place from the summer of 1932, providing the principal stimulus to business recovery in this country, and providing it without any unfortunate consequences in the shape of undue inflation or speculative activity. As usual, the way forward has proved to be the way out.

The fullness of acceptance of the new principle is indicated by the attitude of the Government toward the question of stabilizing the gold value of sterling. Herein again lies a contrast. Early post-war monetary policy was obsessed with the purpose of restoring the old parity between sterling and gold and gave scant thought to any possible alternative; nor, when superficially the moment of restoration had come, was it concerned overmuch with the question whether the basic conditions were favorable for sustaining the old parity. Today it seems evident that the Government is determined not to repeat the mistake. The ultimate relationship of sterling to gold—whether fixed or fluctuating—is left entirely open; no figure is accepted as in itself possessing any special merit; and the time and manner of establishing a figure are regarded as matters for determination with full regard to the conditions and needs of our industry and trade.

At the heart of the matter is a change in the official conception of stability. In the early post-war years the word could have only one meaning—a fixed price of gold, and hence a fixed relationship with other currencies on the gold standard. Today a clear distinction is seen between stability in terms of gold or gold currencies and stability in terms of goods, between exchange stability and internal stability. And the second is regarded as of at least equal importance with the first. For the time being the first is impracticable, so that the second holds the field; but it is becoming more and more clearly recognized that we cannot afford to accept the first, even when practicable, if by so doing we jeopardize the second. It may—indeed, it can—be possible in the long run to attain the two together; meanwhile internal stability is bringing us far greater benefits in solid economic welfare than the pursuit of fixity of exchange could conceivably yield. The two objectives are not always and inevitably irreconcilable, but there can be no doubt as to the change in the relative weights accorded to them in official policy.

Clearly, this change is nothing short of a revolution, and, taken in conjunction with those already referred to, it indicates an almost complete transformation of the monetary system. A new order of precedence has been applied to the objectives of monetary policy, and the machinery for translating policy into action has been vastly altered and improved. In this short article many other changes, of less vital importance than those mentioned, have been of necessity ignored. But enough has been said to show that economic progress in the past quarter of a century has not been confined to the arts of production. The advances there achieved are amazing, but the changes in the monetary system are scarcely less striking, even though less evident on a cursory survey and less easily described in generally comprehensible terms.

COMMENT BY COMMITTEE FOR THE NATION, NEW YORK

If England secured recovery by abandoning a fixed weight of gold and substituting a managed currency system, why was the United States put back onto the fixed gold standard by the Gold Act of February 1, 1934?

If England, wisest of banking nations, which created and managed the gold standard during the nineteenth century, and knew it best, recognizes, as McKenna says, "the gold standard in the old sense, proving unsuitable to post-war conditions, some new standard of monetary policy had to be evolved," why does America stick to that which England has discarded?

If England rejected as impractical the advice of her socialistically minded economist, J. Maynard Keynes, to spend her way out of the depression by unbalancing the Budget without monetary action, why did the United States accept his advice?

Elliott Thurston, in November 1934, reported in the Washington Post: "Now that Marriner S. Eccles, a devout disciple of that ecumenical English economist, John Maynard Keynes, is installed as Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, it is highly illuminating to note how reverently Mr. Roosevelt has bowed before the laws of the British prophet—who has yet to enjoy in his own land the esteem accorded him at the White House, and now at the Federal Reserve Board."

As the eighth point of his Agenda for the President Mr. Keynes stated the United States must end further gold manipulations. Why did this English economist tell the United States not to do the very thing that the Midland Bank head now describes as the basis of British recovery?

Organized agriculture and thousands of businessmen who have studied monetary problems plead with the Congress for a currency system that will restore the dollar to normal and then keep stable its buying power over goods.

Incidentally Maynard Keynes' ninth point was continued unbalance of the Budget. Great Britain has balanced hers. It is now stated in Washington that the next session of Congress will be asked to add $3,000,000,000 more to the $4,800,000,000 relief fund. It is also rumored that the unavowed purpose of the Eccles banking bill is to get control of the central banking system so that it can be forced to carry out the Keynes collectivist program that requires huge Government expenditures.

The Supreme Court decision points to buying power as the essence of good money. Instead of moving in this direction the administration banking bill is mainly a preparation for further huge-scale Government spending.

Do Congress and businessmen know that President Roosevelt's 1933 monetary policy was the same as that which brought recovery without sacrifice of freedom or private enterprise in England? Do they know that since we went back to the gold standard (Feb. 1, 1934) we have been traveling the Keynes-Tugwell-Frankfurter-Eccles road to collectivism instead?

THE MECHANICS OF MANAGED CURRENCY

APPENDIX III: VARIATIONS IN THE VALUE OF GOLD

The subject of the fluctuations in the value of gold, its purchasing power in terms of commodities, is a familiar one, and all economists, of every school, agree that gold, or money based on a fixed amount of gold, is not a stable measure of value. It is not generally realized, however, that not merely is gold an unstable measure of value, but that, in recent years, it has proved to be the least stable commodity of all the major commodities.

The following tables, showing the value of gold in terms of wheat, cotton, pig iron, lead, and silver at various periods from 1920 to 1934 reveal a maximum variation of 347 percent in the purchasing power of that metal for the average of the other five commodities. The other commodities, as shown by the tables, have displayed far less variation in their average purchasing power, viz, 77 percent in the case of wheat, 84 percent in the case of cotton, 129 percent in the case of pig iron, 105 percent in the case of lead, and 71 percent in the case of silver.

Gold, in brief, has proved to be a most unstable and unsuitable measure of value in recent years. In terms of buying power for a representative group of basic commodities, it has varied nearly five times as much as silver. Under the circumstances, is there any cause for wonder that, with the greatly increased interdependence of nations upon other nations for their raw materials and markets, based upon prices in terms of gold, it has become impossible to maintain so fluctuating a commodity as gold as the fixed basis of currency, and that every nation of the world, with but two exceptions, has been forced to abandon the gold standard since the war?

The failure to recognize these facts accounts for the opposition amongst many groups of men to any attempt by governments to free their currencies from the devastating effects of a rigid tie to gold. It is refreshing, then, to know that one of the most respected and conservative banking firms in the country, Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., has not been afraid to face the facts and that, upon the respective departures of England and the United States from gold, Mr. Morgan characterized this action as highly constructive. Another partner in the firm, Mr. Russell Leffingwell, one of the most competent bankers in the country, writes:

"Gold is not an end in itself. It is a means to an end. That end is monetary stability. * * * When the value of gold rises, prices and wages fall and the horrible cycle of deflation, with its terrible consequences in human suffering, begins to revolve toward the abyss. Then the only hope for humanity was to stop gold payments, to go off gold."

In England, after nearly 4 years of managed currency, not tied to gold, financial circles are beginning to realize that a fixed purchasing value for currency is far more important than its weight in terms of gold or its exchange ratio in foreign currencies. The columns of the London Times are filled with letters from such distinguished persons as Sir William Dampier, Sir William Jarratt, and others, stressing the fact that the managed pound sterling is much more stable than the old gold pound. A large brokerage and commodity House (Wigglesworth & Co., Ltd.) reports that "the pound has enjoyed remarkable stability during the last few years of changing values, as can be gauged by the one true method of measuring monetary values, viz, their purchasing power in terms of commodities. * * * It is clear that gold and not the pound is fluctuating."

VALUE OF MONEY CAN ONLY BE STABILIZED THROUGH VARYING ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD

For complete statistical proof that the value of money can only be stabilized through allowing its gold content to vary (or, in other words, by changing the money price of gold), the reader is referred to Gold and Prices, by Warren & Pearson. The price tables in that book confirm the findings of this bulletin and prove that changes in the volume of currency or bank credit cannot be employed to control the value of money and maintain its purchasing power stable. To quote:

"Some persons believe that the commodity price level can be raised by creating purchasing power. So long as the money is maintained at a given parity with gold, the commodity price level cannot be raised much above the world price level in gold. If any considerable effect on commodity prices is to be obtained by creating purchasing power, it must raise prices relative to gold in the whole world.

"Another expression of the same error is to believe that greenbacks, Federal Reserve notes, silver certificates, or other forms of paper money will raise commodity prices. The answer is the same. So long as each piece of paper represents a given amount of gold, very little rise in prices above the world levels can be obtained."

The entire findings of Professors Warren and Pearson bear out completely, through rigorous mathematical and statistical methods, the facts that this bulletin attempts to make clear through analysis of the practical operation of money, banking, foreign exchange, and commodity markets, namely, that, while such factors as the volume of money and credit, changing discount rates, reserve ratios, open-market operations, etc., may tend to raise or lower prices, and are necessary auxiliaries of the monetary function, they cannot control or stabilize the value of money so long as the currency is tied to a fixed weight of gold.

Congress must make it mandatory upon a designated monetary authority, whether that authority be the Federal Reserve Board, a separate commission, or other body, to restore prices to a normal level predetermined and specifically designated by Congress, and thenceforth to maintain the value of the dollar stable at that level in accordance with a suitable basic commodity price index. To accomplish this, Congress must specifically vest the said authority with powers to change the price of gold (or gold content of the dollar) at such intervals as may be necessary. Only in this way can Congress satisfy the urgent needs of its constituents for a fair and stable level of prices; fulfill the promise of the President to restore those price which have fallen most, and to provide a dollar that will not vary in purchasing power from one generation to another; and comply with its constitutional mandate to regulate the value of money.

FRANK A. VANDERLIP'S INTRODUCTION TO AMERICAN EDITION OF SIR CHARLES MORGAN-WEBB'S "THE MONEY REVOLUTION"

Study of the currency question has certainly ceased to be an academic matter. The immediate practicality of the subject has been brought forcibly even to stubborn minds by the legislation which is being actively debated in Congress and, in one form or another, seems likely soon to become a law.

It would now seem almost immediately inevitable that we will adopt some form of managed currency. We are at last about to regulate the value of our money in more or less the manner which was contemplated by the Constitution. We have always had, in a partial sense, a certain amount of management, just as under the gold standard Great Britain maintained that standard by shrewd, adroit, courageous management.

If one wishes to have some scientific understanding of the subject, where is he to look for guidance? Certainly not to bankers; quite as certainly not to economists, for among both professions there is the widest range of opinions and nothing like a solidarity of conclusive judgment.

The difficulty lies in the fact that much of the writing regarding currency and practically all of the reading is done with little aid of critical brain but through the obscuration of fixed prejudices. The same words mean different things to different minds. But the confusion is even deeper than that. Practically all the so-called "conservatives"—I am sometimes inclined to define the conservative as one who never thinks anything ought to be done for the first time—have a fixed hypothesis in regard to gold, and no assault of facts upon that hypothesis makes the slightest dent.

To those minds, gold is the final and only stable point of reference of value. Anyone who thinks otherwise is outside their pale of mental communion and is condemned with the phrase that they are "tinkers with the currency." They still think gold is a stable measure of value, in spite of the fact that all the world is practically off the gold standard excepting three nations. Our own attachment is by the slenderest thread. Our currency has no convertibility into gold; it is a crime to hold gold; gold can be obtained from the Treasury only at the caprice of the Secretary of the Treasury, and even so it can be obtained only for shipment to a country now on the gold standard.

Economists are confused in their thinking and widely divided in their conclusions. Few bankers make any pretense to a scientific understanding, and even those who have some glimmering are so timid about making any public utterance and are so fearful of taking any stand in opposition to the wishes of the Government that our natural source of guidance is worthless. One-third of our banks, including the biggest, have put themselves in a position in which the Government is their largest single stockholder, and practically all banks are in a thralldom of officialdom which silences all bankers.

For 40 years I have been a student of the subject. I had some part in formulating the original ideas of the Federal Reserve System. In more recent times, I attended the Genoa Conference, which was the first united effort of Europe to extricate itself from the chaos of currencies that the war brought about. No one who is unfamiliar with the Macmillan report, the inner meaning of the results of the Ottawa Conference, the declaration of the delegates of the United Kingdom at the close of the World Economic Conference, or the practical operation of sterling management since Great Britain went off the gold standard, has a right to speak with authoritative judgment in regard to currency.

Nor can we look for informed guidance from Congress. Congress has abdicated, of its own will. It is revealing of the congressional situation to be told, as I have been, by one of the most highly placed Members that "You must understand that it makes no difference what we think; we are under the lash." The lash in this case means the will of the patronage distributing executive branch.

It is time, and full time, if we have an intelligent democracy, that business men take the time to inform themselves regarding this vital factor in our economic life. Too many business men assert that they are so engaged with the everyday affairs of their business in these troublous times to devote themselves to public questions. What does it matter what attention a man gives to the immediate work that is on his desk if the very foundations upon which his desk and his whole business depend are being altered?

I am fairly familiar with the economic literature of our time which is concerned with this subject. In the whole range, I have found nowhere a clearer, more dispassionate statement of the historical background and the present facts from a world point of view than in this book by Sir Charles Morgan-Webb. Its title is well chosen. The currency revolution is not ahead of us. We are in the midst of it and it has been actively influencing our lives for the last decade.

If Congress, the economists, and the bankers of the country would all take a week off from their pressing activities, not merely to read, but to read with understanding this small volume, they would know something about the currency question. They would have a mass of facts, adequately documented as to their source, instead of being in the situation of the man who was described by Artemus Ward as knowing more things that weren't true than any other living person.

They will learn that an ounce of gold is not a stable measure of value. They will comprehend the proof that was educed in the Cunliffe report, that stable foreign exchange based on the gold standard involves violent fluctuations of prices and consequent depressions and undue inflations of business. They will learn what the Genoa Conference of 1922, held at the instance of the League of Nations, concluded regarding the relative desirability of stability in the exchanges or stability in the price level. They will understand what was back of the policies of Governor Strong in the management of the Federal Reserve Bank System, when he really dictated the open-market operations of the system under the guidance of a price index. They will understand the operations of the British stabilization fund, and trace the currency revolution through the results of the Ottawa Conference and the conclusions embodied in the British Empire currency declaration at the close of the World Economic Conference. In short, they will begin to acquire a scientific understanding of the currency question.

The story is told here in a simple and, it seems to me, a conclusive way. It is not the opinion of one man; it is a historical chronicle that leads irresistibly to a clearer understanding of the intricate and technical principles. I have been so impressed with the value of this book that I have arranged for its publication in America by Economic Forum simultaneously with its issue in England, and I unreservedly commend it to readers who wish to have a solid background for their thinking in relation to the subject of currency.

FRANK A. VANDERLIP.

ADDRESS BY HIRAM BINGHAM ON ADMINISTRATION POLICIES

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article which appeared in The Day, of New London, Conn., on July 1, setting forth a most forceful address by former United States Senator Hiram Bingham.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Day (New London, Conn.) of July 1, 1935]

In one of the most forceful addresses he has made since the present Democratic administration came into power, former United States Senator Hiram Bingham partially "stole the show" at the banquet of the New England Young Republicans Saturday night at the Hotel Griswold, when he charged President Roosevelt with dictatorship ambitions and with being as changeable as the weather on policies being carried out by the administration. He spoke as follows:

"At last the issues for the next campaign are clear. The President has made them so. He disapproves of the American Constitution. He wants to change it so as to give him the power possessed by the heads of the nations of Europe. He does not like the American system. And no wonder. The Supreme Court, although it contains such great liberals as Justice Brandeis and Justice Cardozo, has unanimously told him that he cannot discharge faithful members of semijudicial bodies simply because he does not like their mental processes and their decisions. His discharge of Commissioner Humphrey was a smooth piece of despotism. It was done in a more charming manner than the Tory kings of England treated judges who would not do their bidding. (Webster says that a Tory was 'one who sought to maintain the extreme prerogatives of the Crown.') It is evident that we have a Tory for President.

CRUEL TOOLS OF TYRANNY

"Our ancestors who wrote and adopted the American Constitution knew that great wrongs had been committed by unjust judges, by judges who feared the crown or the mob. Under the power of despotic English kings the judges were the most cruel tools of tyranny. Wisely did our ancestors place them above the vengeful power of a disappointed executive, as well as secure from the whims of demagogues and their followers. So the Constitution did not give the President the power to discharge an honest semijudicial commissioner. Naturally, he wants it changed. As we love liberty, we must not let it be changed. We should resent every attempt to make the judges subservient to any Chief Executive.

ISSUES ARE CLEAR

"The issues are clear. The President wants the power to make the laws. He got the Congress to permit him to make more laws than the Congress made in a hundred years. The Supreme Court unanimously says the Constitution does not permit it. So he wants to change it. No wonder. He would like to have his own way; but our ancestors had learned through bitter experience that even those raised to position of great power are, after all, human, and likely to be influenced by human passions, ambition, envy, anger, disappointment, fondness for close friends, dislike of political opponents, etc. So, in order to protect the rights and liberties of the ordinary individual against the human frailties of our rulers, they devised the American system of checks and balances. It provides for a check on overzealous officials. It places the duty of making laws on the representatives whom the citizen can reach, can reward, and can punish. It places the duty of making judicial decisions on judges whose tenure of office does not depend on the whim of the Executive or the pleasure of the mob. It does these things because our ancestors had found out in the course of the long struggle for human liberty that they were necessary. They are still necessary.

MEANS WELL, BUT CHANGEABLE

"The President means well. But he is very changeable. One day he seems to be a 'sound-money man.' The next day he abandons the gold standard and gives us bills that cannot be exchanged for gold. One day he is for spending no more than we receive. The next day he is for going headlong into debt. One day he is for great irrigation works that will increase the amount of land on which crops can be grown. The next day he is for crop reduction. One day he is opposed to Federal commissions and boards. The next day he creates so many new ones there are not letters enough in the alphabet to label them without confusion. One day he tells Congress that money for relief will be spent in a certain way. Four days later he gives orders that it will not be spent that way. One day he is benevolent. The next day he wants to soak American enterprises that have benefited millions of people. What next?

"The issues are clear. On the one hand, the American system; on the other hand, the new deal. On the one hand, the American Constitution; on the other hand, Government by a little group of wise men who admit they know what is best for the rest of us. On the one hand, liberty, with its responsibilities and its hardships; on the other hand, a paternalistic Government taking advantage of wide-spread suffering under the depression to increase 'the prerogatives of the crown' in the old Tory manner.

KNEW EVIL OF DESPOTISM

"We have lived for four generations under the blessings of a hard-won liberty. We have forgotten what our fathers who wrote the Constitution knew only too well. They knew that unlimited power was hazardous and liable to be oppressive to freedom. They knew the evils of despotism as expressed through a powerful central government. We do not, except by reading history. Our ancestors struggled for centuries to secure the human right of owning property, houses, lands, cattle, and goods. They fought for generations to win individual freedom and to escape from too much government. We have learned that big business can be oppressive. We have forgotten that big government can be even more so. We distrust bigness in business. Does anyone think that our citizens will be any more trustworthy in government than they are in business? Why is a man who has risen by his own ability to be the head of a great corporation to be distrusted and handicapped by restrictive legislation, and penalized by heavy taxation, while a man of like racial characteristics who has been helped to rise by the friends he has made in politics to be the head of a great government department is to be trusted and relieved of restrictions formulated by wise lawgivers? Is the one man any more likely to deal justly than the other?

"QUOTES CONSTITUTION

"The issues are clear. The new deal says that men in important economic positions are to be punished and restricted; while men in important governmental position are to be unrestricted and given more power. The Constitution says that no person 'shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation'; also that all legislative powers granted to the Federal Government are vested in the Congress, while powers not so granted are reserved to the States and to the people. The President says this is 'distasteful' to him. He wants to change it. We say, 'No.'

"During the past few years we have gone quite some distance on the wrong road to 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.'

We found the old constitutional trail rather rugged and difficult. So we turned aside on an easier trail, less steep and requiring less exertion. Now we find it is not leading us where we want to go at all. We dislike to retrace our steps, but there is no short cut.

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT

"Our forefathers discovered what is known as 'representative government.' It worked better than any form ever devised by man. But it was not perfect, so we have been engaged in discarding it. Many so-called 'progressives' and radicals want us to go back to principles of government ownership that were in effect in the Middle Ages and were abandoned in man's struggle for liberty. In the dark ages there was no 'rugged individualism' except on the part of powerful rulers and despots. The ordinary individual did not count at all. Initiative and personal liberty were crushed and forbidden by government, so as to make the individual conform to a pattern and a plan laid down by some higher and wiser political or religious authority. Those were dark days. Let us not be lured back into them by any who would take advantage of our present unhappy state to promise us a more abundant life if we will surrender our birthright of State rights, local self-government, personal liberty, and Americanism."

COMMERCE IN MUNITIONS, ETC., IN TIME OF WAR

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. PITTMAN to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries, the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states, for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war, and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, with the laudable design of those who have presented the particular joint resolution which is now before us, of course, all of us have the heartiest sympathy. In any endeavor to prevent war all of us will unite. None will unite more enthusiastically or more readily than myself.

About the joint resolution, however, which is presented here there are certain things which I think ought to be said, not to prevent its passage probably, not with the design of altering it particularly, but there are certain observations which should be made in order that our people should understand in some degree exactly what we are doing today and that they should understand that the hopes which have been held out to them that wars will be prevented in the future by a resolution such as is here before us will not be fulfilled at all, but those honestly believing something marvelous is about to be accomplished are doomed to disallusionment, disappointment, humiliation, and regret.

I do not desire ever to assume the roll of prophet, but these are the days of prophets, and I essay a minor role in that regard. Mr. President, we are not going to be in any war that involves Ethiopia and Italy, or that involves any other country beyond our borders. We are not going to engage in any strife in the immediate future where the cause for that strife does not intimately concern ourselves.

To say to us that we must act overnight upon any resolution of neutrality or otherwise because of the fear of war is to me the most arrant nonsense that can be presented. There was a time when propaganda would take us into war. There was a time when pacifist organizations, and others who were dealing with subjects of which they had little or no knowledge, might have led us by blundering into a strife which was no part of our country's concern.

But that day, thank God, is past. Never again during the generation which now lives in this Nation will we be able to be taken into European war or drawn into a European entanglement. The only reason, or perhaps the best reason, why this joint resolution should be passed is that finally the United States of America by it states a policy, the policy of minding our own business, keeping out of Europe, European controversies, foreign wars, and the like.

After 17 years of suffering in that regard, after reading a press throughout this country during that long period which was at variance with the views I have expressed, it is delightful now finally to find justification of the men, very few, who stood firmly years ago and through all the long period since have stood firmly for maintaining America in America's security and in America's pristine glory and keeping out of every foreign entanglement and every European war.

So today, when we are about to pass what is miscalled a "neutrality" resolution, and when we are about to pass something of which we have little knowledge, because at the end of the session and because of the little time we have had to devote to it, in one thing we may glory, my friends, for one thing we may be thankful. The joint resolution makes plain the policy of the United States of America to keep out of European controversies, European wars, and European difficulties. So today is the triumph of the so-called "isolationists", and today marks the downfall, although we may not know it, of the internationalist who has been devoting his gigantic energy in the last 17 years to involving us in machinations abroad and who would take us into Europe's troubles and into Europe's difficulties and foreign organizations dealing with foreign controversies.

I repeat, Mr. President, we are not going to be involved in any Italian and Ethiopian war. I repeat the prophecy that is mine in the minor role I essay—I repeat there is going to be no general world war out of that particular difficulty. When our people are endeavored to be frightened by assertions of that sort, it is the same sort of thing, only the converse, as that peculiar war spirit which sometimes hits a nation and sometimes by propaganda overcomes the good judgment of that nation.

Mr. President, neutrality is a difficult subject. It is all well enough for boys and pacifists, and for distinguished gentlemen who never have thought on the subject at all, to say that overnight they will write a neutrality law. For more than a century the people of this country and its statesmen have endeavored to establish a neutrality policy which would be definite and which would be purposeful. For more than a century all over the world, indeed for much more than a century, from the time of Grotius down to today, the minds of Europe which were bent upon the prevention of war have endeavored to establish a neutrality policy, but up to now none has succeeded in presenting a policy which would stand the test of time or would enable a nation, after a war commenced, to act in accordance with the terms of that particular attempt.

So, sirs, it is not essential that we should write specifically a law now, because time has taught us that it cannot be adequately done. There is nothing in particular to criticize in the joint resolution which has been presented here, but let us not delude ourselves with the idea that the resolution will accomplish any great results in the days to come.

The only reason why I rose on this occasion was to make plain, so far as my puny voice would make it, to the people of this land that this joint resolution will not prevent any war. When they are told, by those who tell them for motives of their own, that this resolution will prevent wars in the future, they are simply being deceived and deluded, and it ought not to be.

I regret that any man from this body should go abroad and should say that we are going to be drawn into a war or we are likely to be drawn into a war. I regret it, and it is an unfortunate thing that it should occur. We are not going to be drawn into any European war again, I repeat. We are not going across the seas with the armed forces of the United States in any other encounter or in any other strife. We have learned our lesson and we have learned it in bitterness. We drank to the very dregs of the intrigues, the propaganda, the bitterness, the hostility, the deception of those diplomats from abroad who came to us during the last war, and, having learned our lesson finally today we decree by this joint resolution that we are not going abroad in any war that is not ours and which does not intimately concern us.

We are going to stay here, minding our business, and being just American. That is the one reason and the big reason for the joint resolution which is now presented to our Chamber.

Mr. President, I wish to read just a word from a very remarkable article which once before I called to the attention of this body. The article is entitled "An Appeal to Reason", by John Bassett Moore.

In reality—

He says—

the current delusion that international law legalizes war, and therefore must now yield to the war-tending and war-like processes prescribed by the Covenant, comprising "sanctions", boycotts, and war itself, is merely the legitimate offspring of the new and consoling theory that peoples may with force and arms peacefully exterminate one another, provided they do not call it war.

From the same anarchic womb springs the exultant cry that the law of neutrality, because it blocked the new channel to peace, has been torpedoed, and that the neutral owners gurgled approval as they drowned. This would be a sad tale if it were true. But it is false. There is not in the world today a single government that is acting upon such a supposition. Governments are acting upon the contrary supposition and in so doing are merely recognizing the actual fact.

In the winter of 1922–23 there was held at The Hague an international conference to make rules for the regulation of the activities of aircraft and radio in time of war. The parties to this conference, over which I had the honor to preside, were the United States, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, and the Netherlands. The delegates acted under the instructions of their respective governments. An examination of our unanimous report will show that it was largely devoted to the definition of the rights and duties of belligerents and of neutrals in time of war, and that it treated as still existing the Land War Neutrality Convention, the Convention for the Adaptation of the Geneva Convention to Maritime Warfare, and the Convention concerning Neutral Rights and Duties in Maritime Warfare, all made at The Hague in 1907. The idea that the law of neutrality had become obsolete never was broached.

I read that in order that you may understand something about what has been going on—I wish I had time to read the entire article to you—in the study of the law of neutrality. I wonder how many of the gentlemen outside this Chamber and elsewhere who have been bombarding Members of the Congress with their perfervid appeals, in the name of peace, to pass a neutrality law have ever read a single syllable or line of international law, or of any of the conventions to which this article refers.

All of them know how to prevent war. All of them are going to prevent war now by this so-called "neutrality joint resolution." It is the most complicated and difficult subject with which statesmen have ever dealt. It has been spoken of upon this floor once by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], in characterizing it in a fashion that was entirely appropriate. The logical result of a policy such as has been enunciated by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was as well stated to the Members of this body.

Neutrality, and then what? What do we mean by "neutrality"? The only thing that struck me as eloquent in the dispute that has been going on between Italy and Ethiopia was the remark made by the ruler of Ethiopia recently when he said, in substance, to those people who are preventing him from getting arms, "You claim to be neutral. You say that you are neutral in this contest. You know that my antagonist manufactures his arms and his ammunition, and has all that he needs in generous supply. You know that I have none; and yet you embargo sending arms to either of us—arms that he does not need; arms that I must have for self-defense. Your neutrality consists, therefore, of arming him to assassinate me."

I concede this statement found sympathetic lodgment with me.

That is what we must consider when we talk of neutrality. I would not give—and I want no mistake made about that—the power to any man on the face of the earth to determine when and how neutrality should be practiced by this country. I would not put in the hands of any save the Congress of the United States, where it now reposes by virtue of the assent of the people of the United States, the right to do aught which would mean taking us into war. I would not permit any man to determine who is the aggressor in a war, because the instant we permit an individual to determine who is the aggressor, that instant, on the determination, we are in war. We cannot become an advocate on one side of a war and against the other side without putting ourselves in the very war; and to give to any one man the power to decide who is the aggressor in a war is something to which I would never consent under any circumstances.

So I insist the Congress has done what it believed to be the appropriate thing in this connection; but, nevertheless, it is something of which we may feel no certainty and which, with its complexities and its difficulties and its complications, makes it possible that instead of keeping us out of war we may be gotten into war. No one can foresee. So it is that I should really prefer that nothing should be done in this regard save and except the declaration of American policy; the declaration of that policy for which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and myself, as companions in arms in 1918–19 and ever since, I hope, have been striving and fighting, and in every way and upon every occasion endeavoring to uphold as a policy of this Nation.

Because in some quarters it is held that it does that thing, and because in my opinion it does, we may pass this joint resolution with a feeling that while much of it is of no consequence, and ought not to be passed at all, nevertheless a declaration of policy justifying the policy which has been ours, and that which we desire to carry out in the future, is at last seeing congressional approval.

When we deal with a subject such as this, every angle ought to be understood. We say we will ship no arms or ammunition or implements of warfare to any belligerent. We are right in being impartial in the prohibition that thus we write into law; but, nevertheless, there are difficulties concerning that which ought to be understood before final action is taken.

When we do that, and make our prohibition impartial, nevertheless it becomes partial when one side is able to obtain its arms, and the other has no capacity or ability to maintain or to gather together implements of warfare. We become partial, therefore, in a measure; and when we fondly think we are thus keeping from those who are engaged in strife the contraband of war, of course, we are utterly in error in that regard. There are other things—many, many other things—that the wit of man has not yet been able adequately to characterize or adequately to enumerate. As one newspaper recently said in this city, everything save ostrich feathers constitutes contraband of war in a war today; and everything, particularly foodstuffs, particularly things out of which manufactured munitions may be had, constitutes, in reality, contraband of war.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was entirely correct the other day when he said—I paraphrase what he said, and do not try to quote him accurately—that logically the result of the sort of policy we are enunciating today is, first, that not a single bale of cotton shall be shipped whenever there is a war on; not a single bushel of wheat shall be exported when there is a war on; not a pound of copper, not an ounce of iron, not a single, solitary morsel of food shall, during hostilities, be exported from this country. He might have gone farther still, and have said that the logical result of a real embargo of this character is that not only must every American stay within the confines of his own country during the belligerency but no commerce of the United States of America shall sail the seas under any circumstances at all.

That is one of the logical results of what we do. While that sort of thing may be necessary sometime when a war may be in progress, it is not essential in the last day of a congressional session, when, tired, weary, worn, frazzled as we are—I do not have any hesitation in saying, and I know my brethren feel in like fashion—that in the last days of a killing session to be bludgeoned into passing a law of this sort without full knowledge is not only a blunder, in my opinion, but it can result in nothing but ultimate harm.

So, Mr. President, I shall be ready to submit this matter in a moment, after my friend from Texas shall have the opportunity to express himself. I regret that the time limit is such that it is an utter and absolute impossibility to talk upon this subject as I would desire. I regret that the time limit of 1 hour, 15 minutes of which were taken up before we had the opportunity to get upon our feet, makes it impossible to present a question of this immense importance and of such great consequence in the fashion in which it ought to be presented to our people.

One thing I do desire to mention. Every one of these gentlemen who have been prating about the necessity for the law at this time talks about prohibiting loans in this country—prohibiting loans, as if that thought never had occurred to anyone before. I had the honor more than a year ago to present in this body, and it was passed by the other House as well, and signed by the President, a measure which prohibited any loans in this country by any individual or corporation to any nation which was indebted to us and in default. Of course, if there shall be a great world war, Europe will be involved. The countries of Europe will be the antagonists, all of which in reality, save one or two of smaller consequence, are within the inhibition of the law which now exists. So, when the newspapers say that the Senate has not done its duty because it has not provided for the prevention of loans in case of hostility, they speak as indeed they speak in regard to the whole subject—in utter abysmal ignorance.

There is law enough to prevent loans, law enough upon the statute books now, and we need not worry about that omission in the pending measure. I wanted to make that plain if I could.

I see the time is passing so rapidly that I cannot read what I should like to read. I say therefore, in conclusion, just this: Pass this joint resolution if you desire. There is no great harm in it. Pass it, reserving unto the Congress of the United States the right to determine the important questions, and continuing to reserve that right. Pass it if you will, in order that it may state something of a policy. But, sir, in passing it, do not be under the delusion that war is going to be prevented or that the millennium has come because of it.

We must pass it now, in advance of the war, it is said. Not so at all. We would do infinitely a better job if we should wait until the occasion arose and the realities were before us. But in acting upon the joint resolution let us act upon it with no idea that we have solved the great problem that is here. Let everyone of us, so far as we can, make plain to our people, not that we have stopped all future wars, not that this measure is going to prevent any future conflict, but let them know that it is a makeshift, at best, and that, after all, it amounts merely to a declaration of American policy, of keeping out of Europe and Europe's controversies, Europe's wars, and remaining just American.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I shall not vote against the pending joint resolution, I shall support it; but I do so because it is temporary, and because it is at least a gesture in the interest and in behalf of peace. I do not believe the Committee on Foreign Relations or the Senate itself has had sufficient time for deliberation and proper consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. President, I pray God that we may never have another war in which the United States will be involved. I do not believe that this joint resolution in and of itself will make any substantial contribution toward a realization of that hope. For myself, I think it unwise to announce the policy stated in section 1 of the joint resolution. It is a straight announcement by statutory law that the United States, in the event of war anywhere on this earth, will sell neither supplies nor ammunition to any nation, regardless of the issues involved, and regardless of all other considerations.

Under international law it is not an unneutral act for any nation to sell arms and ammunition and supplies to any nation at war. That is not an unneutral act. By this measure, in section 1, we are judging in advance every international clash or conflict which may occur anywhere on earth.

My own view is that section 1 of the joint resolution should provide that the President of the United States, who is charged under the Constitution with the conduct of our foreign relations, should have the power, in the event of a conflict, in his wisdom to place an embargo upon the shipment from this country of arms and ammunition and supplies. Then the United States would not entirely abdicate all of its international influence.

Is it an expression of neutrality to say to two warring nations, one of which has ambitions for territorial conquest, the other unprepared, the other weak, the other trying to pursue its own destiny—is it neutral to say to those nations, "We shall give arms to neither of you", thereby insuring the triumph of the prepared nation, the covetous nation, the ambitious nation, the nation which seeks by force of arms to impose its will on a weaker and defenseless nation?

Mr. President, that is not neutrality; that is a form of unneutrality. That is a form of declaration which announces that the United States will take the side of the strong and the powerful against the weak, the unprepared, and the defenseless. Why not leave that determination to the President of the United States when and if, in his conduct of our foreign relations, it becomes a sound American policy for him to take a position in a crisis of that kind?

Mr. President, Congress alone can declare war. Resting here in this body and in the other Chamber of the Congress is the power to declare war, and it rests nowhere else. We cannot become involved in a war until the Congress plunges the people into the war. Can we judge of it in advance? We cannot. We cannot now put the United States into an international strait-jacket and thereby keep out of war. We cannot by an act of Congress put the United States into a concrete cast internationally which will fit all future occasions and solve all future problems.

The pending joint resolution of itself does not mean peace. I want real peace; I want the United States never to become involved in war; but the surest way to involve this country in war is to let the rest of the world believe that we will fight under no circumstances at all. China is a marvelous example of that sort of attitude.

Mr. President, we are trying to reverse the process. It is the President's function to conduct our international affairs. The history of the world demonstrates that never, in all the long years of strife and struggle, has a parliamentary conduct of international affairs been successful.

It must be vested in the Executive until the Congress steps in and makes a declaration of war.

Mr. President, let us see what would be the consequences of this sort of a policy. Suppose some nation should attack Canada on our northern border, would America believe that it was humane under this joint resolution, passed by a Congress which knew nothing of that controversy, to refuse to feed our northern neighbors? Would we refuse to let them have, in the course of normal trade, without any violation of international law, the things which would mean her life or her death? Would we refuse to sell her wheat to feed her people? Would we refuse to sell her needed supplies?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I feel firmly convinced that this measure does not apply to supplies. I feel that it applies only to arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and in no sense deals with the question of supplies. We have had definitions by the Senate of the United States as to what constitutes arms, munitions, and implements of war when the Senate ratified the Convention of Geneva in 1924. In my opinion and in the opinion of the committee the measure does not include what might prove to be contraband of war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, after we get into war contraband is whatever the nation which controls the sea says is contraband. Contraband may become food, it may become any useful article, because the countries which control the oceans announce what is contraband, and that becomes the law of the sea. The Senator from Nevada, I am sure, knows that from our experience in the World War.

Mr. GORE. During the World War cotton was made a contraband of war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Cotton is suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. Of course, that would be a munition of war.

Mr. PITTMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I wish to say that it would not be a contraband of war. The Convention of Geneva in 1924, which lays out in detail what constitutes arms, ammunition, and implements of war, which Convention of Geneva was adopted by the Senate, does not include cotton, and does not include any raw material in that definition.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in the naval convention which was entered into provisionally prior to the World War cotton was the first item which was scheduled among noncontraband articles. The convention was never ratified. The war had hardly commenced until cotton was made a contraband of war.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, undoubtedly countries can name anything as a contraband of war. I am speaking of the intent of Congress in the joint resolution which we are passing. In this joint resolution we are not dealing with contraband; we are dealing with certain things which are known as arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I suggested to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that during the World War cotton was made a contraband of war. The Senator from Texas repeated that statement; and this very illustration and the comments of the Senator from Nevada show how fatuous it is for us in time of peace to undertake to determine what nations engaged in a life-and-death struggle in war will consent to treat as contraband and as noncontraband.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has put his finger on what, to me, is one of the most important factors in this situation, and that is that we are trying to determine now in time of peace by a statute our decision on future events as to whose merits we are not able to look into the future and judge, and without passing upon the interests or the questions of defense of the United States itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the pending joint resolution had been in effect during the World War, what would have been the result?

Mr. CONNALLY. The result would have been just what the result was anyway; we would have been in the World War anyway.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would not the World War have ended sooner even if we finally did get into it, but not ended as it did end?

Mr. CONNALLY. To the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky different minds would probably have different answers, but the probabilities are that even if America had not finally entered the war, the Central Powers would have triumphed and have conquered Belgium and impressed their will upon France, and perhaps upon Great Britain herself, before America entered the war or could have been effective after her entrance.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McADOO. May I suggest to my distinguished friend from Texas, apropos of the thought he just expressed, that it is not merely a matter of the sale of munitions during a great war to one or the other of the belligerents which is involved.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. McADOO. It is a matter of contraband, and if we take any position upon the determination by one of the antagonists of what is contraband which is contrary to their interests, we can get into just as serious controversy about that question as we can about arms and munitions.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. McADOO. Therefore the futility of undertaking in advance to enact a resolution here to determine the policy of Congress with respect to conditions which may arise and which may be more fateful to us than the mere sale and shipment of arms and munitions.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from California, and I wish to say to him that his suggestions are entirely in point. For myself I should provide that the Government itself manufacture its own munitions and implements of war in order to take from private parties the temptation of profit which the gentlemen who offer this resolution are undertaking to provide. I cannot, however, subscribe to the doctrine that we should in advance by statute put ourselves in a plaster cast internationally, and give up whatever international influence America may possess toward peace and toward the pacification of disputes throughout all the world. I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that no matter where the contest, no matter what the issue, America in advance promises that she will exert no influence, will do no act either to bring about peace or to prevent the outrage of the weak and the defenseless by the powerful and by the aggressor.

Mr. President, I recur to one other thing which I suggested a moment ago. If an adversary should attack Canada, would we refuse to feed our neighbors, would we refuse to let Canada have, in the course of normal trade, without any violation of international law, the things which would mean her life or her death?

Mr. President, suppose another Maximilian should unfurl in Mexico the imperial banner, what would America do? Would we say to Mexico, "You must starve. You shall fight without arms and without munitions, though the invader comes from another hemisphere"?

Mr. President, suppose another holy alliance should challenge the Monroe Doctrine and say that it would impose the royal system in Central or South America. But America has said in advance, "We shall not furnish you arms in the Western Hemisphere. We shall not let you buy food in America." We say in advance to any conqueror who wants to invade South and Central America, "Come on over; you are free to do so. America has promised by statute that you shall not be molested." Do we want to adopt that as the policy of America? Do we want to announce to the world that America, the great nation devoted to the ideals of peace, will give up her influence everywhere on this earth to the international bully who is armed, who is armed to the teeth, and is seeking the possessions of his neighbor? Every weak and unprepared country in the world will tremble at that sort of a policy. Every ambitious international country which entertains ambitions of conquest and greed and military glory will welcome the announcement of that policy by America.

Mr. President, I shall support concurrence in the House amendments to the resolution because such amendments make the act temporary. I hope that by next February the Congress may be able to consider these measures in calmness and in wisdom. It is unfortunate that here in the closing hours of this session we should have this question pressed to our lips with the threat that unless we drink it the work of the Senate shall be impeded and adjournment rendered impossible.

Let us come back here in January and, if legislation shall be required, enact a measure which contains a sound public policy and one which does not strip America in the forums of the world of whatever moral influence her history and her example entitle her to claim.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask for a vote.

Mr. NYE, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, there are some other Senators who are anxious to make some remarks and I think in fairness, since 15 minutes was consumed by the roll call and other things that the time ought to be extended 15 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The vote is on the motion, as I understand, to concur in the House amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to concur in the amendments of the House. The clerk will continue the calling of the roll.

The Chief Clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS]. I understand, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I am free to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I am authorized to state that were they present and voting the Senators named by me would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is detained on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote, if present.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent from the city. I understand, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I am therefore free to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. My colleague [Mr. VAN NUYS] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 79, nays 2, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 531. An act granting compensation to Walter F. Northrop;

H. R. 7678. An act to authorize the Director of the Mint to supplement the approved design of the 50-cent piece commemorating the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone, the coinage of which was authorized by act of the Seventy-third Congress (Public, No. 258, S. 3355); and

H. R. 7932. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Susquehanna River, at or near Wyalusing, in the county of Bradford, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

OFFICIAL OR UNOFFICIAL SENATE REPRESENTATIVE ABROAD

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, yesterday I offered a resolution (S. Res. 198) which was printed and ordered to lie upon the table. I ask that the Secretary may read the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 198), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate hereby gives notice that none of its Members has been authorized either directly or indirectly to act as the official or unofficial representative abroad of the Senate or any of its committees.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I desire to take the floor to discuss it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will be very glad to have the Senator do that, and then I myself should like to make a brief statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, numerous press reports, widely published, some of them emanating from this country and others coming from abroad, have indicated that a Member of this body, who is traveling abroad, has assumed to act or to speak with reference to international affairs as a representative of the Senate or as in some quasi-official capacity.

In a time such as this, when a large part of the world is filled with anger, and when international ruptures are threatened, it is exceedingly important that the public understand the basis for all opinions expressed by those who are in official position.

Not only in the instance of the Senator to whom reference has been made in my remarks but in another instance, when it was announced that a beloved official of this body would travel in foreign places the press have sought to give the impression to the country and to the world that he would be on a quasi-public mission, thus seeking to give to a purely personal visit an official aspect. It is my belief that such publicity, for whatever purpose it may be made, is harmful and disturbing rather than beneficial and pacifying.

It is inconceivable to me that any Senator, when traveling in foreign lands, would hold himself out as an official representative of his Government. I am convinced that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] has not done so; neither do I believe that he has sought to do so. In support of that conclusion I submit to the Senate a cablegram received a few moments ago from the junior Senator from Idaho and which I shall read:

OXFORD, August 24, 1935.

Senator JOSEPH ROBINSON,
Washington:

Advised LA FOLLETTE introduced resolution Senate disclaim authorizing Member official or unofficial representative. Repeatedly stated my visit purely personal seeking information only. Don't know motive for resolution but assure you statements were given with understanding they represented my personal views. Not advised grounds Hearst press attributes me, but statement about United States going into war based possibility of world war similar to 1914. Have made similar statements in United States often. I thought you should know these facts.

J. P. POPE.

Thus the junior Senator from Idaho disavows unqualifiedly those published reports to which reference was made in the beginning of my remarks, attributing to him an effort to speak as the representative of any group or party or person save himself.

In the latter portion of the cablegram it may be observed that he accepts responsibility for those published reports which attribute to him the declaration in interviews that he believes there is great danger that the United States will be drawn into the war should another world war occur similar to that of 1914. We all recognize the right of any Senator to express his views and to express his sincere views. I have no doubt that the junior Senator from Idaho in making that statement uttered his sentiments.

I take this occasion, however, to say that I do not see any advantage to be gained by either a private citizen or an official of this Government at this time under present conditions giving publicity to the fear which the junior Senator from Idaho expresses. I believe that no advantage whatever is to be gained by expressing a fear or a dread of that nature. The psychological effect of it, in my judgment, is calculated to prove harmful.

There is, in my humble opinion, no spot on this broad continent, no place under the Stars and Stripes, where there is any substantial measure of sympathy in favor of this Nation becoming involved in a European conflict. If I have a correct estimate of public opinion, sentiment everywhere is in favor of doing everything possible to keep this country out of war, to maintain the peace of our people.

If any European nation—and I hope those who sit in the press gallery will give the same publicity to this opinion that was given to the alleged opinion of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE]—if any European nation is proceeding on the theory that this Government or its resources, either of man power or wealth, will contribute to the adjustment of European controversies other than by peaceful suggestion or action, that nation is being misled.

We want no war. We want no wealth gained from war. We want peace, and we do not propose to go into a war to settle European controversies.

In making that statement, I do not imply a disposition to sacrifice either the dignity or the honor of my country. I make it that all the world may understand that, so far as my opinion is concerned, we do not propose to be used, we do not propose to be drawn to the support of causes or to the settlement of controversies which do not involve American interests, American rights, or American welfare.

In view of the statement of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] that he has always spoken only in a personal capacity, I do not believe this resolution should be regarded as a rebuke to him; but as others are going abroad, and as publicity agents, for their own unaccountable purposes, seem disposed to attach importance to visits of American officials to foreign countries, I believe it is well enough to say to the people of the United States and to the people wherever news travels that neither the Senate of the United States nor its committee has sent an ambassador abroad or will send an ambassador abroad.

In expressing an opinion contrary to that asserted by the Senator from Idaho in the cablegram I have read, I neither express nor imply a criticism of him. I have a view contrary to that which he entertains. He will be as happy as I shall be to have the world understand that he is not assuming to represent his Government when he says we may likely be drawn into war. It is with that conviction that I conclude my remarks with the declaration that this resolution shall not be taken as a rebuke to him, but as designed to prevent the recurrence of such unfortunate publicity as that which has been given to his visit and to the proposed visit of other officials of this Government to foreign lands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is little I can add to the very complete statement which the senior Senator from Arkansas has made concerning this resolution. I do wish, however, to make it clear to the Senate that I was not prompted to introduce the resolution by any desire upon my part either to embarrass the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] or to imply that any of this unfortunate publicity which has resulted from his trip was to be attributed to him.

Nevertheless, we all know that, regardless of whether or not the Senator from Idaho made every effort to make it clear that his views as expressed were those of himself alone, the fact remains that the press in this country have carried those dispatches in such a way as to give the impression that the junior Senator from Idaho was in fact an unofficial representative of the Senate and of one of its very important committees.

Further, I wish to make it clear to the Senate that I was equally concerned in making perfectly certain that the trips of any other Senator to Europe or elsewhere abroad should not be subjected to the same kind of misinterpretation which has been placed upon the trip of the junior Senator from Idaho. I think it is very clear that I have no personal considerations in submitting this resolution, because, as a matter of fact, it is possible that I may be a member of another group of Senators who are planning to make a trip abroad. As one of that group, I wish to have it equally clear to the people of this country and to the people of the countries we shall visit that the occasion upon which we are making the trip has no official connection with the Senate nor with any of its committees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. While the Senator disclaims any intention to direct this resolution at the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], is it not inevitable that it will result in his humiliation and in a reflection upon the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not so construe the adoption of the resolution, because the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the one I am making at this time are calculated to indicate that there is no intention either by the author of the resolution or by the Senate, if it should decide to adopt it, to reflect upon the Senator from Idaho.

What we are seeking to do, if the Senator will bear with me, is to make it absolutely clear, so far as the situation in the future during the adjournment of Congress is concerned, that unfortunate interpretations shall not be placed either upon the statements made by Senators who may be traveling abroad or upon the fact that they are making such visits abroad.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator that I do not believe the junior Senator from Idaho has at any time pretended to represent either the Senate or the State Department or the President or anybody else; and I cannot resist the absolute conclusion that this resolution, if adopted, cannot be construed as anything else than a direct humiliation and rebuke of the Senator from Idaho. Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that if he has any hopes of controlling the utterances of Senators about the World War I invite him to reflect upon the discussions which have been going on in this Chamber for 2 months by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and others, and in the newspapers everywhere, to the effect that America is going to be involved in any war that comes, a world war, or otherwise.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would be the last person in this body who would desire to curb or to curtail the right of any Senator, or any citizen for that matter, to make any statement which he believed in conformity with his convictions upon any question.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Is not this resolution more likely to be interpreted as a protection to the Senator now sojourning in Europe, rather than any humiliation or embarrassment to him?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think, as a matter of fact, it will be a protection not only to the Senator from Idaho but to every other Senator or any other official connected with this body who may go abroad, by making certain that the public record shows that there is no justification for misrepresentation by the press as to the character of the visits or the character of the utterances made by Senators or by officials of this body in connection with trips they may make abroad.

Mr. President, the fact must be borne in mind by Senators that one of the reasons for the misinterpretation which has been placed upon visits of Senators abroad is the fact that our form of government is so different from the parliamentary system which prevails in some countries of Europe. There the majority of the parliament is responsible for the government. It is in fact the government, and naturally any utterances made by those who are members of parliament, and particularly of the majority party, are given practically the same significance as though they had been uttered by the government itself.

In our situation, of course, an entirely different principle prevails. Therefore I believe that, as a matter of broad public policy and for the protection of Senators and others connected with this body who may be traveling abroad, the adoption of this resolution will be a protection to them individually against misinterpretation and misconstruction, and also that it will be notice to all the countries concerned that any visits made by Members of this body, or those who may be officially connected with it, are in fact visits made by individuals acting in their capacity as citizens of the United States, and not either official or unofficial representatives of this body or any of its committees.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, this discussion, particularly on the resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin, bringing to us the reflections as expressed by the leader of the majority, invites us to consider what it is that invariably awakens these misunderstandings and misconceptions.

I regret to see that this morning's news of the official Government of our own country discloses that on yesterday and the day before, while the joint resolution on neutrality and embargo that was presented by the honorable Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body was then before us, and presented by him with complete explanation coupled with that which appeared afterward to be the conciliatory or as a compromise feature of the joint resolution as it came from the House, two eminent representatives of foreign governments rose in their public place and called attention to what they said was a sure approach of war, in which, each added, all the nations would be involved, and that this, our country, the United States—to use the exact expression—" could not keep out." Then one of these eminent officials, speaking from his place, from whatever motive he had, referring to the country of which he is the spokesman or for which he was then speaking—or, rather, more literally, from which he was speaking—said that the time had come when a change must be had as to their policy of neutrality and the matter of embargo. Then, sir, said the distinguished spokesman, " and the United States should also change its policy."

Mr. President, it was an unfortunate expression, for it is not unfair to say it was not the politesse of diplomacy or the courtesy of parliamentary language that anyone in a foreign government should assume to use the mandatory phrase to this country or concerning it that it " should " change its policy.

Whatever policy America may find necessary for its welfare its people will adopt. Whatever policy it does adopt, if it does not meet the approval or apparently the concurrence of any foreign land, its spokesmen have a right to express their own individual opinions; but I regret that one should, in an official place in a friendly country, find it agreeable to use the expression, and double it, that the time had come when it—referring to that particular nation—would change its policy as to embargo and neutrality, and that because of its change now the United States should change its policy, as though we were under some obligation to follow whatever course the other country chose, and that we were amenable and subject to the direct influence of the intimation that, because they change some policy they had as to control, this United States should change, and therefore under the foreign direction we were obligated to obey.

Mr. President, it is such unfortunate expressions as these which awaken among our people something of a spirit at this time, as the Senator from Arkansas well stated, in the temper of the hour, of resentment because of misunderstanding. It is my judgment, I make bold in this concluding observation to state, that many of the statesmen and officials of these nations who make utterances which attract their own people, and may, alas, invite something of revulsion on the part of others, have not the intention, of course, of awakening conflict, or of arousing among their own people any martial spirit of conflict among themselves or their friends. But, sir, the sentiment at times like these is expressed when there are great political differences within countries, when the home policies of these different countries are awakening conflict among their own people, it is then when there is a natural inclination to quell the mutiny by whatever course might be adopted, a most familiar attitude it is. It is one of direction and long practice to assume some question of conflict with a foreign rival as a reason for opening it, trusting to divert attention from the purely local dispute, and if we fancy we have discovered as new this political device or if we fancy other nations are unacquainted and inexperienced in this, I beg to reply by imposing upon the Senate the suggestion that in Henry IV, Shakespeare has it that as the king lay upon his dying bed he was speaking to his son, the prince, about the political home confusion and touching the local questions then prevailing, the conflicts of policy in politics. The king father to his son the prince advises:

> Therefore, my Harry,
> Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
> With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,
> May waste the memory of the former days.

Surely we adopt the Ecclesiastes philosophy:

> I looked under the sun and saw nothing new.

Mr. President, for the reason, therefore, that these observations such as I allude to, coming from foreign sources, unhappily misunderstood and misinterpreted, are nevertheless a mere expression of what may be called the evasion of politics, I trust we may not attach too much importance or seriousness to them. We again announce as the American policy peace and friendship with all nations, conflict or trespass upon none.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the discussion now in progress in the Senate. I have listened with interest to these protestations on behalf of peace.

In times of peace everybody pays homage to the goddess of peace. On yesterday Mr. Lansbury, the leader of the Labor Party in the British Parliament, expressed apprehension that war is now imminent. He expressed the belief that in the event of war the United States will become involved. Indeed he said: " The United States cannot possibly keep out of the next war." He may be right. That may be true. I hope that we can preserve peace and prevent war.

Whatever the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] may have said across the sea, every Senator must, in the light of our experience, feel some apprehension as to the danger that the United States would become involved, in the event that war should break out in Europe.

I apprehend, as others must, the possibility that the United States might become embroiled in a foreign war. I apprehend the probability that we might become involved in European carnage, should it occur again. In the light of our experience we may well give heed to Mr. Lansbury when he forecasts the certainty that America would again plunge herself in a European sea of blood and fire. As for me, I am one " burnt child " that dreads the fire.

I appreciate the fine sentiments expressed by the senior Senator from Arkansas. In these piping times of peace everybody professes to share those lofty sentiments. But I remember that when the World War burst upon Europe in 1914 the same lofty sentiments were universally expressed, and, I believe, all but universally entertained. There was a general, if not a universal, sentiment in this country against our participation in that holocaust of death. I said at the time that there were a few munition mongers sitting like vultures on the Tree of Life.

Senator Lodge was at that time the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. He was in Europe at the outbreak of the war. He issued a solemn warning that the United States must remain neutral and must not enter the conflict.

I remember that the President of the United States issued a solemn proclamation of neutrality. He said the United States was not concerned with the remoter causes of the war. He declared it to be our supreme duty and purpose to remain neutral in fact as well as in name; that we must be impartial in thought as well as in action. We must be neutral in thought. We were even to observe neutrality in our thoughts. Yet the United States entered the war, with all its tragic consequences.

How far our entrance into the war was attributable to the course of events in Europe and how far it was attributable to subtle and sinister propaganda in this country I cannot tell. Sir Gilbert Parker was at that time connected with the intelligence bureau in the military service of Great Britain. He was obliging enough to tell us and to tell the world the steps which he took to decoy or to drag the United States into the charnel house of Europe. I ask to have his own language read into the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From Harper's Monthly Magazine, issue of March 1918]

By Rt. Hon. Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart

Perhaps here I may be permitted to say a few words concerning my own work since the beginning of the war. It is in a way a story by itself, but I feel justified in writing one or two paragraphs about it. Practically since the day war broke out between England and the Central Powers I became responsible for American publicity. I need hardly say that the scope of my department was very extensive and its activities widely ranged. Among the activities was a weekly report to the British Cabinet on the state of American opinion and constant touch with the permanent correspondents of American newspapers in England. I also frequently arranged for important public men in England to act for us by interviews in American newspapers; and among these distinguished people were Mr. Lloyd-George (the present Prime Minister), Viscount Grey, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Bonar Law, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Edward Carson, Lord Robert Cecil, Mr. Walter Runciman (the Lord Chancelor), Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Lord Cromer, Will Crooks, Lord Curzon, Lord Gladstone, Lord Haldane, Mr. Henry James, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Selfridge, Mr. Zangwill, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, and fully a hundred others.

Among other things, we supplied 360 newspapers in the smaller States of the United States with an English newspaper which gives a weekly review and comment of the affairs of the war. We established connection with the man in the street through cinema pictures of the Army and Navy, as well as through interviews, articles, pamphlets, etc., and by letters in reply to individual American critics, which were printed in the chief newspaper of the State in which they lived and were copied in newspapers of other and neighboring States. We advised and stimulated many people to write articles; we utilized the friendly services and assistance of confidential friends; we had reports from important Americans constantly; and established association, by personal correspondence, with influential and eminent people of every profession in the United States, beginning with university and college presidents, professors, and scientific men, and running through all the ranges of the population. We asked our friends and correspondents to arrange for speeches, debates, and lectures by American citizens, but we did not encourage Britishers to go to America and preach the doctrine of entrance into the war.

Mr. GORE. I wonder why?

Besides an immense private correspondence with individuals, we had our documents and literature sent to great numbers of public libraries, Y. M. C. A. societies, universities, colleges, historical societies, clubs, and newspapers.

It is hardly necessary to say that the work was one of extreme difficulty and delicacy—

Mr. GORE. I wonder why?

but I was fortunate in having a wide acquaintance in the United States and in knowing that a great many people had read my books and were not prejudiced against me.

We advised and stimulated many people to write articles; we utilized the friendly services and assistance of confidential friends; we had reports from important Americans constantly; and established association, by personal correspondence, with influential and eminent people of every profession in the United States, beginning with university and college presidents, professors, and scientific men, and running through all the ranges of the population.

The Americans have nothing to gain by success in this war, except something spiritual, mental, manly, national, and human.

Mr. GORE. There, Mr. President, is the trail of the serpent—"something spiritual", "something spiritual." When Madame Roland was being led to the guillotine she exclaimed, "O Liberty, what crimes have been perpetrated in thy name!"

Perhaps the safest situation that could be imagined actually did arise. The Democratic Party in America, which probably would not have supported a Republican President had he declared war, were practically forced by the logic of circumstances to support President Wilson when he declared war, because he had blocked up every avenue of attack.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, to what extent our entrance into the World War was due to such propaganda I do not know. No man can tell.

To what extent the boys who gave up their lives in that war owe their untimely death to that propaganda I do not know. To what extent our wounded and crippled veterans owe their infirmities to such propaganda I do not know.

Mr. President, I did not then and I do not now quarrel with any man who voted in favor of our entrance into the World War. It was the most solemn responsibility that any man in American public life was ever called upon to assume. It was the most tragic decision that any man in American public life was ever called upon to render. I never quarreled with them and I could never understand why they quarreled with those of us who did not favor the United States' entrance into the war.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the subject before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LOGAN. I understood that the Senator from Wisconsin requested that the resolution be printed and lie on the table. I did not think he asked for immediate consideration.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, that was on yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This morning the Senator from Wisconsin took the resolution off the table, and it is now under consideration.

Mr. GORE. Is the Senator from Kentucky answered by the Chair?

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will yield I would say that the only interest I have in asking the question is that there is much important business pending before the Senate, and I think it not a very good time to go back and fight over the World War again, or fight over one which we may think is coming in the future.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if we revive the memories of that war, the propaganda and the insidious methods which plunged this Nation into the World War—if a review of those causes, if a review of that propaganda may serve as a warning, if it may save the life of one American boy, it is well worth 5 minutes of the invaluable time of the junior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection in the world to reviewing the World War. I think it is very valuable, and the Senator from Oklahoma can do it as well as anyone. However, there can be no reason why on the closing day of the Senate, when everyone desires to get through and go home, any Senator should so far forget himself as to take the time to make a long speech, which he could have made anytime in the 8 months during which we have been in session, or anytime in the future. That was the only purpose I had in making my statement.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the pending resolution came up but a few moments ago. War is imminent in Europe. It has been imminent for 9 months. An acute crisis exists across the sea. We are warned by our experience, and 200,000 graves plead with the American Senate to be warned by that tragic experience. If the Senator from Kentucky is indifferent toward the voice of the dead, I cannot share his indifference. I was in the Senate when the United States declared war. I was opposed to the war then. Yet we rushed headlong into the bloody vortex of crimson war, and today as a legacy of that deed we have the present depression, with all its evils and with all its agony, warning us against a repetition of that act; and if I venture to take one moment of the Senate's time and it irritates the Senator from Kentucky, I apologize to him and to his constituency.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. GORE. But I must discharge my duty as I see it.

Now, Mr. President, I say——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. And with all the protestations of peace——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GORE. No; I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. GORE. Let the Senator answer to his constituency for the indifference which he manifests upon this floor to an impending tragedy which might cost millions of lives and billions of treasure. If I speak a moment upon that subject, and if that be an offense, then, indeed, am I an offender.

Mr. President, we became involved in that war. It cost the warring nations more than $330,000,000,000. It left the warring nations staggering beneath a debt of $200,000,000,000. That was bad enough, but that is not the worst. It cost them ten millions of priceless human lives. And the price has not been paid in full. You cannot destroy that much wealth; you cannot create that much of debt; you cannot extinguish that many human lives in as short a time as 4 years on as small an earth as this planet without bringing the most tragic, the most terrific consequences in its train. This depression is part of that train. And who can say that the half has yet been told? Unborn children who inherit those debts instead of liberty must toil beneath their chains. I grow weary thinking of their load.

Mr. President, the venerable senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is the only Member, sitting in the Senate today, who then cast his vote against the war. I was a Member of the Senate at the time. I had been confined to my bed for 3 months when the declaration of war was adopted; I was unable to be present and to register my protest, but I announced then to the world that if I had been present I should have voted against the war. I was one of seven Senators who were opposed to our entering the war; indeed, I was the only Member from Oklahoma who was opposed to our entry into the war. I repeat that I quarrel not with those who voted in favor of the war; I repeat that I could never understand why they quarrel with us who did not.

They got their war; they got their war with all its taxes, with all its debts, with all its bonds, with all its blood, and with all its graves. I do not quarrel with them.

Mr. President, I had promised the people of Oklahoma that I would oppose our entrance into the war. In the presidential campaign of 1916, the national committee did me the honor to send me through the suffrage States of the far West, bearing the assurance that President Wilson had kept this country out of war and that he would continue to keep this country out of war. Our boys were then on the Mexican border. The mothers of this country had just enough touch of war to fill them with horror at the threatened possibility of our entering the war across the sea. That to them was an unspeakable tragedy.

I told the women of the West that a vote for Wilson was a vote for peace; I told the women of the West that a vote for Hughes was a vote for war. I described the scenes that would follow if they voted for Mr. Hughes and elected him to the Presidency—how their sons would be torn from their arms and sent across the seas to die in the bloody slaughter pens of Europe. I assured them that if they voted for Mr. Wilson, and that if Mr. Wilson were reelected, they would kiss their sons to bed at night with their prayers and hail them on the coming of the morrow; that there would be no empty chairs in their family circle. The women of the West wept upon my words.

The Republican organization could not keep the Republican mothers in line; they broke ranks; they voted for Mr. Wilson; they elected Mr. Wilson. They voted to keep their sons out of the jaws of death. They voted in vain. But I told them, as I had told the people of Oklahoma, that I would never vote to draft their sons and ship them over the sea to fight and bleed and die in anybody's quarrels but our own. They took me at my word. I kept my word with them. I kept the faith. It cost me my seat in the Senate. It put me out of the Senate for 10 years. I am, perhaps, the only man in the history of American politics who was ever defeated for keeping his plighted faith. But, Mr. President, today I have this one consolation, that the mothers of Oklahoma will believe me when I tell them now as I told them then that I will never vote to tear their sons from their arms and ship them over the sea to fight and bleed and die in anybody's battles but our own.

WILL ROGERS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GORE

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be published in the RECORD directly following the remarks made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] today a radio address delivered by the Senator from Oklahoma on Friday night pertaining to the tragic death of Will Rogers.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

WILL ROGERS MEMORIAL

Sorrowing friends, I can say of Will Rogers as Mark Antony said of Caesar, "He was my friend, faithful and just to me." I knew him before his name was known to the trumpet tongue of fame. He was unspoiled by fame and fortune. He could walk with kings and keep the common touch.

He was in the truest sense an original American. He was a Cherokee, an ornament to his tribe, an ornament to his race.

He was Oklahoma's most celebrated native son. He was Oklahoma's most celebrated son. All his rivals paled beside him as the stars beside the sun.

He was America's greatest humorist. He shone with his own luster; he did not shine with borrowed splendor.

He had more than humor, he had a heart; more than talent, he had genius. Genius is universal, it is not national, it is not local, it belongs to no time or place. It belongs to the race. It is the heritage of man.

Will Rogers contributed more than his share of sunshine, of joy, of happiness, more than his share of good will, good cheer, and good fellowship, to the sons and daughters of men. But we never miss the music till the sweet-voiced bird has flown. Hushed and forever are all the happy "hello folks", hushed and forever his world-renowned alarm clock, hushed and forever all the sparkling wit and humor. Silent and forever all the mirth and merriment, silent and forever all the cheery laughter—forever and forever. "And the silence is unbroken and the darkness gives no token and the only word there spoken" is—The Last Round-Up.

This day has seen the last of Will Rogers, but the world has not heard the last of Will Rogers. His fame cannot die. His name will not perish from the earth.

Too many sorrowing souls will sigh
"For the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."
Too many sorrowing souls will sing
"And when some day the shadows fall,
As shadows sometimes do,
I'll reach my hands across the mist,
And touch the hands of you."

Good night, till we meet again.

OFFICIAL OR UNOFFICIAL SENATE REPRESENTATIVES ABROAD

The Senate resumed consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 198) submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE on the 23d instant, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate hereby gives notice that none of its Members has been authorized either directly or indirectly to act as the official or unofficial representative abroad of the Senate or any of its committees.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have not risen for the purpose of discussing the pending resolution, but only to make a brief statement.

When the Senator from Oklahoma, to whom I have never yet shown a discourtesy, so discourteously refused to yield, I meant only to suggest to him that perhaps I had greater reason to be interested in the World War or its results than had he. I only wanted to say to him that my two youngest and best loved brothers fill 2 of the 200,000 graves he mentioned, and there are others. That is all I wanted to say to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is embarrassing to me to discuss the pending resolution; I cannot support it; and yet there is nothing in it that I can deny. It states the truth. But I think it would be very unfortunate if it should be pressed to a vote in the Senate. It may be that its introduction has accomplished a good purpose. I cannot say as to that.

We have not given anybody authority, and we will not, I presume, give anybody authority, directly or indirectly, to act as an official or unofficial representative abroad of this body. I can understand, however, how the junior Senator from Idaho might have been misrepresented, and probably has been misrepresented, by the press of the world, and how a misconception or a wrong idea on account of the publicity that has been, and naturally would be, given to any comment a Senator traveling abroad at this hour might make upon the probability or the likelihood that a great war is about to come upon the world.

If we should adopt the resolution, I can understand how the press of the world might give another impression to the world that would be wrong and that would have a damaging effect upon the attitude that the United States, in my judgment, will take should another European war break out.

It seems to me that the adoption of the resolution would give an erroneous impression, and it seems to me a vote upon it, dividing the Senate, would give an erroneous impression. As I see it, its introduction might possibly accomplish, in one respect, some good.

Its adoption, as I see it, would accomplish evil, because it would not be taken by the world as possibly it should be. It would give a misconception and wrong idea, which might have, and I believe would have, a damaging effect if later on war in Europe should again break out and agitation should begin, as was begun in the World War, to bring us into it. I sincerely trust, under all the circumstances, that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] may see proper to withdraw the resolution in order that there may be no direct vote upon it.

I was here during the World War. I was in this body when we declared war. I am now the only living man who was then a Member of the Senate, who was present in the Senate when the vote was cast and who voted against that declaration. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was just as sincerely opposed to it, but, unfortunately, was not able to be present on account of illness.

Of all the votes I ever cast in this body or in the House of Representatives during my 10 years of service in that body, I never cast one with which I was so well satisfied as I was and am with my vote against that declaration of war. All of us who have served here any length of time have made mistakes; I know I have made many mistakes; but, as I see it now, after a deliberation of years, that vote was not one of my many mistakes.

I am not one who believes there is any danger of the United States being drawn into what looks like an impending conflagration in Europe. Like the Senator from Oklahoma, I do not now, and I never have uttered any criticism against Members of the House or of the Senate who did not agree with me at that time; but I venture the assertion now that the experience of our Government in the World War was sufficient to keep us out of any future world war so long as that memory is fresh in the hearts and the souls of the American people.

I think now, as I thought then, that we were drawn into it by a false, malicious, and malignant propaganda which is still too fresh in the minds of our people for any men or set of men, by any disguise or statement of falsehood made to appear as truth, again to deceive the American people, and that we are in no danger of getting into another world war, if one should come, unless there should be an invasion of American territory where we would be defending our own flag and our own country.

Much as I should regret to see the nations of Europe engaged again in a war, and far as I would be glad to go to lend the assistance of our Government to keep them out of war, I am not fearful that by any means or by any propaganda we can be drawn into such a war.

As the Senator from Oklahoma has so well said, while 200,000 American lives were lost and many billions of dollars were spent, we are still suffering and we shall continue to suffer from our participation in that war. Long after we are dead and forgotten our descendants will be toiling in the fields and in the shops to pay the bill which has been put upon our people by reason of that war. Our great depression, second only to war—if, indeed, it is second—as I understand and as I look at it, has been to a major extent brought upon us as a result of the false step which we made when we went into the war.

It seems to me we can best maintain our neutrality, it seems to me the situation would be better understood by all, if the resolution should be withdrawn, particularly in view of the fact that the cablegram from the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] explains how, if any misunderstanding has come, it has not been because he pretended either directly or indirectly to represent the Senate. That fact ought to clear away the clouds, ought to clear the sky, and make it plain that we are not only out of it, but we are going to stay out of it.

But I fear either the passage or the defeat of the pending resolution, if we vote upon it, would have a tendency to becloud the issue, because of misunderstanding and misrepresentation which might appear in an interested press in Europe, perhaps to some extent in the United States. There might be a misconstruction placed upon our action, no matter which way we voted on the resolution.

Therefore, I hope, under all these circumstances, that the Senator from Wisconsin will see that whatever good he undertook to accomplish has been perhaps accomplished by the fact that we have now on record an explanation of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] that there was no intention of representing the Senate or expressing anyone's opinion except his own, which I concede, and I think we all ought to concede, he has a right to express either here or elsewhere.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will not be pressed. I think it would be unwise to pass it. The inevitable implication of any such action as this by the Senate of the United States is that the Members of this body have such an uncertain conception of the duties and obligations of a Senator, and of the proprieties of the occasions which may confront them if they go abroad, that notice must be given, in advance, to the world that they cannot be trusted to observe the ethics of their position or to speak within the proprieties of the occasion.

I should not like to see the Senate, by a formal vote, cast any such unjust reflection upon its Members. I think each Member of the Senate may be safely trusted to conduct himself with due regard to the proprieties and to the obligations and responsibilities resting upon him as a Senator.

I do not believe that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] has held himself out as a representative of this body or of this Government in any way. His expressions were rather unfortunate in the circumstances. But he spoke as an individual. If one is a Senator of the United States it is difficult to divest oneself of the character of a Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McADOO. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it possible for a man, being a Senator, speaking on the policy of our country, to divest himself of his character as a Senator?

Mr. McADOO. I have just suggested, in anticipation of the Senator's remarks, that I do not think he can divest himself of his character as a Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Therefore, I think the Senate ought to take pains to purge itself of the implications of statements of Senators tending to convince the world that we are getting ready to get into a war.

Mr. McADOO. As I said before, I think the remarks of the junior Senator from Idaho were unfortunate in the circumstances; but I do not think it is such a grave and serious matter, after all, as to require the adoption of a resolution by this body putting the world on notice that no Senator has been given any authority to act officially or unofficially as the representative of the Senate or any of its committees if he happens to be abroad, whatever the word "abroad" means. I believe it would carry unfortunate implications and would be a reflection upon the Membership of this body.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not by formal action approve, either directly or by implication, any such idea.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but in justice to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] I wish to make a very brief statement.

The Senator from Idaho happened to consult me about his trip abroad on several occasions before he left this country. I happen to be the president of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, which meets once a year in some national capital to discuss international problems. It was contemplated that there would be a delegation from Congress to attend the conference in Brussels, which met on the 26th day of July; but, on account of the continued session of Congress, it was impossible for any of the Members to get away.

Prior to that, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] had spoken to me about the possibility of being included on any such delegation. He stated that he desired to go abroad, and wished to meet as many prominent persons as he might, and, purely in his personal and individual capacity, to observe whatever he might concerning the situation in the world for his own enlightenment and for whatever use he might make of it as a citizen of the United States.

There is nothing at all improper in making such a trip. There is nothing improper in coming in contact with important men throughout the world in the countries which the Senator might visit. All of us do that when we go abroad.

I have been to Europe two or three times, the first time during the World War, as a member of a sort of involuntary or voluntary committee which went over there to see what was going on. During our sojourn we attempted to see everybody of importance, including kings, prime ministers, generals, and all those who were engaged in the war. Of course, every time we had a conference, whether it was as a group or as individuals, when we came out we were importuned by newspapermen to have something to say.

I presume the proper course for a Member of the Senate is to close his mouth and say nothing about anything he sees or hears, or anything that anybody tells him, but we all know how difficult it is to do that. When a Senator or a private citizen is traveling abroad, and some newspaperman asks him what he thinks about something, he never knows what appears in the press in his own country, because by the time he gets back the newspaper in which it was carried has been forgotten, and as somebody has wisely said, there is nothing so dead as yesterday's newspaper.

I recall that in 1930 the Senator from Montana, Mr. WHEELER; the then Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Cutting; the present Assistant Secretary of State, Dr. Sayre; and Mr. Charles Taft, son of former Chief Justice Taft; and I were in Europe together. I do not think Mr. Taft was in the party that went to Moscow; but I do recall that the Senator from Montana and the then Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Cutting, and Dr. Sayre and I were in Moscow for a week or more. We made an effort to see Joseph Stalin, but he was not in the city. We saw the next in command of the so-called "State Department", as we call it, the man next in authority to Stalin, and had a long interview with him. We saw Dr. Karakhan, who had been Ambassador to China and who was occupying a station similar to that of Assistant Secretary of State in our country. We sought those interviews because we desired to discuss many problems which were at that time interesting to any American and to any citizen of any part of the world with respect to Russia.

At that time we had not recognized Russia. During these conversations the question was discussed, and when we came out of the conferences inevitably and invariably newspapermen were at the door to ask us if we had anything to say. I recall, if I am not mistaken, that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] made the statement that he was in favor of the recognition of Russia; and I recall that the distinguished then Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Cutting—one of our beloved and respected Members who, as a result of premature death, has gone to his reward—made the statement to a correspondent of an American newspaper that for a long time he had favored the recognition of Russia by the United States and he still felt that way about it.

I do not think I made any statement on the subject, because at that time I had not made up my mind; but if the Senate of the United States had then been in session, it would have been just as proper for it to have passed a resolution to notify the world and Russia that the Senator from Montana and the Senator from New Mexico were not speaking for the United States Senate, and they had not been sent there as official or unofficial ambassadors of the United States Senate to confer with anybody about the recognition of Russia, or to give out any statement about it, or any impression that might in any way reflect the sentiments of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should agree with the Senator's statement if the press, without authority from the Senator from Montana and the late Senator from New Mexico, had, in their dispatches, given the distinct impression that those two Senators were on an unofficial mission as observers and representing the United States Senate and the Foreign Relations Committee. If that had been the situation, it would have been just as important, in my opinion, for the Senate to have disabused the minds of the public in the United States, and the people of the respective countries involved, as I believe it to be in this instance.

I desire to say that Senators who were not here when this discussion started apparently do not understand that both the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and myself have made it perfectly clear that this resolution is not directed against the junior Senator from Idaho or intended to reflect upon him; but, as the Senator from Arkansas pointed out, the moment it was announced that the Vice President of the United States was contemplating a trip to the Orient, the same implications—of course, without authority from the Vice President—were placed upon the occasion of his trip, and the press by inference implied that he was going there as an unofficial representative of this Government in an effort to solve some of the problems that are pressing so far as this country and countries in the Orient are concerned.

This resolution is not an attack upon any Senator or upon the Presiding Officer of this body. The purpose of the resolution is to protect Senators and others who may travel abroad from having the occasion of their visit or utterances which they may make misconstrued and misinterpreted to their embarrassment, to the embarrassment of the Senate, and, perchance, to the embarrassment of this Government in the future.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was present when the discussion started and I have heard every word of it, and I appreciate fully what the Senator from Wisconsin says. I hope to be a member of that company which is to take the same trip as that which is contemplated by the Senator from Wisconsin, but if I desire to have the Senate pass any resolution protecting me on account of anything I may or may not say while I am gone, I will ask the Senate myself to do it; I will not ask any other Senator to introduce a resolution to protect me on account of anything I may or may not say.

I realize that implications are frequently drawn from the mere presence of a Member of the United States Senate anywhere on any mission, and I recall that the other day, when it was announced that the Vice President was going to the Philippine Islands, and that on the way to the Philippine Islands he would stop in China and Japan, there were unauthorized and unjustified implications that the Vice President was going to China and Japan as a sort of unofficial ambassador of good will, an ambassador to those countries on some official mission, when everybody who knows anything about it knows that a delegation from both Houses of Congress has been invited by the Philippine government to attend the inauguration of the new Philippine government on November 15 in Manila, and that most of them have accepted, and those who have not regret that they have not been able to accept. It was not necessary for the Vice President to give out any statement or have the implication carried in the papers that he was going on no such official trip as was implied in the statement in the newspapers.

Since the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has come into the Chamber, I recall that in 1930 there was a delegation of Members of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives in London attending the very conference which I mentioned at the outset of my remarks. I remember that we sought and obtained a conference in London with that brilliant statesman David Lloyd George. He received us most graciously, and for an hour—compared to which I do not recall any hour I ever enjoyed as much as I did that hour—we were privileged to talk about everything that concerned the world, in that conversation between Mr. David Lloyd George and a few of us who were assembled with him, among them being the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

When we came out from that conference, the newspapermen wanted to know what we had talked about, what we had said, and what Mr. Lloyd George had said, and what impressions we had received. It may be that some member of the party—I do not recall about it now—operating under the difficulty which always confronts any public man to say nothing to any newspaperman who approaches him, may have given out some statement that was quoted in the United States. He may have been misquoted; his statement may have been misinterpreted; it may have been misrepresented. But I do not see how the Senate of the United States can with propriety take notice of every statement given out by a Senator who happens to be traveling somewhere in the world.

While it is true, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, that his resolution is not aimed at the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], we need not be so guileless as not to know that it will be so interpreted in this country and abroad. We all know that it is based upon the alleged statement made by the Senator from Idaho. We do not know what he said; we do not know whether he was correctly quoted or was misquoted. We do not know whether his statement was interpreted correctly or not. In view of the cablegram which he has sent us, it seems to me that we have a right to accept the word of our colleague, who is an honored Member of this body, and who is respected by all of us, regardless of party, that he did not hold himself out, and has at no time held himself out, as in any way remotely representing the Senate of the United States.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] is not the first roving United States Senator who ever made a statement abroad which might well have been left unsaid, and in all probability he is not the last United States Senator who will be roving around the world, who will give out statements which might well be left unstated. The question is whether the Senate of the United States feels that the statement given out by any Member of this body, whether he be an humble Member or a Member of long service, and of noted reputation, is so important that the world is so quivering upon the sentences which may fall from the lips of United States Senators, that a mere statement about what might happen under certain conditions is going to bring about a realignment of all the alliances of the world, and drench its fields again in human blood.

I share the hope expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] that this resolution will not be pressed to a vote, but if it shall be pressed to a vote, for the reasons which I have here expressed, I will vote against it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] revive pleasant memories, and I am glad to seize this proper opportunity to refer to the able speech I heard the Senator from Kentucky deliver in London upon the occasion of our duties there as American delegates to the Interparliamentary Union. I sat in the audience, and I was moved with admiration because of the precision of his phrases and the meticulous care he employed in recognizing the auspices under which he spoke.

I recall distinctly the conference with Mr. Lloyd George, to which the Senator from Kentucky referred. Mr. Lloyd George spoke over an hour and invited us to ask questions. I took down the answers in my own shorthand. It will be remembered by the Senator from Kentucky that someone asked Mr. Lloyd George about Russia. Now that some years have elapsed, I am at liberty to give the reply. Mr. Lloyd George stated, in substance:

> As you leave this hall, go by Trafalgar Square, and you will see a statue of Lord Nelson. Remember that when upon a certain occasion a signal was given to Nelson to retreat, he put the telescope to his blind eye and said, "I do not see any signal."

Mr. President, let me paraphrase what Lloyd George said, and say that not only in public life, but in private life as well, it is vitally necessary frequently to put the telescope to our blind eye. I am not certain that we might not well do so upon this occasion.

A vast deal has been said this morning about the press. As politicians, we are all anxious, one not more than another, to receive favorable mention in the press.

Reporters are seldom to blame for so-called "misstatements." In the hurry of public life we sometimes give out interviews—I am probably a sinner in this regard—without due preparation. The reporter must shoot from the hip. He has no time to turn the stylus, polish the phrase, and rub the lamp. He must get his dispatch, his story, to the desk at once. There the authorities controlling the paper may not agree with the story or may slap a headline over it not always supported by the text. The press is the "fourth estate." The press enjoys a poetic license, and it should do so. It works under difficulties.

Do not forget that the press is entitled to mangle grammar and to misapply syntax. I see one of the distinguished leaders of the "fourth estate", the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], listening to me and I am proud to have him here. The members of the "fourth estate" are the only persons who are authorized to use the first person plural for the first person singular; in other words, only newspapermen and men with tapeworms are allowed to say "we" instead of "I."

It is not well to be too touchy and thin-skinned about newspaper reports. We are lending altogether too much importance to what might have appeared in the headlines regarding the absent Senator, Mr. POPE. If we are to hold one another accountable or are to be held accountable for what Senators say, then, indeed, our entire time will be taken up in explaining what we say.

Mr. President, I have had a long political career; I have been in office since I was 18 years of age, and I give this word of advice: Never make an explanation. Let your actions speak. Never explain. If you do, the next day you will be explaining your explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, while my remarks in some respects apparently may have been interspersed with some small measure of jest, I was never more earnest than in the sentences I have just uttered.

Coming, however, to something more important, let me say that the speech the able senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] made this morning is one which reached high-water mark in American statesmanship. If, forsooth, he had never done anything else in his public life, if he had never made another utterance except his speech of this morning, I should regard his contribution to his country and to the world at large as very great, when he spoke about our desire for peace.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the vote on this resolution, which, I repeat, I hope will not be pressed—if, however, it shall have served no other purpose than to offer the occasion for the speech of the Senator from Arkansas, it would have served a noble purpose by its introduction in the Senate, because I do not know when I have heard any expression which so completely represented the feelings of the Senate and of our country as did the expression made this morning by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kentucky has precisely expressed my view of the speech of the Senator from Arkansas. In conclusion let me say the press has a habit, like politicians, of doing what it pleases. The press is just as anxious to have the favorable opinion of politicians as we politicians are to have the favorable opinion of the press; and while the press does not require or wish any defense from me, I must say that I marvel at its accuracy, considering the haste under which they must operate and the necessary and unavoidable uncertainty of public men. Our profession, being that of politics, makes it at particular times necessary that we change our opinions and for good reasons reverse our judgments. In view of all these unavoidable elements, I do not think we ought to complain when the press overplays or underplays an incident, unfortunate though it may have been, regarding a Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, to my great surprise, as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was concluding his remarks, I was handed by a friend an editorial appearing in the New York Sun which complimented some part of a speech I made on the floor of the Senate. That was quite a surprise to me. I am going to read the last sentence in an editorial in the New York Sun, particularly because I should like the Senate to know that, after having almost a full term in the Senate, for once in my life I have received one compliment in an editorial appearing in one New York newspaper. It says:

> Senator LONG is not the first to attack the practice of delegating authority, but he has succeeded in reducing his indictment to words that anybody can understand.

Mr. President, I have been very much informed by listening to the speeches of my friends in the Senate who have been abroad. With respect to the pending resolution it is very illuminating for Members, such as myself, who have never stepped outside of the confines of the United States to receive advice from the illustrious Members of this body who have visited foreign countries in their absence from the Senate; and, naturally, those of us who have never had the chance to go anywhere except from here back home and around the country nearby are immensely informed by having advice on this resolution from those Senators who have interviewed statesmen—past, present, and future—of Europe and Asia and Africa and Argentina and various other countries. Now, however, as one who has never been abroad and probably never will go abroad, with deep humility I undertake to speak on the resolution to my colleagues who have spent time abroad. I wish to give expression to an attitude which has not been colored by my contact with foreign countries.

A short time ago I received a letter from England. It is not the only letter I have received from England. I have received two or three letters from England since I have been in the Senate. [Laughter.] This letter, however, I have preserved. I expect to frame it at a future date. The letter was from the British press. It said:

> DEAR SENATOR: The British press will pay your expenses to make a trip over Europe, provided you come by London.

Then someone signed his name for the British press. I figured the thing out. I had wanted to go to England for a good long while. I had wanted to go abroad, and I had made the public statement that as soon as I had the money I was going to England. Away back in 1918 I had polished everything up to go across to the foreign countries, but I was not important enough to give out statements at that time, so I did not go. I was waiting a while. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Laughter in the galleries must cease. Conversation must not be carried on by occupants of the galleries.

Mr. LONG. So by the time I reached what might be termed a position of importance I lacked the money to defray the expenses of a trip to Europe. Therefore I have been in America ever since.

Now it has become quite the thing for every Senator, in order to be important among his people, to go abroad and send back a statement, after having conferred with the prime minister of some country, and settled the affairs of England, that he is fixing to go to Moscow to give them his judgment on what is best to be done there. Without such a statement being sent home a man loses standing. Such a statement is expected from him. Right now we are fixing to send 40 of our brothers out of this body over to the Philippine Islands and to Japan. I dare say that at least two-thirds of those men will disappoint their constituents unless an article shall appear somewhere to the effect that after discussing matters with the Mikado they gave him to understand what position he ought to take on certain matters, and that he should stay out of this country and let things alone over here, and get matters straightened out. Then a man is in shape to run for reelection. [Laughter.]

Now, I am trying an experiment in this body. I never have been shown the courtesy which was due me here in one respect. With all these trips which have been framed up, from the Vice President on down, never once has my name been included in the list to go abroad. Except for the fact that I know it would have been termed to be a matter of personal jealousy I was almost on the verge of offering an amendment when I found out that this last trip was going to take place to the Philippine Islands, which has not yet taken place. I had been waiting for some resolution to come here onto which I could tack something in order that the public might feel how I have endured being left off of all these committees—even the one which went to the Virgin Islands. [Laughter.]

So I had drawn up a resolution, waiting for some other resolution to come in here relating to foreign affairs to which it would be appropriate to attach my resolution, but after showing it to my friend from South Carolina he said to me, "It clearly shows that you are personally offended by not having been included on these committees, and perhaps if you will forbear for another term you probably will be sent some time on one of those trips. I would not do it now. Be a little patient about the matter."

I concluded to try the experiment of running for reelection in January and go back to my people and tell them that: "On personal grounds, after 6 years' faithful service, I have not yet had my trip to Europe. Now, give me 6 years more, and when I get my trip to Europe then is time enough to talk about retiring me from the United States Senate." [Laughter.]

One of our friends goes over to England. One of our friends goes over to Japan. I happen to know the particular Senator who last visited England, unless there is someone who visited England since he was there. He is not one of the men who imbibes of the carefully prepared concoctions of other countries like I would have done in days past, or up to 18 months ago. But most of us around over here in groups of three and four will be hobnobbing around with the newspapermen, and we would not expect when we were going around the country even if we were in groups, if the newspapermen made a statement which was not so, to have a resolution passed by the United States Senate with regard to what we said. Otherwise a man had better be careful, for everywhere he goes everything he says may be misinterpreted. I think everyone knows that the United States Senate itself has not too much authority as a body, let alone any individual Senator. The whole body has not too much authority in this day and time. In fact, the people who used to stay on my side of the street to meet me now cross over the street to keep from meeting me when I come down the street. That has happened since I have been Senator during the last few years. So I say that even the whole Senate as a body does not have any too much authority nowadays. Therefore, I do not believe it is necessary every time a Member of the Senate makes some statement that a resolution should be passed saying that it shall not bind the Government. I do not think we ought to commit what I believe would be a laughable absurdity by adopting a resolution of this kind, because then every time any Senator should go abroad the Senate would have to stay in session and pass resolutions concerning the absent Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this resolution, no matter what disclaimer may be made or how may be tortured the English language, can be construed only as a reflection on or humiliation of the junior Senator from Idaho.

How does the resolution read?

Resolved, That the Senate hereby gives notice—

"Hereby gives notice." To whom? It reminds me of a man putting an advertisement in the newspaper that hereafter he will not be responsible for any of his wife's obligations. The Senate is putting itself in the ridiculous attitude of rushing into the public press and saying that we give notice that nobody is authorized to speak for us. Of course, nobody is authorized to speak for us in foreign affairs, because we ourselves are not authorized to speak for the United States in foreign affairs, except by an official resolution of this body. The records here show that we have authorized nobody to go abroad and that we have authorized nobody to represent the Senate abroad. The records of the State Department show that they have sent nobody abroad in the person of a Senator. It seems to me that the Senate is making itself childish and ridiculous when it tries to negative every inference or statement that may appear in the public press.

Some reference has been made to the fact that it is desired to protect the Vice President when he visits the Philippines. Is the Senator from Wisconsin wiser than the Vice President? I think the Vice President is wise enough to take care of himself when he goes to the Philippines; and from my knowledge of the Vice President, he will take care of himself, and the Vice President is not going to pretend, and nobody who knows the Vice President is going to pretend, that he pretends to represent the United States in any official mission to the Orient. But the Senator from Wisconsin, sitting back here at home, is fearful of the Vice President, inexperienced man that he is, going to the Orient, and the Senator from Wisconsin just sees the Vice President being victimized by some newspaperman and representing himself as the official messenger of the United States Government to the Mikado and to the Emperor of Manchukuo and to China.

Mr. President, the Vice President does not need any protector; he does not need any guardian; and I do not believe that the other members of the delegation that will go need any secret-service agents, mental or physical, to go along with them to protect them.

This resolution ought not to be adopted. If we are going to go into the press and disclaim every foolish or inadvertive thing that every Senator says, we shall be busy disclaiming all the time.

What is it that the Senator from Idaho is supposed to have said? He is supposed to have said that if a world war should break out, America would be in it. Mr. President, Senators standing on this floor have for 2 months been filling the RECORD and beating the air proclaiming that whenever a world war comes we will be in it. That is no offense.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has not every treaty to which the United States has been a party and which has been negotiated and signed since the World War been predicated upon the possibility of our being drawn into another war and thereby making an effort to prevent such a war so that the possibility would not exist?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator is correct; and this morning, on the eve of final adjournment, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the present occupant of the chair, brings in a resolution of neutrality on the theory that if war should break out anywhere on earth we may become involved in it and urges that the joint resolution should be passed in order to keep us from becoming involved. Yet because a Senator of the United States, traveling abroad in his private capacity, says that if there shall be a world war America will be involved, he is to be humiliated and brought before the bar of public ridicule by a resolution of the Senate giving notice to the world that he is not representing us.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that in the discussion of the neutrality joint resolution Senator after Senator said its passage was more apt to involve us in the war than otherwise.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure; the Senator from Virginia is correct. In the discussion of that joint resolution, both for and against it, the suggestion was constantly made that we might become involved in a world war or some other kind of a war. What were we talking about? We were talking about war; and we were trying to stay out of it, one side contending that the resolution would keep us out and the other side contending that it would probably put us in.

Mr. President, this resolution ought to be rejected. The Senate does many foolish things; it has done so in the past and it will in the future; but this is certainly a foolish and childish thing. Suppose some Senator goes out into the States and makes some ridiculous statement, as Senators frequently do, shall we rush back to Washington and call a special session of Congress in order to adopt a resolution to disavow his foolish utterance?

Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to refer Senate Resolution 198 to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the resolution without the slightest intention of reflecting upon the junior Senator from Idaho. I am going to vote for the resolution because the Senate has the treaty-making power and it has a large part in the war-making power. For those two reasons I do not think it becomes any Senator, at any time, under any circumstances, to speak with reference to the policy of our country in war or with respect to any nation. A statement by any Senator either here or outside the Chamber that we will be involved in the next war tends to commit the Senate, at least to that extent of being involved. A statement by a Senator concerning any other nation with which we are at peace tends to offend that nation if the statement itself its offensive.

Within the last half hour the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] spoke lightly of the Mikado of Japan. The Emperor of Japan is a part of the religion of the people of Japan. We ought at all times speak with the utmost respect for him as their ruler and with the utmost respect of their reverence for him. Any other course tends to create irritation and might tend to bring on bad feelings and even worse.

The fact that Senators have spoken on subjects of this sort, have spoken here more than once slightingly of other nations, and that Senators are apt to go abroad—I mean abroad in our land as well as in other lands—and give out utterances that tend to encourage nations abroad in the belief that we will be in the war with them, when we know very well we do not intend to be in any war with them, counsels us to take the step that the senior Senator from Wisconsin is leading us to.

I wish to make for myself here a very clear record. I understand that a part of the treaty-making power of the United States is reposed in me as a Senator; I understand that a part of the war-making power of the United States is reposed in me as a Senator; I understand also that as a Senator I am in a certain degree an ambassador from a sovereign commonwealth in America; and in each of those capacities it is my duty to speak respectfully of all nations and at no point ever to say anything tending to create the impression that the power I have here will be used either one way or the other with respect to them or their affairs.

In view of the habit which we have fallen into, not so much in view of what appears in the current press, and the present circumstances, I think that a flat disavowal of the character proposed here by the Senator from Wisconsin is very timely and highly in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise to make a suggestion to the Senate. I understand that the House has passed a resolution providing for final adjournment today, and they hope for our concurrence. The two bodies may not adjourn without the passage of the deficiency appropriation bill. It will be necessary to have a conference between the two houses, because there will be amendments of the Senate in disagreement between the two bodies. If this discussion is to go on, I suggest that we be permitted to conclude the consideration of that unfinished business in order that we may then proceed to the holding of the conference committee meetings which will be necessary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will be patient for just a moment. I shall conclude with a brief statement.

Mr. President, in my opinion the resolution involves a very important question of policy. I do not think it is proper in view of the critical situation abroad to attempt to ridicule the resolution. Some Senators may doubt the wisdom of action upon it, but I submit that the issue involved is too grave to be the subject of ridicule or attempts at humor.

Mr. President, the successful conduct of our foreign affairs is at all times of vital importance, but now in view of the fact that we have a very delicate situation in the international affairs of the world it is of paramount importance. I have been entirely frank in stating my reasons for the introduction of the resolution. It is a matter of grave concern to me that there should be improper importance attached to statements made by Members of this body who are now abroad or who may go in the near future.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas did not directly make any statement that the Senator from Wisconsin was trying to hide behind a pretext. He did say that the resolution, no matter how we might undertake to construe it, would be construed as reflecting on the junior Senator from Idaho.

Let me ask the Senator a question. What provoked the Senator to introduce the resolution?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Two things, as I have stated. One was the constant reiteration in the press, both prior to the time the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] went abroad and in connection with every statement made by him which I have seen since he arrived there, of the fact that he was an unofficial observer and representative of the Senate, and in some instances it has been inferred that he was a representative of the Department of State and was reporting directly to the Department and to the President.

The second thing which prompted the introduction of the resolution was a story written in connection with the announcement that the Vice President of the United States might visit the Orient, in which a very clear implication, without quoting any one, of course, was written into the body of the story, which appeared on the front pages of nearly all the metropolitan newspapers of the country, that the Vice President was going abroad to the Orient for the purpose of endeavoring to improve our relations with countries in the Orient.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, and then I shall not bother him again?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield if the Senator will make it brief.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall do so. If the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] had not gone abroad, would the Senator have introduced the resolution?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would not have introduced the resolution under any circumstances except for the constant reiteration in the press dispatches that the junior Senator from Idaho is an unofficial representative of the Senate and because of the further fact that the same implication has been drawn in the press from the fact that the Vice President of the United States intends to visit the Orient.

All the resolution contains is a declaration of fact. It does not refer either directly or indirectly to any individual Member of this body or to any person connected with it. However, so far as I am concerned, in view of the delicate situation which exists in international affairs of the world, I am anxious that this body shall take the only step which I believe it can take to notify the world that it has no official or unofficial representative or observer abroad.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] spent a great deal of time in his address in opposition to the resolution, indicating the importance of gathering information. So far as I am concerned, I should be glad to have every Senator, including myself, better informed on all questions; but that has nothing whatsoever to do with the resolution. The fact is that these constant repetitions of statements that Members of this body are traveling or will travel abroad as unofficial representatives and observers of the Senate or of this Government is something of which I believe the Senate should take public notice, and that it should disabuse the public mind in this country and abroad concerning the situation which has been created by these statements in the press.

I ask unanimous consent to print an article in the Washington Times of yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES IN NEXT WAR, ASSERTS SENATOR POPE

LONDON, August 23.—Grave fears of a new European war, with the United States inevitably dragged in despite neutrality legislation at Washington were expressed today by Senator JAMES P. POPE (D.), of Idaho.

Interviewed by International News Service, Senator POPE declared that in his opinion the events of the last few days in the Italo-Ethiopian dispute had seriously clouded the chances of preserving peace. He said:

"The European situation is undoubtedly very grave.

GETTING WORSE

"It is much more serious even at this moment than it was when I arrived in Europe a few days ago."

Asked whether he thought the League of Nations, which is meeting September 4, in a last, desperate effort to avert hostilities between Italy and Ethiopia, would succeed in its aim, the Senator said:

"I am hopeful, but doubtful."

Senator POPE stressed the unofficial aspect of his visit, but it was thought probably he already has made some sort of an informal report to the White House and the State Department on the basis of information already obtained during his visit. He has talked to Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, British sponsor of the League of Nations, and George Lansbury, leader of the Labor Party.

In addition, the Senator has an appointment to see Foreign Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare today or tomorrow. Next week he will visit The Hague and Paris and will be on hand for the September 4 League meeting. He hopes later to visit Rome for a chat with Premier Mussolini.

He continued:

"The main hope of preventing war depends upon the action of France.

"If France joins hands with Britain there is a fair chance of adjusting the situation even yet. If not, there seems but small chance that war will be prevented.

BACKS UP BRITISH

"I think that the course Britain has taken in deciding to stand by the League of Nations covenant is a wise and honorable one. If she asks for sanctions and cooperation of the members of the League of Nations, she will at least be standing by her obligations, even if she cannot go through with her plans alone."

Senator POPE added:

"Whether America is to stay out of the next war depends upon the extent of the impending conflagration.

"If it develops along lines similar to those of the Great War, I think we will be pulled in again. Nations depend upon each other, and in these times nations are all in the same boat.

"If two-thirds of the boat goes down the other third goes down with it. I don't see how we could stay out if another real world war developed. We would inevitably be drawn in sooner or later.

"Perhaps this neutrality legislation under way at Washington would help, but it probably would prove insufficient in time of great stress. However, I personally approve of the neutrality bill."

WANTS UNITED STATES ACTION

The Senator continued:

"I think we should use our moral influence to avert the threatened war. We owe something to humanity and to the nations which signed the Kellog pact.

"The latter should mean something more than a piece of paper. I do not know what machinery might be used, but the situation calls for some consideration and some action."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays. First, however, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Logan	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	Lonergan	Robinson
Austin	Dieterich	Long	Schall
Bachman	Frazier	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Bailey	George	McCarran	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gerry	McGill	Shipstead
Barbour	Gibson	McKellar	Smith
Barkley	Glass	Maloney	Steiwer
Bone	Gore	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Guffey	Moore	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Hale	Murphy	Trammell
Bulow	Harrison	Murray	Truman
Burke	Hatch	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Capper	Holt	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Johnson	Nye	Walsh
Chavez	King	O'Mahoney	White
Clark	La Follette	Pittman
Connally	Lewis	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Seventy-four Senators having answered to the roll call, a quorum is present.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, there comes to my mind another reason, which I do not think has been mentioned, why this resolution should be adopted. In my opinion, it does not go far enough.

We have fallen into a custom which I think does not reflect credit on the Government of the United States, the custom in vogue in European governments, of sending unofficial, more or less secret observers and representatives to foreign countries. It implies a lack of confidence in our own diplomatic service. It carries with it an implication that ministers and ambassadors nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate to represent the Government of the United States in foreign lands have not the confidence of their own Government, and therefore that we must send private individuals with unofficial portfolios. It implies that the Government of the United States is secretly interested in questions so grave that it cannot trust its own diplomatic corps to handle them, so it sends secret, unofficial agents to foreign lands.

Those who have read the history of our unofficial observers prior to our entry into the World War cannot help but believe and become convinced that these so-called American unofficial observers, who have written their private memoirs since the end of the war, had as much to do with getting us into the last war as Sir Gilbert Parker, the head of the British Military Intelligence Service, and referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma as the head of the British spy system, had to do with getting us in. I think it would increase the dignity of the Government of the United States, I think it would increase the confidence which the American people have in their own Government, if we should serve notice that from now on we shall conduct our communications with foreign governments through our regularly nominated and appointed diplomatic service; that no branch of the Government here, as such, has any private official or unofficial observers talking in foreign lands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to refer the resolution to the Foreign Relations Committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I am not advised how he would vote on this question. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). I have a pair for the day with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BULKLEY. I repeat the announcement of my general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent from the city. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY]; and

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—47

Ashurst	Copeland	Long	Radcliffe
Bachman	Dieterich	McAdoo	Reynolds
Bankhead	George	McCarran	Robinson
Barkley	Gerry	McGill	Schwellenbach

So Mr. CONNALLY'S motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3303) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 872) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bill and joint resolutions of the House:

H. R. 8870. An act to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto, to enforce the twenty-first amendment, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 265. Joint resolution pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 348. Joint resolution authorizing exchange of coins and currencies and immediate payment of gold-clause securities by the United States; withdrawing the right to sue the United States thereon; limiting the use of certain appropriations; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8597) to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea"; to maintain discipline on shipboard; and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8597) to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea"; to maintain discipline on shipboard; and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION LOANS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the paper and pulp industry in my State has suffered severely in the depression, causing failure of the second largest company in that field in the world, with consequent unemployment and distress. Now, I am informed that the Government intends to aggravate that situation by loaning to another company in another State to create more competition and more similar products.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a telegram and a resolution pertaining to this matter. A resolution on this subject has been considered this week by the Minnesota State Federation of Labor.

There being no objection, the telegram and resolution were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., August 9, 1935.

THOMAS D. SCHALL:

This association, representing Central Paper Co., Muskegon, Mich.; Filer Fibre Co., Filer City, Mich.; Hoskin Paper Co., Menominee, Mich.; Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; Mosinee Paper Mills Co., Mosinee, Wis.; Northwest Paper Co., Cloquet, Minn.; Thilmany Pulp & Paper Co., Kaukauna, Wis.; and Tomahawk Kraft Paper Co., Tomahawk, Wis., protest against loan by Reconstruction Finance Corporation to Crossett Lumber Co., Crossett, Ark., for purpose of building kraft pulp and paper mill. Understand R. F. C. gave assurance to industry they would not make such loans without conferring, but they apparently have done so in this case in spite of their promise. There is large overproduction in kraft industry at present, and to bring in additional unnecessary production with Government money to create more competition for existing mills is unjust. This new competition will adversely affect labor in existing mills. We think Government has no right to finance private industry at expense and detriment of established industry. Please put forth every effort to stop this loan.

NORTHERN KRAFT ASSOCIATION.

INTERNATIONAL FALLS TRADES AND LABOR ASSEMBLY,
International Falls, Minn.

Whereas it appears that our Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is contemplating making loans to private industry for the purpose of encouraging the construction of factories for the production of newsprint, kraft paper, pulp, and other paper products, and in line with this policy has proposed to loan to the Crossett Lumber Co., of Crossett, Ark., for the purpose of building a kraft, pulp, and paper mill, and is contemplating other loans to other private companies for the construction of factories for the production of newsprint, kraft, pulp, and other paper products; and

Whereas the said industries are already overcrowded and the factories already constructed for the production of such products are operating at only 50 percent of their capacity, on account of the fact that there are already twice as many mills in operation as is necessary to take care of the demand, and the construction of new mills in this field of industry will create further unfair and unjust competition and adversely affect labor in the existing mills and will have the effect of depriving labor now engaged in these industries of their present employment and will prevent labor now so engaged from earning a decent livelihood; and

Whereas the new mills so contemplated to be financed by our Government will be in direct competition with mills engaged in the same industry in the State of Minnesota and will seriously jeopardize the livelihood of the laborers now employed in the said mills, including those at International Falls: Be it, therefore, further

Resolved by the International Falls Trades and Labor Assembly in regular meeting assembled, That it is unjust and unfair to the laborers now employed in the factories producing newsprint, kraft, pulp, and other paper products that the Government loan to private industry and private companies public funds to be used for the construction and operation of mills in direct competition with mills already in operation in an industry in which labor is already suffering for lack of demand of its products; be it further

Resolved by the International Falls Trades and Labor Assembly, That it do, and hereby does, protest against the granting of such loans, and hereby demands that the Government cancel any commitments made for such loans and that all applications, pending or future, be refused; be it further

Resolved, That the International Falls Trades and Labor Assembly do, and hereby does, respectfully urge Hon. Floyd B. Olson, Governor of the State of Minnesota, and the Honorable HENRIK SHIPSTEAD and Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL, United States Senators for the said State, and Hon. AUGUST H. ANDERSON, Hon. ELMER J. RYAN, Hon. E. M. LUNDEEN, Hon. MELVIN J. MAAS, Hon. THEODORE CHRISTIANSON, Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, Hon. PAUL J. KVALE, Hon. WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, and Hon. R. T. BUCKLER, Congressmen for the said State, to do all within their power to bring about the cancelation and the refusal of such loans, and that copies of this resolution be at once forwarded to each.

By its executive board.

INTERNATIONAL FALLS TRADES AND LABOR ASSEMBLY,
HAROLD REICH, President.
JOHN E. TERRY, Vice President.
JOHN PARSONS, Financial Secretary and Treasurer.
MILDRED C. LA FANE, Recording Secretary.

Dated at International Falls, Minn., this 16th day of August 1935.

REPEAL OF PART OF SILVER PURCHASE ACT

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of Senate bill 3260, to repeal sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act.

Mr. KING. I object for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. I submit four remaining committee amendments to carry the necessary appropriations for legislation passed during the present session.

I send the first amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

The appropriations for carrying into effect the act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved April 21, 1934 (48 Stat., pp. 598–607), as amended, are hereby made available to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of section 40 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved August —, 1935.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to enable the Senate to take up a privileged matter; namely, the conference report on Senate bill 872. It will take but a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business for the purpose of considering the conference report referred to by him?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I feel that I must object. If the Senator from Massachusetts understood the situation, I am sure he would appreciate the reason for my objection. We are trying to get the deficiency bill to conference, so that we may get it out of the way. It will not take more than a few moments. I have some committee amendments which I desire to submit and have acted upon.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection. The matter to which I refer is a purely formal one; but I will wait.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Colorado to state the purpose of the amendment. What will be accomplished by it?

Mr. ADAMS. I will ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to explain the amendment. It is to carry out the Bankhead Act. It does not involve any additional appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not involve any additional appropriation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask whether this is a controversial matter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it is not.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, then, what the purpose of the amendment is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is simply to carry out an authorization heretofore made out of money already appropriated, which will be available under the Bankhead Act. It has been authorized by law.

Mr. KING. As I understand, this would carry an appropriation of probably several million dollars. Is not that true, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. Frankly, I am not able to state the amount involved. It is authorized by law, and recommended by the Budget Bureau, and we seem obligated to include it in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the explanation thus far made is not satisfactory to me, though it may be to others. We have made enormous appropriations for the cotton industry, and I understand there is a measure pending, which may be offered, providing for the Government of the United States standing behind all of the cotton producers in the United States to the extent of 12 cents a pound. I do not understand from the Senator from Alabama just exactly the amount that is involved, and the purposes for which the expenditure is asked. It seems to me that we ought to have some enlightenment in the amendment itself as to the amount which is to be carried by the amendment.

It is stated that there has been an authorization. An authorization for what? If there is an authorization and there is to be an appropriation, then the appropriation should be specific so that we may know whether it is one million, or ten million, or a larger sum. It seems to me this is a most unwise, unsound, and improvident way of legislating.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have another committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, after line 7, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses of the Securities and Exchange Commission, including the same objects specified under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1936, and in addition thereto, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia, $750,000.

Printing and binding: For an additional amount for all printing and binding, fiscal year 1936, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a further committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, after line 16, after the amendments heretofore agreed to it is proposed to insert the following:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses of the Federal Power Commission, including the same objects specified under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1936, and, in addition thereto, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase and exchange, not exceeding $9,100, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, including not more than one such vehicle for general administrative use in the District of Columbia; supplies and office equipment; services; scientific instruments; expenses incurred in packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects, and other property, not to exceed in any case 5,000 pounds, of officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty, when specifically authorized by the Commission; not to exceed $5,000 for purchase and exchange of law books, other books of reference, newspapers, periodicals and newspaper clippings; $1,125,000, of which amount not to exceed $375,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, exclusive of not to exceed $15,000 which may be expended for consultants and special counsel: Provided, That the rates or fees paid to consultants or special counsel may be fixed by the Commission without regard to other laws: Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated, not to exceed $175,000, may be expended for the payment of salaries to present employees of the Commission engaged in the national power and rate surveys under authority of Executive Order No. 6251, dated August 19, 1933, and Public Resolution 18, Seventy-third Congress, approved April 14, 1934; and $125,000 shall remain available until June 30, 1937, for rental of quarters in the District of Columbia.

Printing and binding: For an additional amount for all printing and binding for the Federal Power Commission, including engraving, lithographing, and photolithographing, fiscal year 1936, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have one further amendment I desire to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state it.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 19, line 2, after the word "bureaus", to insert the following:

FEDERAL ALCOHOL ADMINISTRATION

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "the Federal Alcohol Administration Act", approved August —, 1935, including rent and personal and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, supplies and materials, equipment, communication service, stationery, travel and subsistence expenses as authorized by law, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles, law books, books of reference, magazines, periodicals, and newspapers, contract stenographic reporting service, the securing of evidence of violations of the act, and miscellaneous and contingent expenses, fiscal year 1936, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk now read the amendment I submitted yesterday.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Will not the Senator wait a moment before he proceeds with his amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to present a textual amendment. The President has approved one of the bills for the old-age pensions for the District of Columbia. In the bill as it is printed the date appears "approved August 1935." I wish to have inserted the date "August 24, 1935", in the appropriate place. It occurs on page 7, line 24 or 25.

The same mistake occurs in reference to the pensions for needy blind persons in the District of Columbia. I should like to have the figure "24" inserted after the word "August."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, line 21, after the word "August", insert the figures "24", and on page 9, line 5, after the word "August", insert the figures "24".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will not the Senator from South Carolina allow me to present two small amendments, which will not be controversial, before the other matter is brought before the Senate?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that very recently the Senate, and afterward the House, passed a bill to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Geodetic Survey. It involves one official, with an increase of about a thousand dollars a year. The Department of Commerce has asked me to invite the Senate to include enough money in the deficiency bill to take care of that one item.

Mr. BYRNES. Is there a Budget estimate for it?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think so, because the bill has not yet been signed, and, of course, if it is not signed there will be no call for the money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not able to hear the private conversation now going on.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will state for the benefit of the Chair and the Senate that I have presented an amendment to the bill, and I ask to have it reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, after line 12, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The appropriation for pay, commissioned officers, Coast and Geodetic Survey, for the fiscal year 1936, shall include, and is hereby made available for, pay and allowances to the Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey at the rates prescribed by law for a chief of bureau of the Navy Department, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 of the act of February 16, 1929 (45 Stat. 1187).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is one other amendment to which I call attention. On page 11, line 6, of the bill a Senate committee amendment was adopted appropriating $50,000 for departmental salaries and salaries for general expenses of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection.

I have been approached by the Department of Commerce this morning with a request that that item be increased to $126,000, and I have here a letter from the President, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, asking that this amount, $126,000, be included in the bill. I also have a letter of the Acting Director of the Budget making the same request.

The reason for this increase in the appropriation is that it has been brought out by the Morro Castle disaster that the steamboat-inspection personnel has been too limited, and certain men were employed and paid from another fund. It is now requested that this appropriation in the bill be increased. At the same time, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that all the money needed to pay the expenses of the Bureau of Navigation comes from fines which are collected, and motor boats are now included in the craft as to which fines may be inflicted, as well as other boats.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in adopting the amendment on page 11, lines 6 to 11, inclusive, be reconsidered, in order that the amount may be increased from $50,000 to $126,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator in charge of the bill that this is a matter which has to do with human life. It was so appealing that the President of the United States and the Director of the Budget both requested this addition to the appropriation. I think it would be outrageous if there should be any failure on the part of Congress to appropriate money which has to do with the inspection of ships. It was lack of inspection which caused the sinking of the Morro Castle, and that was the cause of the trouble with the Mohawk which sank.

Here is an item of $76,000, which has to do with the saving of human life, and which has been recommended by the Budget, and which ought to be have been included in the bill in the first place.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, how long ago was the Morro Castle sunk?

Mr. COPELAND. Last fall.

Mr. GLASS. Then, why did they not send the estimate here so that the committee might consider it?

Mr. COPELAND. As a matter of fact, they did send it in, and I have here the letter from the Director of the Budget.

Mr. GLASS. They did not have it before the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. This letter is dated the 22d of August, and I think, as a matter of fact, that I asked the Senator from Colorado about it. Did they not have it before the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. The committee decided that the amount the committee recommended would be adequate, under the circumstances, until the next appropriation bill was passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I say to the honored Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the committee did have this material, and I have already stated that the Department of Commerce is making this plea for this added money, and it ought to be in the bill.

Mr. GLASS. If the committee on due consideration thought the appropriation included was ample until Congress shall meet again, there is that much more reason why the Senator from Colorado should object.

Mr. COPELAND. I may say to the chairman of the committee that failure to put this in the bill will mean the discharge of 50 men who are now engaged in this work, and that is the reason why it ought to be put in now and why we should not wait until the next meeting of the Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. I will state to the Senator that that is not in accordance with the information that was given to the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the information which I have this morning from the Department of Commerce. They say in their letter:

This amount is necessary to meet a deficit in this Bureau to take care of the existing personnel. If this amount is not appropriated, the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection will be forced to discharge a number of employees in order to meet the deficit.

That is the statement from the Department of Commerce as given me within an hour.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that I yielded gladly in order to enable him to offer his amendment; but inasmuch as the amendment can be considered only by unanimous consent, he might talk with the Senator having the bill in charge and probably he may be able to induce him to change his views.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to say to my friend from South Carolina that his responsibility, and the responsibility of the committee, and the responsibility of all, is as great as mine. I have told the Senate that human life depends upon this appropriation. I told the Senator having the bill in charge and the Senate that it is the statement of the Department of Commerce that these men must be discharged if this money is not supplied. Now I leave it to the Senate to decide whether it shall or shall not be done.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement was made to us that the additional money was desired in order that they might obviate the practice of furloughing, which has been in effect for some time. I do not understand that it will lessen the efficiency of the Bureau at all.

Mr. COPELAND. Once more I will repeat. The statement of the Department of Commerce is that this amount is necessary to meet a deficit in this Bureau to take care of the existing personnel. If this amount shall not be appropriated, the Navigation and Steamboat Inspection Service will be forced to discharge a number of employees in order to meet the deficit. I ask the Senator from Colorado to take the item to conference and find out whether or not I am telling the truth about it; and, if I am, certainly this amount of money ought to be provided by the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asked unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered, and it was objected to.

Mr. COPELAND. I am hoping that the Senator in charge of the bill will withdraw the objection and let the Senate vote upon it.

Mr. ADAMS. Temporarily, I am going to persist in the objection. I shall be glad to talk to the Senator about it later.

Mr. COPELAND. If it will do any good, I shall talk to the Senator about it.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator has any doubt about that, we will obviate the talk.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. Whether we obviate the talk or not, I wish the Senate to know that the responsibility rests upon the Senate, and upon the committee, and upon the chairman of the committee; and if there is any failure to supply the money to pay these inspectors who have to do with the examinations to determine the safety of ships—if the Senate of the United States is willing to take a chance in that matter—at least my conscience is clear.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment be read.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield in order that I may ask a question, which I do not believe will delay consideration of the matter very much?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. There are some of us who are interested in the workings of the Social Security Board, and also the National Labor Relations Board, who feel if the amounts appropriated under this bill are to cover the expenses of administration for the entire fiscal year that they are inadequate. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether in making the estimate of the appropriation it was a final determination that the amount provided would be all the Board would receive for the period of the fiscal year, or will the Board, if experience shows that the sum is inadequate for the administration of the entire year, be in a position to come before the committee and make its plea for an additional amount?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from New York that, of course, appropriations made in a deficiency bill are merely intended to meet shortages for an uncompleted term, and would not in any way prevent the inclusion of needed items in the appropriation bills which will come on in the regular course next year. They are not intended as annual appropriations for the fiscal year but to meet deficiencies.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, last night, in my absence, not being physically able to remain in the Chamber, an amendment, on page 2, after line 3, of the bill, was agreed to. I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to. The amendment provides for payment to the attorneys in the contest growing out of the last senatorial election in West Virginia the sum of $1,800.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from West Virginia take the matter up with the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. HOLT. I have taken the matter up with him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment referred to will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The amendment is on page 2, after line 3, as follows:

For payment to attorneys of record for the contestant and the memorialists, to wit: Grant P. Hall, George H. Williams, and Thomas H. Barnett for services rendered and expenses incurred in the contested election resulting from the election of a United States Senator from West Virginia on November 6, 1934, fiscal year 1936, $600; in all, $1,800."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment referred to by him was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the motion was simply to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, as I understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask what the question was.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment referred to by the Senator from West Virginia was to pay the attorneys in the West Virginia contest case.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to know something about this question. What is it about?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in the matter of the seating of the junior Senator from West Virginia there were petitions and memorials filed with the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate. Among the petitions filed was one by former Senator Hatfield from the State of West Virginia. Certain citizens, some 100 in number, or persons alleging themselves to be citizens of West Virginia, likewise filed petitions in protest to the seating of Senator HOLT. That matter was heard by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Three attorneys, two of them representing former Senator Hatfield, and one representing the memorialists, appeared and filed briefs with the committee, and argued the matter before the committee. These attorneys have filed with the committee accounts for services rendered; that is, they presented their claims.

The matter was referred to a subcommittee of which the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was named as chairman. The claims, as I recall, in each case amounted to something more than $5,000. The committee, after hearings in the subcommittee, recommended that each of these attorneys be paid $600 to cover all claims filed by them, whether expenses or for the work done. That amendment was agreed to last night, as I am advised. The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] has now asked that the vote by which that amendment was agreed to be reconsidered, and it has been reconsidered.

The whole question was whether or not these attorneys who appeared before the committee representing both the petitioner, former Senator Hatfield, and certain citizens of the State, should be paid the sum of $600 each.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In ordinary contest cases where there is a question between two candidates for the Senate or the House to determine which of them was elected at an election, it has always been customary to allow fees on both sides. This was a matter involving the eligibility of the junior Senator from West Virginia. Even if he had been declared ineligible, his so-called "contestant" would not have been seated. In such a case is there any moral obligation on the part of the Senate to pay the fees of attorneys representing the Senator who was defeated, but who thinks that some legal technicality may prevent the seating of his successful opponent, although if he succeeded in that effort it would not seat him?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that there is any moral obligation resting upon the Senate in either case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any precedent for it?

Mr. GEORGE. There is this precedent, I may say: That since I have been a member of the committee for nearly 12 years both the contestant and the contestee have had an allowance to cover their expenses and attorneys' fees; that is, where the contestant or contestee asked it; and I understand that to have been the practice from the beginning.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know it is true in cases where there is a real contest.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me to continue, I will reach that point. In the House there is fixed a sum which is paid to both parties, as I understand; but the Senate rule has been different. The amount has varied from time to time, dependent, of course, upon the facts in each case. There is no obligation resting on the Senate to make any payment at all to the contestant or the contestee, the only consideration being whether or not in the public interest it is proper to provide some fair compensation for services rendered to the contestant or contestee. In many cases one or more parties might be unable properly to present the case.

We have had no case before the Committee on Privileges and Elections involving a question of the character involved in this particular case; but I call attention to the fact that former Senator Hatfield filed his petition, which asserted not merely that the Senator-elect, Mr. HOLT, was not entitled to his seat because he was not 30 years of age at the time of election or at the time of the commencement of the term to which elected, but former Senator Hatfield asserted that he himself was entitled to the seat. So, whether the ground of contest was good or bad or whether his claim was good or bad, he raised that question and the committee determined it. In the presentation of that question two counsel appeared for Senator Hatfield and additional counsel appeared representing only the memorialists or petitioners, and he raised, of course, substantially the same question, except he did not assert any right on the part of Senator Hatfield to take the seat.

Your committee was of the opinion that a reasonable allowance for the work done was in the public interest, because serious questions may frequently arise, and if the parties directly involved are not able to present them properly to the Senate the facts may not be developed in such a way as to lead to the accomplishment of desirable results.

In this particular instance, of course, but one real fact was presented, although there was an effort to present some other grounds of contest which your committee did not believe to be meritorious and which were simply dismissed without any hearing.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what is the amount involved?

Mr. GEORGE. The total amount is $1,800. There were three attorneys, and the committee allowed $600 in each case, to cover their expenses. I may say to the Senator that they did claim some actual expenses, because it was asserted that they conducted some investigations to ascertain some facts about the election. It turned out that those facts would not have invalidated the election. They prepared and had printed briefs and they presented those briefs; they appeared and made arguments here before the committee.

It is, of course, a question of policy as to whether the Senate will desire to make any payment whatever in this particular case.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if I may submit to the chairman of the subcommittee a statement? The Senator from South Carolina, because he believed the subject involved was not controversial, yielded to the Senator from West Virginia for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. I should now like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the motion to reconsider having been carried, whether he insists upon action upon this amendment now? I know that he asked that all committee amendments be first considered and disposed of, but having obtained recognition and having yielded to three or four other Members of the Senate, I should like to proceed with the consideration of my amendment. At the conclusion of its consideration, the amendment which is now at issue may be taken up. I think I see evidence of a controversy about it, and I should like to proceed with the presentation of my amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there are two great difficulties in the Senate; one is to get the floor and the second is to keep it after one gets it. I assume that all these gentlemen have been speaking in my time; I am very happy to accommodate them; and now I wish to say, the chairman of the subcommittee having consented to a reconsideration of a matter so important as this, I would not wish to stand in his way. I can quite see that the safety of three lawyers and their preservation is in the public interest and that they ought to be paid; but when the safety of human lives upon the sea is at stake that is a matter which must be objected to.

Mr. President, I want safety everywhere. I want safety upon the sea and upon the land. I want safety to those who practice their professions. And now, Mr. President, I apologize to the Chair and I apologize to the committee for having intervened and interfered at all with the safety of the lives of three lawyers. I withdraw any objection I have to the measure.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to make an observation to the Senate and to the Senator from New York. The matter which was reconsidered, involving the payment of attorneys' fees, was never before the Appropriations Committee. It came into this body from the Committee on Privileges and Elections and was presented in that way; and, so far as I know, has been to no other committee. and was presented from the floor without the knowledge of the membership of the committee. So the terrible parallel which the distinguished and beloved Senator from New York draws is hardly adequate. I merely add that, of course, we are appreciative of the manner in which he approaches the committee in an effort to carry out his own desires.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am not at all seeking to carry out my desires alone. I am trying to carry out, in the first place, the desires of the Department of Commerce which has to do with safety upon the sea. In the next place, I represent the desires of the American people. I represent particularly the desires of the survivors of 200 persons who were burned and drowned within a year. While the cases may not be parallel; yet I concede at once that the safety of the lawyers is more important than is the safety of people who travel on ships.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3286) to abolish the oath required of customs and internal-revenue employees prior to the receipt of compensation, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2002) to provide for the establishment of load lines for American vessels in the coastwise trade, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3003) to provide for the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Ackia, Miss., and the establishment of the Ackia Battleground National Monument, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 38), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Saturday, the 24th day of August 1935, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bill or joint resolution duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of each House and found truly enrolled.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to farmers at the rate of 12 cents per pound on cotton, where such loans are secured by cotton stored in warehouses approved by said Corporation upon such terms and conditions as similar loans have been made by said Corporation during the crop year ending July 31, 1935, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment proposed is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I first want to appeal to the Senator from Maine and ask him whether he will not withdraw the point of order and permit us to have a vote on the amendment to the bill without requiring me to move to suspend the rule for that purpose?

Mr. HALE. I understand the Senator has already filed notice of his intention to suspend the rule.

Mr. BYRNES. I filed the notice in accordance with the rule yesterday. I am not now offering the motion to suspend the rules but I am offering the amendment, just as every other amendment has been offered to the bill. I ask if the Senator will not allow it to be considered as all other amendments are without making the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I cannot agree to the request of the Senator. I am, however, entirely willing that the Senate shall proceed and take a vote on the question of suspending the rule without debate. That will save time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as the Senator does not see his way clear to withdraw the point of order, then, in accordance with the notice given yesterday, I move to suspend paragraph (4) of rule XVI in order that the amendment offered by me may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the notice and motion.

The CHIEF CLERK. Yesterday the Senator from South Carolina filed the following notice:

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: At the end of bill add a new section reading as follows:

"The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to farmers at the rate of 12 cents per pound on cotton, when such loans are secured by cotton stored in warehouses approved by said Corporation, upon such terms and conditions as similar loans have been made by said Corporation during the crop year ending July 31, 1935, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the status at this time? What has to be done in order that the amendment may be considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A vote of two-thirds of the Senate is required to suspend the rule so that the amendment may be in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Is that a debatable question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask, does the amendment mean an increase in the price of cotton textiles? Will the garments worn by the poor of my State be increased in price by reason of this amendment, if it should be adopted?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I understood I had the floor. I have not yielded the floor for a question. I was delighted a few moments ago to yield to the Senator when I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor but the Senator from New York rose to a parliamentary inquiry, which is always in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I apologize and I will speak in my own time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I regret that I could not yield for a question before I had been permitted to say a word, and, particularly, I think the Senate will agree that I was courteous, in view of the fact that I had been on my feet for about 30 minutes, due to the fact that I wanted to oblige the Senator, and did so in order that he might take up 2 matters and offer 2 amendments. I do not intend to be discourteous to the Senator in refusing now to yield to him, because I demonstrated a willingness to do it.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me apologize to the Senator and thank him for his courtesy. I will speak in my own time on the matter at issue.

Mr. BYRNES. I regret that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] saw fit to make the point of order. He has advised me that he is interested because he believes that a cotton mill or cotton mills in his State might be adversely affected by the adoption of this amendment. If that be the attitude of the Senator, I know that he is mistaken in his viewpoint if he is under the impression that the cotton mills would be adversely affected. I hold in my hand a resolution adopted by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association in May of this year. Just 4 months ago this association, the members of which spin 84 percent of the cotton of the Nation, adopted this resolution:

Whereas the cotton textile industry has been growing progressively sick and sicker for the past several months; and

Whereas there have been frequent periods in the past when some branch of the textile industry was in difficulty; and

Whereas this is the first time in a number of years when all groups of the industry are stagnant; and

Whereas this condition applies to fine goods, coarse goods, sheetings, dress goods, percales, and work fabrics; and

Whereas it is the general feeling and the definite conviction of manufacturers, merchants, and workers, that the Government having fixed a loan value of 12 cents per pound for the 1934 cotton crop; and

Whereas there can be no revival of cotton-textile trade until the loan policy of the Government on the 1935 crop is announced, for the reason that no merchant will buy cotton goods made from 12-cent cotton and above, when his competitor may be able to buy the identical goods 4 months later made from cotton of less value; and

Whereas the cotton crop of 1935–36 has practically been planted, and all arrangements, agreements, and provisions have been made by the farmers for the next crop: Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, That we earnestly urge the Secretary of Agriculture that he continue the cotton-loan plan for the 1935–36 crop, and that he make an immediate announcement of his intentions to do so; that we urge this in the interest of stability, revival of the textile business, and in the interest of the farmers' income, and we urge that this loan value for the allotted crop for the incoming year be fixed at not less than 12 cents.

That is the resolution adopted by the cotton manufacturers. It explains their position and is well founded. It was the position of most of the bankers, who knew that so long as the United States Government, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, was making loans at 12 cents, they could feel safe in lending a lesser amount, and they have made loans relying upon the continuance of that program. However, the result of the action of the Commodity Credit Corporation within the last 24 hours has caused them to share the views to which I shall give expression in a few moments.

The cotton manufacturers were in favor of continuance of the loan of 12 cents. The banker who was lending the money on the cotton was in favor of it. The cotton growers of the Nation were in favor of it. They could not meet in convention as could the manufacturers. They could have no opportunity to adopt resolutions. However, their views are known by the Senators coming from States in which cotton is grown. Cotton is grown in 15 or 16 States. I am satisfied the statement is correct when I say that every Senator from the cotton-growing States agrees, under the circumstances now existing and in view of representations which have been made, that there is nothing for us to do but to continue the 12-cent loan.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In view of what the Senator has stated, namely, that the cotton manufacturers and the banks which are loaning on cotton and the cotton growers do not approve of the action taken by the Commodity Credit Corporation within the last 24 hours, will the Senator, if he can do so, enlighten us as to what influence led to this action?

Mr. BYRNES. I think I shall be able to give the Senator the information he seeks, but I desire to continue my statement as to the unanimity of sentiment in this matter. Inevitably, where so many millions of people are involved, the minds of men will differ. There are differences of opinion about many matters affecting the loans upon cotton. But when the Members of the Senate representing the cotton-growing States have such unanimity of views with reference to the matter, I do not wonder that the Senator from Massachusetts should ask the question.

The cotton growers, the cotton manufacturers, and the bankers who are interested in the subject have not contended that this should be established as a permanent policy of the Government. They knew it was an emergency program, established only for the emergency. They found themselves with a crop of cotton selling for 5 cents and an accumulated stock of which they had no opportunity to dispose. We embarked upon controlling the production in order to reduce the surplus. We passed the Bankhead Act, and when we passed it we established a program of paying benefits to cotton growers for reducing the acreage and fixing an acreage in order to make it possible for the Government to continue these loans.

Within the last few weeks the cotton growers of the South and Southwest have been told by Members of the Senate that it had been agreed that the Commodity Credit Corporation should continue these loans. Based upon these statements, contracts were made. The whole industry depended and relied upon the continuance of those loans. No person ever suggested that there would be presented to the cotton growers of the South and to the industry the program announced within the last 2 days. I know that evening before last I first learned that the Commodity Credit Corporation would abandon its present policy and would lend 9 cents per pound, with a scheme for paying a bounty to cotton growers under certain circumstances.

The information I received that evening and yesterday was that this program was determined upon by the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Secretary of Agriculture is a director of that Corporation, as are Mr. Chester Davis, of the A. A. A.; Mr. Johnson; and, I think, Mr. Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration. I must say, however, that my information is that the Secretary of Agriculture was out of the city at the time it was suggested and agreed upon. My further information is that it was a plan suggested by Mr. Johnson. The Secretary of Agriculture, however, heretofore has made known the fact that he was in favor of reducing the loan to 9 cents per pound.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has any statement been made giving the reasons for this action?

Mr. BYRNES. Several statements have been made, but I do not know that there is any reason given for the action. I must say that I can find no two men who have read the statement who can tell what will possibly happen under the plan. The plan provides that a loan of 9 cents shall be made upon cotton. It then provides that during this fall, between September 1 and January 1, the total amount of cotton sold shall be averaged; and if the average price should be, for instance, 11 cents, then 11 cents shall be deducted from 12 cents, leaving 1 cent per pound, and every man who has raised cotton, whether he sells it now or at any time next year, is to receive a check for 1 cent per pound. It does not mean the difference between what he sold his cotton for and 12 cents a pound, but it means the difference between the average price of all sales of cotton upon spot market; and when that is found January 1, some mathematician is going to figure out the difference between the figure thus obtained, 9 or 10 or 11 or 11½ cents, or whatever it is, and the price of 12 cents per pound, and a check will be sent for the amount represented by the difference.

To show the Senator what can happen under it, immediately after the announcement of this plan cotton dropped 83 points and closed with a loss of $4 a bale. Every Senator from a cotton-growing State knew there could be no other result. I would not say that Mr. Davis and Mr. Wallace should know it, but there is not a Senator from the cotton-growing States who does not know from his experience that when it is proclaimed that 9 cents a pound will be loaned on cotton the price is on the way to 9 cents a pound. That night I gave out a statement that I intended to offer this amendment.

I thought that the people, having some confidence that Congress would act in this emergency, believed that the Congress might direct the continuance of loans at the present rate per pound, as it was expected by every man in public life they would be continued; and because of that the market did not drop to the extent to which it would have dropped under other circumstances. It went off again today, even while this matter is being considered. We know it will go off again Monday. It dropped $4 a bale yesterday, which, with an 11,000,000-bale crop, means $44,000,000. My colleague from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] says it went off another dollar today, which is $5 a bale.

When it dropped, the Commodity Credit Corporation, which has 5,000,000 bales of cotton, lost $5 a bale. Five times five million is $25,000,000. That amount was sacrificed to a plan suggested hurriedly, without consideration, affecting the Government, affecting every man in the industry, but affecting more than all the little fellow, the little farmer, for he must sell when his crop is grown. He is selling today in every Southern State, and particularly in the States nearer the Gulf. It is not for the tenant farmer to choose when he can sell. When his three or four bales of cotton are made he must deliver. He owes money to his landlord. The landlord will take his cotton. If it comes in on Monday, and there is a further drop, and he gets 9½ cents for his cotton, he has the information contained in the newspaper statements of this plan; and here is the way it will work for him:

On January 1 there will be this mathematical transaction to determine what is the average of all the sales between September 1 and January 1.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my understanding that the new or substitute plan contemplates a guarantee to the producer of the average price of 12 cents per pound. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. No. I was just explaining to the Senate that that is not correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is a statement which has been made in the public press.

Mr. BYRNES. It is, Mr. President. I am satisfied that throughout the South today cotton growers, reading it, have just that impression of it, when it is not the fact, and the statement shows that it is not the fact. Here is what the statement really is: That 12 cents is fixed as a price, and then the average price of all cotton sold between September 1 and January 1 will be determined on January 1. If the average price of all the sales on 10 spot markets should be 11 cents, the cotton grower who sells today for 9 cents will not receive 3 cents per pound, the difference between 9 and 12; he will receive the difference between the average price, which may be 11, and 12 cents. In the fall, when the little fellow has been forced to sell, and it has gotten out of his hands, if cotton goes up in November and December, and the average price for the 4 months turns out to be 11½ cents, what the cotton grower in Arkansas and South Carolina who sells for 9 cents today is going to get is not 3 cents difference; he is going to get only one-half cent per pound. The man who sells even after January will get that amount, and not the actual difference.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator another question. Assuming that the 12-cent price is to be guaranteed as an average, how is that average to be ascertained?

Mr. BYRNES. I have said heretofore that on this statement it would take a Philadelphia lawyer, some certified accountants, and some fortune tellers, with the assistance of persons possessing such ability as they may find, to ascertain it; but the average price is to be determined, according to this statement, by taking the price of all sales upon 10 spot markets from September 1 to January 1 and computing it in some way to reach the average price of all sales, and then that amount will be deducted from 12 cents. If it happens to be a half cent, it means that after January they will have to send out checks to all the cotton growers for this half cent a pound for any cotton that was sold. The amount of administrative work, and how it will ever work out, I cannot possibly conjecture.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to have an understanding of the effect of this proposal. As I understand, the effect of the Senator's amendment is to continue the policy which has prevailed for the past year.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. BORAH. It adds no new policy and no change. It merely makes it mandatory that the policy be continued?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator has stated exactly the object of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not also true that by reason of the fact that this policy has obtained heretofore those who are engaged in the cotton business would naturally have relied upon its continuation and undoubtedly have made their business transactions upon the basis of that policy?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, every man in the industry has relied on it, from the cotton manufacturer down to the little tenant farmer. He had a right to rely on it because every statement which emanated from Washington told him it would be continued. He had a right to rely on it because Senator after Senator has told him they were assured it would continue. Never, until night before last, did it come to the ears of any man that it would be abandoned; and its abandonment has disrupted the entire South.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I make a brief statement, with the permission of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Not only was the 12-cent loan continued during the marketing period, but the cotton season officially ends August 1, and the 12-cent loan was continued until the very first day of this month. Several thousand bales of new cotton, in that section of the belt where cotton opens earliest, actually came under the 12-cent loan and now constitute a part of the Commodity Credit Corporation's cotton.

Mr. BORAH. And we are not now, by this amendment, formulating any new policy?

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely no new policy. We merely continue the same policy.

Mr. BORAH. Whatever we may think of the policy as an original proposition, this is simply continuing the policy which has prevailed.

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. One minute.

We might all differ, if we were embarking upon that policy, whether it was wise or unwise. Throughout the entire industry it has been done; but we have believed that until there was a determination by Congress of some permanent policy, some permanent program, the policy which has been pursued should be continued; that we could not back-track on it. When we look into the position in which even the Government places itself we find that it holds 5,000,000 bales of cotton; and, owning 5,000,000 bales of cotton, it proposes to drive down the price to 9 cents, and take a loss to itself of $15 a bale on the 5,000,000 bales of cotton that are held by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and have no chance then of disposing of it.

Night before last cotton was selling for eleven and a half cents. All that the cotton manufacturer and banker in the South, all that the cotton farmer plead for, was an announcement of the program. Had it been announced, cotton would have gone over 12 cents. The Government could have gotten rid of some of its cotton. All of the industry could have sold its cotton.

As it is, let me state how the cotton manufacturer stands today. We have two or three kinds of them. There is the humane cotton manufacturer. During the past few months he has suffered, like every other man. He has had few orders for his cotton. He could not sell at a profit. Some of them, rather than throw their employees out in the street, rather than put them on the relief rolls, have run their organizations even though they were running at a loss. They have stacked their warehouses with cotton goods manufactured at 12 cents, believing that this policy would be continued. There were some others, some few manufacturers, who turned their employees on the streets, who have no inventories, because they did not manufacture at 12 cents. They refused to buy. They know they now have an opportunity to destroy the other manufacturer, who has a warehouse filled with goods made from raw material purchased at 12 cents a pound. They expect to come in, and will come in, under this plan, buy cotton at 9 cents, and undersell the manufacturer who took care of his employees during the past few months.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. HALE. I tried to ask the Senator a question a minute or two ago.

Mr. BYRNES. Having the floor, I am addressing myself to the Senate. Now that I have finished answering the Senator from Idaho, I gladly yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask a question in reference to the question of the Senator from Idaho.

The Senator from Idaho asked the Senator from South Carolina if his plan is not following out exactly what was done this year.

Mr. BYRNES. Exactly.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me there is a very great distinction between the two plans. Under the plan used last year, the Commodity Credit Corporation loaned money to the cotton growers, and it decided the amount per pound that should be loaned.

Mr. BYRNES. No, no.

Mr. HALE. Under the Senator's provision, Congress itself is to determine the amount. It seems to me that is a very great distinction.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Commodity Credit Corporation fixed the loan at 12 cents. Under this plan we are asking Congress only to do what the Commodity Credit Corporation has done.

Mr. HALE. Yes; Congress is to settle it, and not the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely. We want Congress to settle it.

Mr. HALE. All the Commodity Credit Corporation could do before was to loan on adequate security.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no!

Mr. HALE. They probably overstepped the bounds of what they should have done; but if cotton is selling at 11 cents a pound, obviously the cotton is not adequate security for a loan of 12 cents.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course the Senator from Maine is not familiar with the subject. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has just called attention to the fact that up to August 1, loans were being made on cotton at 12 cents. Spot cotton in the neighborhood of Corpus Christi, at the time those loans were made, was selling for 12 cents. The Senator from Maine is interested in cotton mills, but I know what the cotton manufacturers think about this subject. Here is what they think: They want the stability of price that goes with 12-cent loans. They are not seeking a fluctuating market. How could the manufacturer intelligently buy yesterday, with cotton dropping $4 a bale in a day? How could he do it today, with cotton dropping another dollar on Monday? The sensible manufacturer was satisfied; and I will say for the cotton manufacturers of the South that they have never stood up anywhere in public to make the plea which is being made in behalf of some manufacturer in Maine by the Senator from Maine. The manufacturer of the South says he is not seeking to drive down the price of cotton; that he is willing to pay a good price for cotton; that they have made money when they have paid good prices for cotton. All they want is that every last manufacturer shall be required to pay the same price, so that no man shall have the advantage of the other.

Under this plan the manufacturer who did have some regard for his employees and kept them at work, and has an inventory, has suffered a loss because some manufacturer, I have no doubt like the manufacturer in whom the Senator is interested, wants the profit to be derived from buying 9- and 10-cent cotton and underselling his competitor.

Mr. President, there is no change in this program. It does not require an explanation. We simply ask to have continued the program that has been in effect with reference to the cotton industry. We know that with the reduction of the surplus down to 7,000,000 bales, with 5,000,000 bales in the hands of the Government, under the control of the Government, if the Congress will direct the Commodity Credit Corporation to do what it was doing up until August 1, cotton will go back to 12 cents, and in the months to come higher than 12 cents, we can get rid of some of the crop we have, and in the meantime we can devise some permanent program which will for all time enable the cotton growers to know what they may expect at the hands of the Government.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of fact, has not the whole country very largely been led to believe that with the enactment of the Bankhead bill this year the cotton situation was settled, and did not everybody think he knew where he stood?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is certainly correct. When we embarked upon the policy adopted there had to be control of production. The Congress willingly provided control of production, the farmers in the South willingly consented to it, and last fall, when there was a plebiscite to determine whether it should be continued for another year, more than 90 percent of the cotton growers throughout all the Cotton Belt voted to continue it. The Bankhead Act was continued only because of the understanding that the 12-cent-loan policy would be continued for another year, until a permanent program could be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, who brought about this change, and why was it brought about? Can the Senator give us any information as to that phase of the matter? So far as I am concerned, I was never consulted in any way, though I come from a cotton-growing State, and I have not heard of any other Senator who was consulted about it. Why should a change like this be made without consultation with those who come from the section of the country where cotton is produced, and who know something about it?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Tennessee was out of the Chamber when the Senator from Massachusetts asked the same question. There is not a man from Washington to the Gulf who will not ask the same question: Why this change? Consulted? Every man who was consulted was certainly ready to believe that the 12-cent-loan policy would be continued. Neither the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senator from Alabama, nor any other Senator, was consulted. No other Senator and no Member of the House ever heard of it. Those representing the cotton-producing States are supposed to know something about their industry. It is one industry in 10 or 12 States dominating all others, and not one of the representatives from that section was consulted.

I contend that the little tenant farmer, who was not consulted at all, is going to be the man worst hurt. When the Senator from Tennessee goes back to his State and I go back to mine and we find the little tenant farmer selling cotton for 9 and 9½ cents a pound, he is going to be told, if anyone can ever acquire an understanding of it—a week or 10 days from now somebody may understand it sufficiently well to tell him—that if, after all the sales of cotton in the 4 months from September to December are computed, the average shall be 11½ cents, and cotton goes up, a check for half a cent a pound will be forwarded to him. Of course, the tenant will never get it; the landlord will get it. The tenant has to move, he has to leave the place, and will not be there to receive the letter. He has borrowed during the year from the landlord, he has received advances; the landlord sells his cotton, and his chance of getting the check is so small that the people who live in the cotton-growing States know that the tenant is going to be worse off than all others.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is there any law on the statute books under the terms of which Congress authorized the lending of money, 12 cents a pound for cotton, and if there is such a law, is it of permanent character, so that for an indefinite period farmers will understand that they may deposit their cotton in a warehouse and obtain loans on it to the extent of 12 cents a pound?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I will say to the Senator that no one is under any such impression, and no one is expecting that there should be any such permanent policy. While the Senator was out of the Chamber I stated several times that if this were being started as a new policy, men from the cotton States would certainly differ about its wisdom, and I personally would be against it as a permanent policy. But it is suggested solely as an emergency measure. It is not expected that it will continue except during this emergency. It is not expected that it shall continue for more than another year, because Congress ought to adopt a permanent policy within that period to control the situation. But I will say to the Senator from Utah that I know that if he ever had the opportunity to analyze it he would have no doubt as to what his duty should be at this time. On the one hand, it is the continuation of a policy of which we know, which has been embarked upon, and which we think should be continued for another year, until a permanent policy shall be adopted. On the other hand, here is the Commodity Credit Corporation announcing that they are going to adopt the policy of lending 9 cents, but they are going to give a man, not lend—we are going to have to have a fountain of gifts—the difference between the average price and 12 cents.

The Senator would not be in favor of that, and I only hope that as between two things, neither one of which he is in favor of, he may see his way clear to vote in accordance with the views of Senators from the Southern States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand—and I hope the Senator will correct me if I am in error—the present policy is a reciprocal policy, the fixing of the price on the one side by the Government, and the reduction of acreage by the farmer. The farmers have proceeded under that policy; they have raised their crops under that policy, and it seems to me it is unfair and unjust for the Government to change its policy after the farmers have done their part.

Mr. BYRNES. The farmers have complied with every requirement of the law, and have done it gladly, believing that they were being led out of the wilderness.

Mr. President, I shall not consume more of the time of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my understanding that the proponents of the new plan are prompted to resort to it because of the alleged fact that large amounts of cotton are accumulating in the possession of the Government which cannot be disposed of at the price of 12 cents. They claim, as I understand, that to continue lending 12 cents a pound would have the result of approximately doubling the amount of Government cotton at the end of the approaching cotton season, so that the Government would have something like eight or ten million bales in its possession.

In the meantime, they contend that the sale in export of American cotton is constantly being diminished by reason of the stabilization of the price at 12 cents a pound, so that while the surplus, if I may use that term, is accumulating, they claim that the foreign market is diminishing.

They assert that the proposed plan will give to the farmer substantially the same amount that may be borrowed under the 12-cent-loan plan, namely, 12 cents a pound for his cotton. A part of that will consist of a bonus, or bounty, but it is asserted that in the meantime the cotton may be passed into the foreign markets, thus enabling the Government to dispose of a part of what it now has, and diminishing the quantity that will be accumulated.

It is apparent to me that at the end of the 12-cent-loan program a situation may exist which will make it difficult for the Government to handle the matter for the benefit of the producers. As I see it, any plan that may be resorted to will depend upon a limitation of production. I do not understand how the price can be stabilized without some measure of limiting production.

The question they ask is, What difference does it make to the producer if he gets the same amount for his cotton that he would get, substantially, under the 12-cent-loan policy, and at the same time cotton may be disposed of in foreign markets, the foreign markets being resuscitated?

I am asking these questions in order that the Senator from South Carolina, who is familiar with the subject, may express himself upon them. The Department of Agriculture, as I understand, claims to foresee a very difficult situation at the end of the next cotton-marketing season, an increased quantity of cotton in the hands of the Government, the price maintained at a point where it will not sell in the foreign market, and the problem of production control remaining in either case unsettled.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, I understand that that statement has been made. I hold in my hand a statement issued by the proponent of this plan, the manager of the Commodity Credit Corporation, who is credited with having originated the plan.

Mr. ROBINSON. Who is that?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. Johnson. He states as follows in the release of yesterday afternoon:

> The statistical position of cotton is peculiarly strong. The mills of the world will necessarily take more than 11,500,000 bales of the current crop and will pay the American farmer the price which he demands.

The estimate of the crop is 11,870,000 bales, as I recall. Therefore, this gentleman says that the world must necessarily take this crop and must pay the farmer the price which he demands. He goes on to show that the position is strong because the Commodity Credit Corporation controls 5,000,000 bales, which it is not going to sell for less than 13 cents. Therefore, this cotton crop of 11,500,000 bales has to be sold, and as it is sold, if his statement be correct, one-half of it is going into the warehouses to be held for 12 cents. He cannot say that there is a world demand for the entire crop, and that it is going to be sold, and that the world will pay the American farmer the price which he demands, and then say that one-half of it is going to be stored in the warehouses to constitute a surplus of one-half the crop at the end of the year. If only one-half of it should be sold, how would the world get the eleven and one-half million bales which he says the world must have and needs? Of course, with 5,000,000 bales held by the Commodity Corporation, with the production, due to the operations of the Bankhead Act, of only 11,800,000 bales, it follows that the cotton mills, which were bidding 11½ cents, would have to bid and pay for their cotton 12 cents and 13 cents, and, when they should pay 13 cents, cotton would begin to move out. Not only would these 11,000,000 bales move out, but, with increasing prosperity in the country, with the evidences we have of more men going to work, it would appear that their estimate made some time ago of eleven and one-half million bales was too low, and that the world should demand 12,000,000 bales, which is small compared to the consumption in former years. The result would have been that cotton in the next 2 weeks would have been 13 cents, and both the United States Government and the Commodity Credit Corporation could start to get rid of some of their cotton which has been stored, moving it into the channels of trade. We cannot say that the world needs eleven and a half million bales, as Mr. Johnson says he is certain it does, and then say if we loan 12 cents on it, that one-half of it is going to be stored. I am satisfied that statement was made by mistake.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the effect of the change in the credit arrangement is to make the whole question one of speculation, does it not? Is not speculation encouraged thereby?

Mr. BYRNES. It certainly is, to such an extent that cotton dropped $4 yesterday, and my colleague advises me it dropped a dollar today. It has dropped $5 even while the trade knows that the Congress is considering the question. I know that some people engaged in that trade would say, "Congress may take it into its head to do the right thing and direct the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue their policy"; and if they should, and on Monday it was so announced, and some speculator today sold the market short, he would be caught on Monday, and therefore today they are a little cautious about what they do. But if Congress shall adjourn without doing something, then on Monday, when it shall have adjourned and gone home, and nothing can be done, and the cotton manufacturer and the cotton farmer alike are at their mercy, they will sell that market and there will be nothing to protect it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the view of the Secretary of Agriculture on this matter at the present time?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know. The Secretary of Agriculture was out of the city, according to my information, when this plan was adopted; but he was quoted, certainly correctly quoted, as being in favor of the 9-cent loan. I understand he was not here when this plan was suggested. He was not then in the city. Whether he was consulted over the telephone I do not know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am advised, Mr. President, that he approved this plan.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of Agriculture during the several years under which the Government has interfered with economic, rational laws, has followed the advice of Mr. Johnson and Mr. Chester Davis, and that his views—of course, he has consulted with them—have been in harmony with their views, and they have worked together in the enunciation of the policy which has led us into this embroglio, this unsatisfactory condition, and he is still following their views?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know whether or not he has been in accord with those men in all matters. I think he has been in favor of the plan in question. I know of nothing which will hurt the cotton growers and manufacturers more than the action which has been taken.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, can the Senator tell what the attitude of the administration is in respect to this matter? The newspapers say that this new action on the part of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the A. A. A. was taken after conferences at the White House.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator from Maine ask that question in order that he may know and vote according to what the administration wants, or does he wish to know in order that he may vote against it?

Mr. HALE. I do not; but I ask what the attitude of the administration is.

Mr. BYRNES. So long as the Senator from Maine informed me that he had no attitude on the subject until he heard from the cotton mills, it is useless for me to tell him what the attitude of the Commodity Credit Corporation is.

Mr. HALE. Their attitude would not influence my attitude at all. I simply wanted to get the information if the Senator had it.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator says he is waiting for information from the cotton mills in order to know what his attitude shall be.

Mr. HALE. Can the Senator from South Carolina tell me whether the administration is favorable to his amendment or not?

Mr. BYRNES. Whether the administration is favorable to my amendment?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not consult anybody in the administration concerning it. I offered the amendment because I felt it was for the welfare of the South.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's amendment is to take the place of certain action which has been taken, presumably, under the auspices of the administration.

Mr. BYRNES. I assert that just as strongly as the English can make it. I have endeavored to explain just exactly that to the Senator, and he now understands me correctly. I propose to require them to do what they have been doing, but which they now wish to stop doing.

Mr. President, I have used up too much of the time of the Senate. I apologize for having done so, but I appeal to the Members of the Senate to vote for the motion to suspend the rule so that the amendment, at least, may have the same opportunity which every amendment to this bill has, and which is sought to be denied it by the Senator from Maine by making the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to suspend the rule for the purpose of consideration of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to say that I did not believe in the policy with reference to cotton which was adopted in the first instance, but I did not feel that I had sufficient knowledge of the subject to form any fixed judgment in regard to it. I acted largely upon impression. Whether I believed in it then or not, or whether I believe in it now, it seems to me that the matter ought not to be dealt with in the manner in which, at this time, it is being dealt with by those administering the program. We are asked to continue a policy which was announced and supposed to be a sound policy, and no new program is being proposed whatever. I am not in favor of discontinuing a policy under the conditions which now obtain, and, therefore, I shall vote for the suspension of the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has very fully stated the problems involved in this controversy. I do not wish unduly to delay the Senate by any extended statement on the subject. The question now before the Senate is not the initiation of a loan program. The question directly before the Senate is a decision between two plans. If Congress takes no action, the new plan is in operation. Now it is proposed by Senators from the cotton-growing States, who understand this question, and who are here now asking their colleagues to cooperate with them, if they feel that our position is not unsound to continue the plan which has been in operation for the last 2 years and which has proven so beneficial to all of the people of the Cotton Belt, and which has furnished such greatly increased purchasing power for the industries in the industrial sections of this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not only have the farmers been greatly benefited but, under the plan which has been in effect and which has been tried out now for the second year, is it not true that the Government's loss was comparatively small up until yesterday when the plan was changed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is absolutely true.

Mr. President, the cotton situation has been a peculiar one in America. When we entered upon this program the cotton farmers had accumulated a carry-over of 13,000,000 bales, which was the largest in the history of America, a carry-over in excess of an entire year's consumption, and the price of cotton was down to 5 cents a pound.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I correctly understand the Senator, at the time the 12-cent loan was inaugurated cotton was selling at a substantially lower price than it is now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the unsalable surplus was greater than it is now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that there is now less reason for changing the policy than there was for adopting it in the first place?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is absolutely correct about it, and for many reasons. It is so inexplicable to me that I have not been able to reconcile myself to the change.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, does not the Government stand a chance to lose more by what has now been done than if it had gone along as before?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There cannot be any argument about that, and I intend to come to that. Every Senator here who has an interest in the financial affairs of the Government can appreciate that fact when the conditions are explained.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment provides that—

The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to farmers at a rate of 12 cents per pound on cotton, where such loans are secured—

And so forth.

That becomes permanent law, if enacted. Would the Senators who are interested in this matter be willing to limit the time of the operation of the proposed law?

Mr. BYRNES. It certainly is my intention to provide a limitation.

Mr. McKELLAR. There will be no objection in the world to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the purpose. It is understood, I assume, that an amendment will be offered to apply it to the crop year 1935–36, and will be adopted.

Mr. LONG. Let us amend it now.

Mr. BARKLEY. We cannot amend it now. It will be necessary first to suspend the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right. Such an amendment will be adopted.

Mr. President, following up the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], when this program was entered upon we had a carry-over of 13,000,000 bales but, by virtue of providing credit facilities to the farmers to bridge over, and by reason of the farmers submitting themselves to the compulsory control of crop production, we have brought about a reduction in the carry-over in the 2 years of approximately a little more than 4,000,000 bales. The carry-over now is a little less than 9,000,000 bales, while we began the program with close to 13,000,000 bales.

In addition to that, with a price of around 8 cents in 1933 when we started—and that price went up on the prospect of what would be done—the price now is and it was last week, for spot cotton, 12 cents a pound in the market. That demonstrates clearly that the plan is operating successfully for the cotton growers, successfully in the efforts to get rid of the surplus and to get back to normal conditions in the trade, which all of us hope for, and successfully in the matter of putting prices nearer to a parity for cotton.

Then, with that program operating smoothly and satisfactorily; with, as the Senator from South Carolina said, the cotton farmers last December voting more than 9 to 1 in favor of its continuance, with white and black, landlord and tenant, more than 9 to 1 expecting this program to be continued under their submission by that vote to compulsory control in order to allow the Government to reduce its carry-over and protect itself on the investment it had made in cotton on these loans—with everything running along smoothly and satisfactorily, with many Senators having been assured that the 12-cent loans would be continued upon the continuance of the Bankhead Cotton Control Act—then, out of a clear sky, in the night, with no notice to anybody concerned in the matter, with no consideration shown to Senators who have been active in leading this cotton program, we are greeted by the announcement that the whole previous program has been discontinued and there has been adopted a different sort of plan so complicated, so confusing, so complex, so delaying to the farmers in its administration that it has upset not only the situation among the producers and the merchants and the bankers, but, unhappily, I may say, it has more upset at present the cotton-textile industry in the sale of cotton-textile goods.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the new plan inevitably mean a reduction in the price of cotton to 9 cents in the first place, and also inevitably mean that the Government will have to tax all the people to pay the 3 cents a pound provided by the new plan, amounting to about $150,000,000 a year? Will not that be the legitimate result?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unless something in the future shall be worked out to change the result, that is exactly what it will mean.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that plan shall be persisted in it will mean the reduction of the price of cotton from 11½ cents to 9 cents.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The price of cotton was 12 cents last week.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will mean a reduction from 12 cents or whatever the price was when the plan was put into effect, and then, in addition to that reduction to the farmers, we will have to tax the American people $150,000,000 more in order to pay the bonus to the cotton growers.

I think it is unfair to the Government and unfair to the farmers, and it is a violation, in my judgment, of good faith toward those who have gone into and established the plan which has heretofore existed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I feel strongly that way, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I only wish to say that it all illustrates the beauty of arbitrary, bureaucratic planning.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will not go into that question with the Senator, because I am not assured that it was altogether bureaucratic; at least, I am advised that the Secretary of the Treasury, the president of the R. F. C., as well as the Secretary of Agriculture, the administrator of the A. A. A., and Mr. Arthur Johnson, the manager of the cotton pool, were all in on this program.

Mr. BORAH. I was not referring to individuals; I was referring to a system. Fortunately there does come a time when the Congress is a necessary factor in this Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I quite agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Assume that cotton is to be sold this fall for 9 cents, which is fairly in prospect, is it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it is almost inevitable unless one thing shall happen, and that is that the farmers individually shall refuse to sell at the market price.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think the farmer could individually refuse to sell; he has got to live. Assume further that there are a million bales made outside of the provisions of the Bankhead Act. Is that a fair assumption?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I should say that the amount would be about 700,000 bales on this year's allotment.

Mr. BAILEY. The tax on the sales of such cotton now amounts to 6 cents a pound, does it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. That would leave the farmer not complying with the Bankhead Act 3 cents a pound for his cotton, would it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. Three cents a pound is $15 a bale. How much would the farmer lose under that system?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, some statements have been made, I believe, about the accumulation of additional cotton under the 12-cent loan. I want to predict now, as a long-time student of this subject, that you will find a good deal more cotton in the hands of the Government under the 9-cent loan than under the 12-cent loan, because there is nothing else for the cotton farmer to do, those who are able to do it. As the Senator from South Carolina stated, the tenants and the poor farmers are the ones who are most likely to suffer under this program. I was told by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that cotton is now selling at 10 cents a pound in southern Georgia. Those farmers sell at that price. No one should think that this plan guarantees them the other 2 cents to make up to them 12 cents.

Let me point out that if by virtue of a holding movement on the part of those who are in a position to hold their cotton during the last 2 months of the year, November and December, the average price for the 4 months should be increased to 12 cents a pound, then the poor devils who sell now would not get a single dime in addition to the market price they are today getting for their cotton. If the average price during the season should get up to 12 cents, those who sold it for less would be the "forgotten men"; they would be out of the picture.

Those who are able to hold, and, finally, possibly force the price up, get the price, of course, do not need the 12-cent guaranty; but those who need it most are the most likely to be the sufferers under the plan recently announced.

In addition to that, they will not get the money until next year sometime. The price-fixation period does not end until the 1st of January. Then, all the records must be made up, all the accounts of the farmers must be presented and go through the General Auditing Office. Vouchers must then be made, and we know, as a result of the programs relating to wheat and corn, that it would take months for the money to reach these poor needy men under this delaying, complex, and confusing plan.

It is to the financial advantage of the Government to fix the loan at 12 cents. Nearly all the cotton would move into trade. As Mr. Davis stated, 11,500,000 bales will be needed for this year's consumption. He said the mills must have it. That will cover this year's crop. When it is said the farmer can get a loan of 12 cents, then the trade will pay him 12 cents and he would much rather sell his cotton for 12 cents than to put it into a loan upon which carrying charges would accumulate.

If the Senate should adopt the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, prompt returns would be assured and we could be sure that very little cotton would go into the cotton loan. I believe less than a million bales out of the crop would go under the 12-cent loan. I predict that 5,000,000 bales would go under a 9-cent loan.

From all these standpoints it is better to proceed with a plan which is tried and satisfactory, especially as we have now reached the point of beginning to reduce the Government cotton under the reduction program next year. That cotton will be brought out of the pool as a necessary contribution to the world's consumption of American cotton.

Regardless of politics, regardless of all the complications, but looking at this matter from the standpoint of the best interests of the Government, exercising our judgment here as Members of the Senate, looking at the welfare of a great section of the country, I hope the Senate will vote to continue the 12-cent loan, not because it will initiate a plan, but because it will decide between two plans and decide that the tried plan shall be continued. It is to the interest, as has been pointed out, of the cotton trade. Practically all the cotton mills favor the 12-cent loan.

A cent or two in price does not greatly influence the sale of cotton goods. The stabilization of price is the thing that appeals. When the market is going down the wholesalers hold off, the retailers hold off, and the other buyers hold out of the market. We cannot have good business on a declining market. That is axiomatic. There is a reluctance and a delay in placing orders and making purchases.

We are confronted with that situation in the cotton-mill industry, involving several hundred thousand men and women in the employment of those mills. There is that great string of cotton mills from here clear across the Cotton Belt pleading with the administration to continue the 12-cent loan. If there are any business men in the country who are interested in the distribution of manufactured cotton goods, who understand the market for manufactured cotton goods, it is that group of experienced men who have their capital in the business and whose judgment is controlled by experience.

That group is joining with the farmers and with the bankers of the country. Only a day or two ago the Bankers' Association of Alabama adopted a resolution approving the 12-cent loan. At the State convention of the Merchants' Association at Birmingham, where there were in attendance some 5,000 business men, the day after the announcement was given out, according to a telegram to me, they unanimously adopted a resolution appealing for no change this year in the program.

I submit to my colleagues that we ought to have an opportunity, regardless of Mr. Oscar Johnson, Secretary Wallace, Mr. Morgenthau, and Mr. Jesse Jones, to go along with this program, of such interest to all classes of our people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to suspend the rules.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words about the proposal now before us. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in eloquent terms has described the plight of the cotton farmer and spoken of him as "the forgotten man." Let me assure the Senator from Alabama that the cotton farmer is not the only forgotten man. I have told the Senate so many times that Senators weary of the repetition, but I live in the most thickly populated State in the Union. In my State one-tenth of the entire population of the United States, 13,000,000 people, have residence. At least one-fourth of those people are forgotten men, women, and children.

It is all very well to talk about a plan which will aid the cotton farmer at the expense of the remainder of the people of the country. My State is required to pay one-third of all the taxes of the Federal Government, and at the same time there is imposed an added burden upon the poor of the cities of New York, who are already burdened with taxation, a burden which they cannot carry in addition to those they already have.

In New York the poverty-stricken cannot go into the garden and gather a few vegetables or kill an old rooster to be parboiled. They have nothing to eat but "the sidewalks of New York." Poverty! No country dweller, I care not where he may live, can know such poverty as some of the poor of the cities know. I speak with no disrespect of the country dweller. I have said, with pride, a thousand times in the Senate, that I was born on a farm. Most of my relatives are farmers. I live on a farm. I know country conditions. I know what poverty in the country is. But there is no rural or farm poverty than can compare with the poverty and the attending distress of those who live in tenement houses.

We have gone on and on and on through the past few years in imposing new burdens upon the poor, upon all who live on a budget. The price of everything the people must eat has been amazingly increased. In the case of some articles, the price of food has been doubled. The cotton garments that the poor of my State wear have been increased materially in price by reason of the legislation enacted here.

I might be content to have continued a plan, providing it has been of service in assisting the cotton farmer; but I am discontented and unwilling to submit to the imposition of further burdens upon those who toil, and those who struggle, and those who pinch the pennies in order to keep life within their bodies.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Does not the Senator from New York know that, with practically no exception, I think, every Senator from the cotton States has supported every effort the Senator from New York has made for the relief of the masses of his own territory? I think he will find that the Southern Senators without a single exception have stood with him in every effort to relieve distress in his own part of the country. I wish to ask the Senator whether the fact that we have a distressful condition, and he has a distressful condition, would be any excuse for either of us not standing with the other to help alleviate it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, certainly the Senator from Louisiana is just as tender-hearted and kind as I am—undoubtedly much more so—but when I think over the legislative enactments and try to find some which have been helpful to the people I have in mind at the moment, I confess I fail to recall one. If there were one before us, or if some such measure should come to us, I have no doubt the Senator from Louisiana and all of his colleagues from the South would be for it; but we have entered upon a campaign of work relief. What sort of work relief? Relief for those who can use pick and shovel, for those who can do hard manual labor.

Who are the unemployed in New York City, those who suffer most from present-day conditions? They are the milliners and the dressmakers, the manicurists and the nurses, the clerks in the stores and in the offices, largely women. Will the Senator from Louisiana tell me what has been done to alleviate the conditions confronting that group?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. LONG. It has not been done, but I offered here a joint resolution which would have done it—to share the wealth. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. If I had some way to make better distribution of the wealth of the country so that those struggling people so near to the heart of the Senator from Louisiana could have some share in the gravy of life, and if he were to present some plan which offered security for that group, I believe any party to which I have ever adhered would join him in his activity.

I have heard much about share-the-wealth proposals. I suppose it is due to my stupidity, my failure to comprehend; it must be these things which have prevented me from following energetically after the Senator from Louisiana. But let me say to him, if it is a matter of any interest, let him not be discouraged so far as I am concerned. When he brings forth a plan which will solve the problem of the masses, I will join him 100 percent. But, Mr. President, I have not seen any such plan enacted into law. On the contrary, I have seen law after law passed which, in its enforcement, has added burdens. I see all these handsome women in the galleries. Every one of them knows that the ham and eggs and the bacon and eggs they have at breakfast, if they are fortunate enough to have such dishes, cost much more than they did a while ago; and a large part of the increase in price is due to the application of the laws which have been passed here in the past 2 years. Instead of solving the problems of the poor, we are adding to them.

I used to be a doctor. I practiced medicine for a good many years—I hate to tell how many—but I desire to say that when I found that some method I had used in the treatment of a given disease continued to fail, and made the patient worse, I discontinued that kind of treatment. I took a new treatment. I found something else. When we find that legislative enactments are making the patient worse instead of better, it is time for us to apply some new form of treatment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator from New York mean to say to the Senate that the condition of the American people now is worse than it was in 1933?

Mr. COPELAND. I mean to say that the condition of the American people now is just as bad as in 1933, and in some respects worse. I am going to say why in a moment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. LONG. At this point of the remarks of the Senator from New York, if he will permit me, I desire to state that I have the report of the statistical department of the American Federation of Labor, dated August 22, 1935, in which the number of unemployed persons today is estimated to be 11,000,000, which is 359,000 more than were unemployed in August 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, at one time I had a friend who had a home in West Virginia, and he burned natural gas in his house. We happened to be at the same summer resort. He had a telegram calling him home because his house had been blown up. He had left burning a little pilot light up in the bathroom on the second floor, and there was a leak in the basement; and the gas poured in, and gradually filled the house until it reached the pilot light, and then was ignited, and the whole mass exploded.

What I mean by being worse off than in 1933 is this: A great many thrifty persons in this country had made savings. They had bank accounts. They had life-insurance policies. They had equities in homes. They were paying money into the building-and-loan associations. They are the persons now who cannot pay. They are the persons whose savings have been dissipated and absorbed. They are infinitely worse off than they were; and more and more the persons who are in the bread lines and in distress are those who have striven through the past, by self-denial and by thrift, to accumulate something. Those accumulations now have gone. Of course, many of them went by reason of bank failures.

I am glad to say that the Democratic Party is not responsible for that state of affairs. But when I think about the added burdens of these people, I am unhappy about it, and then when we have here a proposal to add still more to the burdens of those who live in the modest homes in Jersey City, and in Hoboken, and in Westchester County, and in Rockland County, in my State, I do not like it. If I could feel that these proposed enactments were priming the pump and adding to the hope of recovery, I would be reconciled to them, even though the pinch might be felt in various quarters. But who can say with all honesty that recovery is on in the United States?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator asks the question, Who can say with all honesty that recovery is on in the United States? The other Senator from New York State said yesterday that recovery is on, and I have his speech before me.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say that there is not a harder working, more conscientious, or abler man in the Senate than is my colleague, and the Senator from North Carolina nods his head to indicate that he agrees with me. Yet my colleague and I have a very good understanding, born of years of intimacy. We love each other even when we are not agreeing.

Mr. BAILEY. I merely answered the question the Senator asked.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not hear all the speech of my colleague.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to read a paragraph?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator's colleague stated:

> What has all this meant to the average worker, the prime factor in all our industrial wealth? Long had he been shunned and neglected, his voice drowned out by the noise of the factory, always first to bear the brunt of hard times, always last to taste the fruits of prosperity. I have listened to the flimsy fiction that the recovery program has decreased employment. But when I cast my eyes at random over the universally accepted reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, I find that between 1933 and April 1935, to take a few representative industries, employment has increased by 117,000 in iron and steel, by 230,000 in machinery, by 285,000 in transportation equipment, by 69,000 in lumber, by 80,000 in textile fabrics, and by 54,000 in wearing apparel. Viewing the country as a whole, the consensus is that 3,500,000 men and women have regained their positions in private industry since revival commenced.
> Equally encouraging have been the developments in wages. Between 1933 and 1935 the annual volume of pay rolls rose by $300,000,000 in iron and steel, by $350,000,000 in machinery, by $550,000,000 in transportation equipment, by $100,000,000 in lumber, by $150,000,000 in textile fabrics, and by $150,000,000 in wearing apparel. The total labor income of the Nation rose from $29,000,000,000 in 1933 to $33,000,000,000 in 1934, a gain of approximately $4,000,000,000.

That is from the speech of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in the Senate on yesterday.

Mr. COPELAND. My beloved colleague and I do not use the same yardstick. I can quite believe that the money income of various industries has increased by reason of the higher prices; I agree to that; but I go a little further than my colleague goes. I want to go back to the fundamental question whether or not the volume of business is increasing. The volume of business is what determines employment and prosperity.

I hold in my hand a little pamphlet from which I have quoted once in a while, and this issue gives the current figures. There is only one way of which I know by which to measure the general welfare of the country. I can realize that for one reason or another there may be localized prosperity, a big crop of apples in a community in a county, or something else which might mean prosperity to that particular community. But I know of no better way to measure the degree of recovery than through the carloadings of the country. If there is actually a return of prosperity in the sense of a return of volume of production, there must be an increase in the carloadings. What is the fact about that?

Let me take the figures for March. In the four and a fraction weeks of March of this year the carloadings amounted to 3,014,609. In 1934 for the same period the carloadings amounted to 3,067,612. That shows a falling off of over 50,000 carloadings in the month.

Now, we come to the 4 weeks of April. During that period this year the carloadings amounted to 2,303,103. During the corresponding period of last year they amounted to 2,340,460, showing a falling off of over 35,000 carloadings.

We come now to the four and a fraction weeks in May of this year, when the carloadings amounted to 2,327,120 as against 2,446,365 in 1934. That shows a falling off of 20,000 carloadings.

For the 4 weeks in June of this year the car loadings amounted to 3,035,153, and in 1934 they amounted to 3,084,630, or a falling off of 50,000 cars. When we compare the figures, even with those of 1933, it is shown that there was a falling off.

In the four and a fraction weeks of July of this year the car loadings amounted to 2,228,737, as against 2,351,015 last year and 2,498,390 in 1933.

Now let us take the last week for which I have the figures, the first week in August. In this year the car loadings amounted to 597,083, against 612,660 in 1934 and 620,482 in 1933.

In short, to sum it up, the car loadings this year, so far, have amounted to 18,001,887, as against 18,400,298 in 1934 and 16,463,172 in 1933.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator will agree, however, that truck transportation has had a great deal to do with the reduction of railway car loadings.

Mr. COPELAND. If I were attempting to compare the car loadings of 1935 with the car loadings of 1930, I should say "yes", but I will not admit that the truck business of 1934 was any less than the truck business of 1935. That is my conviction, and all one has to do to prove it is to examine into the sales of trucks. There is no doubt that the car loadings are declining, and they indicate to a certainty, to my mind, an effect on the welfare of the country.

I am not finding fault with my colleague. He is talking about the money return; I am talking about the volume of business, and I know perfectly that, while there may have been some stimulated employment in certain places, if there is material reduction in the number of car loadings, it is proof conclusive to me that there is a decline in the welfare of the country.

Mr. President, I am not going to say any more. I am opposed to the proposed project, but not because I do not want to help the cotton farmers. I want to help everybody. Human suffering to me is distressing to the last degree. But I have a responsibility to the people living in the State of New York, the great Empire State, and this proposed legislation would add, I think the Senator from Tennessee said, $150,000,000 to their burden. I do not know exactly what he said, but at any rate it will add to the burden of the people.

A short time ago we added $10,000,000 to the burden of the people of New York State through the Guffey bill, and now we are asked to vote more of a burden. How long can that go on? How long can the people endure it?

Mr. President, I am worried about conditions in America. If I can find some plan, whether it is the plan of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] or any other, to bring about a return of prosperity and happiness I am for it. But, much as I love the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and all my other colleagues from the South, my fear is that this proposal is simply the addition of another burden upon the shoulders of people who are struggling under the burdens which they now carry.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I express the hope that we may have a vote on the motion to suspend the rule. I am going to add just a few words to what has been said.

In 1933 we undertook to inaugurate programs for business and for agriculture in this country. A part of the agricultural program for cotton included, of necessity, a loan by the Government. Reason about it as we may, of necessity it included the loan feature. Twelve cents was fixed as the loan, and we have lived under that, and the entire economy of the South is built on the basis of that loan.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I cannot yield now. It would be cruel beyond all possible expression—a cruelty that could help no part of this country—to destroy the purchasing power of one-third, roughly speaking, of the people of the United States.

The whole economy of the cotton-growing section is built on a 12-cent loan which the Government fixed, and of necessity fixed, as a part of the agricultural program. That loan of 12 cents continued until August 1st of this year—23 days ago—and then, yielding to someone else's suggestion, and perhaps for some good purpose, looking to the exportation of cotton into the world market, the program was changed. The change made is confusing, and yet the Agricultural Adjustment Administration asserts that the farmer will receive 12 cents a pound for his cotton. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] need not be worried about it, the farmer will receive 12 cents a pound for his cotton.

Why and where, then, is there a real saving to the American people brought about by now changing the whole program of the loan to a loan of 9 cents and a subsidy of substantially 3 cents? It may be worth something to the cotton manufacturer, it may be worth a little to the textile manufacturer, but not much. It can only be worth something to the textile manufacturer who did not keep up his stocks and who did not keep his employees at work, because those who kept up their stocks—and they have more in their inventories today than they have had for more than 5 years—those who have kept up their stocks will be hurt just as the cotton farmer who has placed his whole economy upon a 12-cent loan on his cotton.

There is a processing tax of 4.2. The 12-cent loan brings the cotton practically up to parity, but nothing whatever beyond it. It is just simply a question of fairness that in the very midst of the marketing season, when the cotton is coming on the market, the program not be changed to the detriment and the injury and the loss of the people who have produced the cotton.

Within the few marketing hours since this change was announced the cotton farmers of the country have lost outright $60,000,000, and every manufacturer, and every merchant, and everyone else whose business is dependent upon the farmer, has sustained an equivalent loss.

Mr. President, we only ask that the rule be suspended so that we may have a vote on whether this loan on the basis on which it has existed, shall be continued during the 1935 marketing season. By and large it amounts to the same thing to the Government, because the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is authority for the statement that the farmer will receive 12 cents for his cotton anyway this year. Why force him to receive a part of it as a subsidy? Why compel him to take a part of it as a subsidy when he does not want it in that way, and he is entitled to have it as a loan upon the product which he has made under the laws and under conditions which have been placed upon him by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, after the very able exposition of the question involved in the motion to suspend the rule and permit a vote on this question which has been made by the junior Senator from South Carolina, the junior Senator from Alabama, and my colleague, I shall detain the Senate but a few minutes in expressing my views and those of the people we undertake to represent here.

The announcement of this new, complicated, and complex plan advanced by the C. C. C., or the Commodity Credit Corporation, as a substitute for the program which had been adopted heretofore in dealing with the cotton farmers of the South has caused unspeakable confusion in the minds of the cotton farmers of my State and of the entire Cotton Belt. It not only has caused a feeling of confusion but a feeling of resentment and bitterness. In that feeling, Mr. President, I cannot avoid in part sharing. I hope that the Members of the Senate will realize just what the cotton farmer of the South has subjected himself to in the Nation-wide program for the improvement of agriculture which was advanced in 1933. He is the only one of the producers of the great basic commodities who has submitted himself to a plan of compulsory restriction and reduction of production. He was asked to reduce his acreage in cotton a total of 35 percent as compared to a request for a reduction of 10 percent in the case of the wheat farmers and, I think, of 5 or 10 percent in the case of the corn farmers.

In the payment of benefit payments, or rental payments, as they are sometimes termed, as I showed on another occasion on this floor, the cotton farmer has received a much lower per capita payment than have the producers of corn in Iowa and wheat in Kansas and the other great commodities which are handled under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Now, Mr. President, at this stage of this crop-year, when, in the southern part of the belt over one-half of the crop is gathered, when plans have been made in accordance with a program laid down, with an understanding that the program would be continued, the southern cotton farmer asks today at the hands of the Senate not any additional benefits, but merely, after making these sacrifices, which are greater than those made by any other producers in this country, that he be permitted for one more crop-year to carry on the program to which he has loyally submitted in the past.

In my judgment, all of the efforts of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in this country are likely to come to naught if the cotton farmer is to be sacrificed by this plan which has been advanced by the Agricultural Department and the Commodity Credit Corporation, formulated and set up largely by men who have not the slightest conception of the economy of the individual cotton farmer, or if they have any conception of his wants and of the economy of the cotton farmer, certainly have absolutely no sympathy for his welfare.

It is easy enough for some alleged economist or some "brain truster", or one with an imaginary plan to sit down with a paper and pencil in his hands and to apply himself to a subject about which he knows nothing, and to produce a set of figures which would make it appear that the plan in all its various ramifications is fair. This plan on its face is fair. Had it been announced in January or February of this year I believe the cotton farmer would have been willing to subscribe to it, but coming at this late day it will work great hardships on those innocent people who have gone along with this Government relying upon the fact that the 12-cent loans that were made last year would be continued this year.

Mr. President, the man I am speaking of here in the few minutes that I shall hold the floor is not the representative of any great cotton interest which is interested in the export trade, which operates thousands of acres and looks on the tenant farmers and the day laborers who work on that farm and who deals with them in much the same way that he would deal with mules and the plows and other physical stock which is necessary to carry on that farm. I am speaking here in behalf of the share-cropper, the tenant farmer. When I hear the Senator from New York and others address this body on the plight of the poor among their constituency, I can say from actual knowledge that there are cotton farmers in the South who during the course of an entire 12 months never handle as much as $100 in cash. I was interested the other day when the Guffey bill was pending to hear reference made to $57 a month as being the average wage of the coal miner, as being an amount so small as to make it impossible for him to exist.

Many cotton farmers never handle $57 in cash in 1 year. On some of the average allotments of 1, or 2, or 3 bales of cotton, and where they are working on what is commonly known as the "half system", the entire cash income from the crop, if he makes two bales, would only amount to $60 a year, and if he made three bales, which is considerably above the average, he would handle only $90 a year. Yet Senators suggest that this extension of justice to the cotton farmer would work a hardship upon some of the poor of the country.

Mr. President, the farmer of the South feels that in a measure faith has been broken with him. I hope some of the Members of this body who do not understand all the details of the handling and marketing of the cotton crop will bear with those who represent that section in granting us merely an extension for 1 more year of the privileges which the cotton farmers have enjoyed heretofore.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and others have gone into detail to show that it would mean a distinct benefit to the Treasury of the United States and the taxpayers of the United States if the amendment should be adopted. I appeal to Senators for simple justice in behalf of the people who for 70 years have borne the tariff burdens of the country, who are today not asking for one iota of additional benefit, but merely for an extension of 1 year, of which they felt assured but which has been taken away from them at the behest of someone who knows absolutely nothing about the cotton farmer, and without consultation with a single Senator representing a cotton-producing State.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will suspend the rule and give us an opportunity to consider the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak on the question, but I think it is my duty to say something to make clear the situation in which I find myself. I do not know when I have been more embarrassed on account of certain things that have transpired.

Early in the spring, in connection with other Senators, I discussed this matter with the President. He stated that if Congress would extend the Bankhead bill, a loan would be made. I understand that same statement was subsequently made to other Senators. Senators may imagine how astonished I was when the report came out to the effect that the new plan which was suggested had been endorsed by the Farm Administration and by the President. I have not had any conversation with him, so I do not know to what extent the President had endorsed this abortion which has been handed to us.

In its essentials it is not a loan at all. It invites the producers to sell their crops at times during the period outlined in the bill, and with the understanding that the Government will make up the difference between the average price they get in the 10 bona fide spot markets of the country and the price for which the cotton was sold. It is possible under that arrangement for the producer to sell his cotton at, say, 9 cents, and the average price at which all the cotton was sold in the 10 markets to be 11 cents. When he sold at 9 cents he would only get a cent subsidy, and he would have lost a cent. In addition to that, all the cotton must be sold in the open market with a tax under the Bankhead bill of 6 cents a pound.

Mr. President, the present plan is a plan to give the foreign purchaser just as cheap American cotton as it is possible for him to get. Study it from top to bottom and it will be seen that it is a plan to furnish Europe with cheap cotton.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the change affect in any way, now or in the future, the processing tax to be levied on the manufacturer?

Mr. SMITH. I think it will increase that greatly for the reason that the processing tax is supposed to measure the difference between whatever price is obtained for the cotton and the parity price. The parity price is supposed to be about 16 cents a pound, so if cotton goes to 9 cents, a processing tax of 7 cents a pound will be paid, or $35 a bale.

Mr. WALSH. It has been intimated that the proposal is made at this time to prevent an increase in the processing tax.

Mr. SMITH. This will increase it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think so?

Mr. SMITH. It is not a matter of thinking. It is a matter of mathematical fact. The processing tax measures the difference between what a cotton grower gets for his cotton and the parity price. The parity price is now 16 cents a pound. If he gets 9 cents a pound, there would be a processing tax of 7 cents a pound.

I did not vote for the processing tax and never would vote for it. I do not believe the American spinner ought to be forced to pay a processing tax.

Mr. WALSH. The North and South were together on that matter.

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe that the cotton farmers of the South ought to be mulcted by the high protective tariff, but we ought to have gotten it out of the general tax.

Mr. WALSH. I am in accord with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. SMITH. I am just saying that in passing. I want the farmers of the country, by this Government that taxes him to death with a high protective tariff, to be given a rebate equal to the tariff he pays.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand, in the A. A. A. Act or the amendments to the A. A. A. Act which we recently adopted, it is mandatory that the processing tax shall account for the difference between the market price and the parity price.

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a mandate of the statute enacted by the Congress.

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. If the manufacturer should be able to buy his cotton directly at a cheaper price than now, he would really have to pay more in order to meet the requirements of the processing tax, would he not?

Mr. SMITH. No. Instead of making the loan at 12 cents, if the Government had just come out and said, "Since we are in this business we will make the loan figure 16 cents", I think it would not have been necessary to pay any processing tax, because we provided in the Agricultural Adjustment Act that as the price got within 90 percent of parity or to parity the processing tax should be decreased from 25 percent to as much as zero.

But, Mr. President, I wish to reiterate that I am amazed, I am confused, when such assurances were given us without any equivocation, that the final result was that this abortion was handed to us.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I desire to ask a question, because the Senator is entirely familiar with the subject and I am not. I am trying to learn from those to whom I have listened here today. Am I right in saying that when we adopted this policy, while we were going through the passage of the act in the former Congress and through the passage of the Bankhead Act in this Congress, assurances were given of a continuation of the policy, the assurances being either nominal or outright? Am I right in that?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is right in that. I said—the Senator was not here at the time—that some of us went up to discuss this matter with the President, and we were given assurance that if the Bankhead Act should be extended, the loan "as is" would be extended.

Mr. McCARRAN. On that assurance, the present crop has been planted and will be harvested?

Mr. SMITH. And on that assurance the Chairman of the Agricultural Committee, myself, worked with all the power I had to extend the Bankhead Act. It expired on the 1st of August; and while I was standing on my feet, while the conference was on, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] walked up to me and said, "Get it through, because if you can, the loan will be extended immediately." On that assurance I said to the Senate that I had certain reasons to believe that we ought to put it through, and I worked, and we got it through.

I ask the Senator from Georgia if that is not correct?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that is absolutely correct; and it was merely confirmatory of what had already been stated.

Mr. SMITH. As the Senator from Georgia says, it was merely confirmatory of what had previously been stated.

Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. This is my view: Inherently, I am opposed to a price-fixing policy; but inasmuch as faith has been pledged in this matter, I think justice should follow, and, following that, that this program should be carried out within the faith that was pledged and the word that was pledged. For that reason I, for one, propose to vote for the suspension of this rule, and I propose to vote for the Byrnes amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not care to say very much more. It is useless for me to try to review to the Senate the precise terms of this proposed loan, so called—it is not a loan—because the Senate would not understand it if I were to start out to do it [laughter]; but allow me to state to the Senate that it is an absolute subterfuge. That is what it is.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I desire to have the RECORD show whether or not I have misunderstood the Senator. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina had the understanding from the President that this loan of 12 cents would be extended?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I said that. It is not necessary to repeat it.

Mr. LONG. No. I just wanted to get it in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. All right.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH. I yield; yes.

Mr. McADOO. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator.

California grows about 300,000 bales of cotton per annum—not a very large amount, but it is of great importance to the State. I have been receiving telegrams from some of our producers urging the 9-cent loan, saying that they believe it will result in a larger return to the producer than if loans at 12 cents were made.

As I am not familiar with the matter, and I did not happen to be on the floor when the Senator was explaining it, I should be obliged if the Senator would indicate what he thinks of that suggestion.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from California thinks he can buy as much with 9 cents as he can with 12 cents, he will answer his own question.

Mr. McADOO. That is not the question. As I understand, there is an alternative method—some rebate which is to come to the farmer for the extra 3 cents.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, Mr. President; but if a farmer had 10 bales of cotton, and he were to sell them at 9 cents because he needed money, relying on the subsidy or the rebate to bring it up to 12 cents, he would find that it was not there. He would get what the average price was during the period from September 1 to January 1, 1936. Whatever that aggregate average is, he would get the difference between that and 12 cents.

Suppose the farmer sold at 9 cents, and the average was 11 cents; then he would get the difference between 11 and 12 cents, or he would lose $5 a bale.

Under the 12-cent loan the cotton is hypothecated. The Government takes it as collateral, and the farmer gets a straight 12 cents.

Mr. McADOO. In other words, if there should be a loss on cotton at 12 cents a pound, the Government would sustain it?

Mr. SMITH. Exactly; and if it should go up, the farmer would be the beneficiary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from California asks for an explanation of the telegrams he is receiving. I think I can explain why the Senator is receiving them.

The American Cotton Cooperative Association, with headquarters at New Orleans—a holding company having no direct members, but dealing for the other cooperatives, and who are cotton merchants—helped get up this plan of 9 cents in order to have general trade in cotton. I know of telegrams being sent, and I am sure the Senator's telegrams have been sent as a result of a request from New Orleans from the American Cotton Cooperative Association.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to have the Senate fully understand the difference between the proposed plan and the one that has been working.

On any cotton that is in the hands of the man who produced it he could get the 12-cent loan. Under the proposed plan it is restricted to the Bankhead allotment; and, in addition to that, any man who even gets it on the allotment has to sign a pledge that next year he will reduce his crop still further than it is reduced now. He has to sign on the dotted line before he gets it; and I have signed on my last dotted line.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. My questions may be repetitions of those already asked, but they are asked for the purpose of developing clearly some facts that the Senator has expressed.

First of all, do I correctly understand the Senator, and those who take the same position with him, to claim that the proposed change will make no difference to the manufacturer, because he will have to pay, in addition to whatever price he pays for cotton directly, the processing tax, amounting in the aggregate to 16 cents a pound?

Mr. SMITH. Unless he exports his cotton.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH. But for all domestic purposes he will pay the difference between the price he pays for the cotton and the parity price.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. I understand that.

The second question is this: If that is so, it makes no difference to the consumer, because the manufacturer, in figuring his cost for cotton, has to fix it at 16 cents; so he is out of the picture?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; he is out.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

Third, this change is likely to bring about a reduction in the price that the farmer may obtain for his cotton?

Mr. SMITH. To be sure.

Mr. WALSH. So the cotton farmer is the one who stands to lose?

Mr. SMITH. Did the Senator ever know the farmer to be anything but a "goat" since he has been here, and from time immemorial? Of course he stands the loss, if any.

Mr. WALSH. Then this contest is really a contest to see whether the Government or the cotton farmer is going, in the future, to bear a loss?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. I am glad the Senator brought up that point. This new arrangement means that whatever loss there is, the farmer bears it; and the gap is wide open for him to sustain a loss. He cannot escape it. This complicated arrangement was evolved by the great cotton growers. You ought to see those who were consulted about this matter, which affects every cotton grower. Just read the names.

I want to make my position clear. Ever since I have been in the Senate, in season and out of season I have worked for the man in the field. I have been held up to ridicule and scorn, as everyone knows, and now, as Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, I have gone beyond what I thought under my oath I was justified in doing in order to bring some hope and relief to those who, unorganized, have no spokesman here.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Let me finish the sentence. When things were working to the point where the man in the field was giving full reliance on this administration, absolute promises being made, just as his crop is moving, and he is forced, by grim necessity, to sell, he is being sacrificed in the face of a glorious hope.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator recall at what price cotton was selling at the time when the Government inaugurated the 12-cent loan?

Mr. SMITH. It had gone up somewhat.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I can answer that question, if the Senator will permit me. The parity price at that time was 12 cents.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am talking about the market price.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The actual market price, as I stated before, was 8 cents; a difference of 4.2 cents.

Mr. BARKLEY. With cotton selling at that time at 8 cents, the Government took the chance of lending 12 cents on it.

Mr. SMITH. First, 10 cents.

Mr. BARKLEY. Two cents above the average price to the farmer. It was increased later to 12 cents.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the market price of cotton today, or what was it yesterday?

Mr. SMITH. It was down to something like 10½ cents.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that the Government at this time, by the continuation of the 12-cent-loan policy, is taking no more chance of loss than it took in the beginning, when it inaugurated the 10-cent loan, or increased it to 12 cents?

Mr. SMITH. No. Now, I wish to make another statement, so that Senators may understand, and if they do not take my word for it, they can read the bulletins and the actual official statistics.

There is a propaganda going around, some of it emanating from the Department of Agriculture, that American cotton, when loans were being made at 12 cents, was out of parity with world cotton. I challenge any cotton man in the world to prove other than that the American price fixes the price not only for American cotton in the world but for all other cotton produced in the world.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the world price, in gold, for the past 6 months, was 6 cents.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. That answers that proposition.

Mr. SMITH. Yes. Let us get this fact clearly in mind. Propaganda has been going around that we were likely to be submerged with world cotton. I state that, according to official statistics, the production of world cotton today is not appreciably greater than it was 20 years ago. The trouble is that there are men in this country who are buying for European concerns, and in view of the fact that Europe in normal times purchases 55 percent of all the cotton grown in the United States, they come here, of course, and try to get the cotton for their European constituents at as low a price as possible. And we sit here and cater to them, so that the price of American cotton is fixed in Liverpool.

Mr. President, as I said before, I would much prefer that we should come to the point, and I think we are coming to the point, where not only would we consider it our duty, but our right, to legislate here, and not leave the country dependent upon a handful of men in the Department of Agriculture. Our constituents did not send us here to delegate the great power of making Federal laws to men in the department to write the laws and to administer them, outside of this Chamber and the one at the other end of the Capitol. Yet here we are, waiting with bated breath, and trembling to hear what some man who does not know a cotton stalk from a jimsonweed is going to say as to the value of American cotton. Every stalk of cotton is worked by human hands, and every lock of a 15,000,000-bale crop is cut with human fingers. However, coming as it does from the despised section of the United States, namely, the South, so far as those who produce it are concerned, they are in the discard.

Mr. President, I am embarrassed and confused, but as for me, from now on—

Me and my wife,
My son, John, and his wife,
Us four will serve the Lord.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, perhaps I have said too much, though I have not said nearly as much as I feel like saying. It is remarkable that 11 States—indeed, 7 States—produce the bulk of the American cotton crop. We can count on our fingers the men from the cotton States who stand here and fight for American cotton. I have earned the sobriquet "Cotton Ed", as though cotton were a thing to be despised, when cotton has brought into this country $1,500,000,000 each year for more than 30 years in the sale of raw cotton, $800,000,000 from Europe in exchange for our raw cotton, laying the foundation for American prosperity and holding the balance of trade in favor of our country up to the time when we became a creditor nation.

No man from my section, save one or two, was ignorant enough, or honest and brave enough to stand for a quarter of a century fighting, fighting hopelessly, but still fighting; and I do welcome some others into the fight. Thank God we have gotten to the point where the fire is burning others besides me.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, taking license from the statement of the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] respecting what he has referred to as the observations upon himself as a great author and advocate of the rights of the cotton producers of America, I ask him, as a matter of information, what is there to the statement being published, and, let me add, greatly published where I live in the Middle West, that the policies of the present administration in its Agricultural Department and otherwise have caused the cotton produced in Brazil, Australia, India, and other portions of the world to wipe out the profits and the prospects of the American cotton grown in the southland, for which the Senator here speaks?

Mr. SMITH. There is not a word of truth in it; not a scintilla of truth in it. The reason why our exports have dropped down is because our loans to Europe have ceased to be made, and the tariff barrier wall has been raised. That wall cannot be gotten over.

So far as the cotton grown in the countries referred to by the Senator, I challenge any man to bring in the samples and let us test them and compare them with American cotton. There is not a spot on the globe which can grow the same character of cotton as is grown in this country. I say "character" of cotton. They can grow the same grade and perhaps the same staple, but it does not have the same tensile strength or the wearing characteristics of the American cotton. That is the reason why American cotton dominates the markets of the world today. But we are being gerrymandered and flipflopped by men, some of them from Sweden and Norway where they grow that magnificent cotton in a foot of snow! Those are the exports we now have.

I wish to wind up what I have said with this statement. I wish the Senate to observe the fact that when it comes to the greatest single asset America has, that the men who are put in charge to draw the rules and regulations and to feed the country with their propaganda, are men who never were south of the Mason and Dixon's line except in a Pullman car, and men who were imported from abroad. We are supposed to sit here and swallow what they put out.

I understand that once there was a man who swore very profanely and did so in the presence of a parson. Someone touched him and said, "Look out, friend, there is a minister." He turned to the minister and said, "Excuse me, parson, I did not know that you were a minister or I would not have sworn in your presence. But parson, I am a plain, blunt man and I call a spade a spade." The preacher said, "Well, judging from the conversation I heard before you found out I was a preacher I am surprised that you do not call it a damned old shovel."

So I think I will from now on call a spade a spade when I do not call it "a damned old shovel."

Mr. President, we have come to the time when we need not only plain-speaking but independent-thinking Senators. America will be safe against the onslaught of enemies inside and out when every man in the Senate resolves before God and his country to do his duty according to his own conscience and convictions. We know that sometimes we are not doing it now; that we would rather warm the leather in our chairs than to save America. Anything which jeopardizes the cotton production jeopardizes America.

Mr. President, the Senate can do just as it pleases. I have said my say, and from time to time I am going to have some other says.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I had intended to speak, but the matter has been covered by the Senators from the other Southern States. They have considered the question from moral, political, and economic aspects and given the reasons why the rule should be suspended in order that we may have a vote, and I sincerely hope the vote will be in the affirmative. I am going to withhold not only my desire to speak but a sense of real obligation to present the cause of the cotton farmers in my State. I will take my seat, but I earnestly urge the Senators to sustain the motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have before me two editorials, one appearing in the Washington Post of this date, under the heading of "The Cotton Subsidy", and the other appearing in the New York Times of this date entitled "The Dilemma in Cotton."

In these editorials will be found a discussion of the foolish course pursued by the Government in dealing with cotton and the unsatisfactory conditions which have resulted. These editorials are a valuable contribution to the subject in hand, and I ask unanimous consent to have them inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The articles referred to are as follows:)

[From the Washington Post of Aug. 24, 1935]

THE COTTON SUBSIDY

The A. A. A.'s attempt to circumvent the cotton problem by a tortuous route is all too typical of the present course of American Government. Instead of squarely facing the consequences of an unsound policy, the administration is making a desperate effort to please everyone by writing another blank check against future tax receipts.

Continuation of the 12-cent loan on cotton would have been economically disastrous. Last year the Government lent $237,982,000 under that arrangement, of which only $3,339,000 has been repaid. Instead of selling their cotton, farmers secured Federal loans, leaving the A. A. A. to worry about the disposition of some 4,600,000 bales held as collateral. The result has been that American cotton exports fell 36 percent in volume during the marketing season just closed. Foreign production has been greatly stimulated, and the position which the United States has occupied for many years in the world cotton market is jeopardized. From the economic viewpoint a change of policy was imperative.

On the other hand, southern Senators were quick to detect the seeds of political calamity in any retreat from 12-cent cotton. The market price had already fallen below the loan value, and with other countries greatly increasing their cotton output, there was reason to fear a collapse in prices which would alienate many embittered votes.

Recourse to the third alternative—the use of Treasury funds as a direct subsidy for cotton growers—was easy. The new policy is designed to stimulate the movement of cotton, since loans will be limited to 9 cents per pound. At the same time, farmers will be propitiated by the addition of outright gifts to benefit payments and Government loans. Only taxpayers will feel the burden, and even for them its weight will be minimized, until the Government has the courage squarely to confront its steadily mounting obligations. In other words, the whole problem has been dismissed with another casual draft upon posterity.

The decision is the more astonishing because it follows by 1 day an emphatic rejection of cotton subsidies by the Cabinet committee which recently concluded a study of the textile industry. Premiums intended to stimulate exports were disapproved by this group because of the possible retaliatory measures which might be taken in foreign countries against such subsidy. Probably this advice accounts for the elaborate camouflaging of the new subsidy plan, but the underlying inconsistency is nonetheless evident.

Within the next few months the administration may expect other agricultural groups to be knocking at its door, demanding similar gratuities. How can the A. A. A. consistently refuse, especially on the eve of an election? Aside from evolving positively dangerous practices from half-baked theory, the administration has set up a precedent that may prove far more embarrassing than 9-cent cotton. It is by just such surrender of principles to opportunism that democratic governments of the past have been destroyed.

[From New York Times of Aug. 24, 1935]

THE DILEMMA IN COTTON

The Government's new cotton policy seems to be a half-hearted attempt to extricate itself partially from a serious dilemma. In addition to the plow-up campaign and the acreage restriction which it put into effect in 1933, the Government made loans to the cotton producers at 10 cents a pound on the unsold portion of their crops. A year ago in connection with the Bankhead plan, the Government continued this loan policy, increasing the rate to 12 cents a pound. These loans were made "without recourse." In other words, if the price of his cotton rose above 12 cents the farmer could sell it and pocket the difference; but if it fell below 12 cents the Government would have to hold it and worry about the loss itself.

As a result the Government found itself compelled to take over nearly 50 percent of the crop. It now holds altogether about 6,000,000 bales, and its total investment is about $400,000,000. The consequence has been that, by raising the price of cotton, it has stimulated growth of the staple in other parts of the world, including Brazil, Egypt, and India. The net effect of this must be that when our cotton experiment is over, the world production of cotton, unless we ourselves make a drastic permanent reduction, will be greater than it has ever been. We shall not only have lost our former dominance of the world's cotton growing, but the price is likely to be at a lower level than otherwise for many years.

The loan policy has had another result that mere restriction would not have entailed. It has led to the holding of American cotton at a price that is artificially high. The result is that foreign purchasers, who only a few years ago were counted upon to take about 55 percent of our total production, have been switching to foreign cottons. This substitution has been retarded to some extent because foreign machines were designed to spin American cotton; but now that these machines are being altered or new machines are being installed to spin other cottons, the difficulty of winning these markets back will be greater. A few days ago official figures showed that the exports of cotton for the 1934–35 season, August to July inclusive, had fallen 36 percent even as compared with the previous season.

Thus the result of our cotton policy has been to give the growers higher prices and higher money incomes for the time being. The Government would find it more than embarrassing to confront the political results of abandoning the policy. But can it, on the other hand, begin to tie up several hundred million dollars more of public funds in holding several million more unsold bales of cotton for what is almost certain to be a repetition of the Farm Board fiasco?

The new policy is its attempt at compromise. It will make loans on the new crop, at only 9 cents instead of 12, but it stands ready to grant an outright subsidy to guarantee cotton farmers 12 cents on the average on their individual allotments by paying them the difference between that price and the average price of ⅞-inch Middling cotton from September 1 to January 1.

To some persons this may look merely like a more complicated way, in its net result, of lending the growers 12 cents a pound. There are, however, several differences. The Government will take its loss immediately instead of in an indefinite future. It will prevent any further increase in Government-held cotton hanging over the market. It is apparently designed to permit cotton consumers to buy new-crop cotton at less than 12 cents and to end the differential in favor of American cotton prices. Finally, it may have the purpose of providing a method for continuing cotton control even if the Bankhead Act is declared unconstitutional. But it is not a solution of the basic economic problem, and it raises the danger that growers of other crops will try to force its extension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to suspend the rule.

Mr. HALE. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the chief clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I repeat the announcement of my general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent from the city. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and I, who would vote "yea", are paired on the question with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who would vote "nay." I transfer my part of the pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] and I are paired on this question with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. If present the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] would vote "nay." If permitted to vote I should vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who would vote "nay", is paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], both of whom would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the following-named Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

Mr. GORE. On this question, I have a pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 19, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the motion to suspend the rule is agreed to, and the amendment is in order. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is desirous of offering an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I submit the following amendment to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment it is proposed, in line 1, after the word "directed", to insert the words "during the crop-year ending July 31, 1936", so as to make the amendment read:

The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed during the crop-year ending July 31, 1936, to make loans to farmers at the rate of 12 cents per pound on cotton, where such loans are secured by cotton stored in warehouses approved by said Corporation upon such terms and conditions as similar loans have been made by said Corporation during the crop-year ending July 31, 1935, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as amended.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina the following:

The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to farmers at the rate of 1½ cents per pound on wheat, when such loans are secured by warehouse receipts or by wheat stored on the farm, such loans to be made upon such terms and conditions as the said Corporation may prescribe, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in the spring-wheat States we have a very unfavorable condition this fall on account of the hot weather and rust. We have a great deal of lightweight wheat, and the farmers are being discriminated against in the price of this wheat. Farmers in the sections where we have had drought for 2 or 3 years are very hard pressed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Am I to understand the Senator is proposing a rate of 1½ cents a pound, which would be 90 cents a bushel?

Mr. FRAZIER. That would be 90 cents on 60-pound wheat, but on the lower-grade wheat it would be less than that.

Our farmers are very hard pressed. The local grain buyers are taking advantage of the farmers with reference to this lightweight wheat. They tell the farmers they do not know what that kind of wheat will bring on the market, and offer them a price anywhere from 30 or 40 cents a bushel, when, according to the market, even the lightweight wheat sells at 75 or 80 cents a bushel when it gets to the terminal. The farmers are being taken advantage of in this way. We believe this wheat should be kept on the farm or in local elevators, and in order to do that the farmer must be allowed to make a loan.

We made application to the A. A. A. to provide for loans, but they have not done so at the present time. I have favored the loans to farmers on cotton, on corn, and on hogs. I believe the wheat farmers are entitled to the same kind of loan.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has voted for loans on cotton, I understand?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I have voted for them every time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Department has never adopted a policy of making loans on wheat, has it?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; there has not been such a policy adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. So this involves a question of setting up a new policy?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I so understand. It would be a new policy, although we have had in several States loans on corn on warehouse receipts. That does not apply generally. Therefore I hope that my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be adopted. It would mean a great deal to the farmers in the spring-wheat States who are very hard up because of the drought period they have gone through during the past few years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday when the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] offered his amendment dealing with cotton, and at the same time gave notice that if a point of order was raised against it he would move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering the same, I may say that I was opposed to the amendment, and, of course, was opposed to suspending the rules for the purpose indicated.

I opposed a number of measures adopted in 1933 and 1934, among them the Bankhead Cotton Act, which dealt with the agricultural situation. I believed that some of the policies of the Agricultural Department, including the A. A. A., were unsound and would prove injurious to the American people and harmful to agriculture itself. I believed that the plan which called for reduction in the acreage devoted to the production of cotton found no rational support upon which to rest, and that the plowing under of a considerable part of the cotton crop I regarded as wholly without justification, if not indefensible.

The plan pursued by the Department of Agriculture in the killing and destruction of millions of hogs I regarded not only as wholly improper but indefensible. We are experiencing now some of the evil consequences of this wasteful and, as I have indicated, improper policy. It would seem that we have learned nothing from the lessons of the past and are attempting to interfere with sound economic policies. Efforts have been made by various agencies in the Department of Agriculture to stem the tide of progress and to arrest those forces in the economic and business world that would as well as other agencies of the Government, are archaic. tend to lift the country out of the depression and set it upon the high road leading to prosperity. Some of the policies that have been carried out by the Agriculture Department, Many of them have been tried and found wanting in various ages in civilized and semicivilized countries; but the results have been disappointing. The economic development of this country, a development which has been the marvel of the world, is largely due to the refusal of the American people to follow socialists, doctrinaires, faddists, and those who have not understood democracy and the realities and practical things of life. Some have pursued illusory phantoms and unsound policies.

There are those in our country who believe that the will of the legislative branch of the Government is supreme, and that it may enact any measures that it conceives the situation requires; and there are many who regard the executive power as omnipotent, possessing authority to direct Congress and to set at naught the decrees of the Court. This Republic can only be preserved so long as the authority of each of the three branches of the Government is preserved unimpaired.

It would be a fateful day for this Republic if a powerful Federal bureaucracy should control, or if the judicial branch of the Government were denied the authority it enjoys under the Constitution of the United States.

I believe there are agencies and organizations, when efforts have been made to curb their illegal and unconstitutional course, which have been critical of Congress and resentful of the admonitions of the Court constraining them to remain within their field of authority. Not infrequently we hear the statement that courts have no authority to declare acts of Congress, or for that matter of the executive department, unconstitutional. I fear there have been some Americans who do not understand our Constitution and the authority granted therein to the Supreme Court of the United States.

May I say in passing that there have been several thousand enactments by Congress, and as I recall, not exceeding 50 have been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. I might add that the highest courts of many of the States have been called upon to pass upon laws enacted by their respective legislatures, and the decisions of the supreme courts of the various States reveal that many enactments were held invalid because violative of their constitutions.

But to return to the question to which I alluded at the outset: I repeat that many of the plans of the Agricultural Department and the A. A. A. during the past few years have been illusory and unwise, and will lead into paths injurious to groups of persons or branches of industry, and to the country at large.

The cotton policy which was inaugurated under the preceding administration cost the Government several hundred millions of dollars and was without benefit to the cotton industry. In my opinion, the Government of the United States will sustain losses of between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 under the cotton plans which have been formulated and are being carried out by the present Agricultural Department and its branches and agencies. What the ultimate loss to the Government will be, if the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is adopted, it is difficult to state; but unless some miracle happens, I think I am within the bounds of reason when I aver that the loss will be between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. The plan adopted by the Agricultural Department called for a loan of 10 cents a pound on cotton, and which was subsequently raised to 12 cents per pound. My understanding is that last year there was loaned more than $350,000,000 under this plan, only an insignificant part of which has been repaid. Our policy has stimulated foreign production and has resulted in injuries to what are called "croppers", and in no lasting advantage to the producers of cotton. The authority of the Government to extend losses of the character indicated is not considered, and we go forward following ill-considered and unsound policies regardless of constitutional limitations or wise economic policies.

There are those within executive departments who believe in artificial policies and who are trying to build an artificial economic and industrial system. It is inevitable that policies of this character will not only lead into a blind alley but will result in most serious economic consequences.

As I have stated, the prosperity of our country has been the result of the free play of economic forces. The people of America were self-reliant, and they went forth with courage and converted deserts and wildernesses and vast plains into sovereign States, great municipalities, and millions of happy homes. But we have been urged to accept the policy of regimentation and to look to the Federal Government to guide and to direct and control our activities, if not our thoughts, by an army of officials whose banners are found in every part of our broad land. They pry into the business and homes of the people, and attempt, as I have indicated, to regiment them in all of their activities.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to delay the Senate. Congress has been too long in session and its early adjournment will be welcomed by the country, and, I am sure, by Members of the House and Senate. Much legislation has been enacted; indeed too much. Some measures have been wise and will prove valuable and important to the country. Others are tainted with unconstitutionality and have been influenced by emotionalism if not hysterical propaganda; to say nothing of the pressure brought in various forms by pervasive Federal bureaucracy. Too many measures that come before Congress have been originated by executive agencies or by groups and powerful forces not connected with the Government. Too much pressure has been brought by groups and too many measures have been passed as a result of powerful pressure which ought never to have been exerted against the legislative branch of the Government.

I fear it cannot be said that in all things we have acted with that independence that should characterize a great legislative assembly. It is fortunate, indeed, that we have a Federal Constitution that limits the power of the Federal Government; but it is unfortunate, in my opinion, that such powerful efforts are made in various parts of our country to have Congress override States and limit the rights of individuals. It is also unfortunate that forces are at work to weaken, if not undermine, that great citadel and tower of strength indispensable to the preservation of this great Republic—the Supreme Court of the United States.

When a recent decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States I stated, with the utmost sincerity, "Thank God for the Supreme Court of the United States"; and may I say now with equal fervor that efforts to break down the barriers which separate, and should protect, the three branches of the Federal Government should receive no encouragement.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] a moment ago pleaded with eloquence for a courageous and independent Senate. His remarks indicated that he entertained the view that there had been unjustifiable acquiescence in the views and policies shaped by others and which had been affirmatively acted upon by at least this branch of the National Legislature. It is often said that individuals and agencies outside of the legislative branch of the Government have framed too many of the laws passed by Congress and have been too pervasive and persuasive in bringing about the enactment of legislation.

Statements are heard from representatives of Federal agencies, or groups of socialistic elements in our country, that the Federal Government is more and more to assume control over every form of industry and to bring individuals under a system of discipline and regimentation entirely foreign to democratic policies and to our form of government. Undoubtedly some of the so-called "liberal" elements are endeavoring to secure the adoption of their political and economic views which, if carried into effect, would modify, if not destroy, our theory of government. The static condition of society is of course undesirable; ours has never been a stagnant or static society; no more dynamic and progressive forces have been founded in any land than those who laid the foundations of this Republic and guided it for more than 150 years. Many suggested socialistic schemes would tend to enervate, destroy initiative, and to impose regulations which, if I may use the expression, would devitalize and enervate the people.

Mr. President, in view of the assaults which I believe are being made upon our Government, and in view of what I believe to be efforts to divide the people into groups and classes and to foment strife and discontent and enmities, it is important that those who love this Republic, who believe in the principles for which it stands and the great mission to which it has been dedicated, should meet with courage and firmness whatever assaults or hostile movements may be made.

I stated that democracy is a progressive faith; it believes in the individual, in his competency; in his ability to organize society, communities, and States in which the rights of all shall be protected and local self-government, in all that that term implies, shall be enjoyed. As a mighty bird may not fly with two left wings, this great Republic may not conquer the winds and the storms with two left wings. In other words, this Republic possesses all of those physical and moral and spiritual attributes to enable it to live on for ages to come, serving humanity and holding high the principles of liberty and justice.

Our fathers never dreamed that there would be evolved a Federal superstructure which would lay powerful hands illegally upon individuals and sovereign States. I respectfully submit that the Federal Government is too oppressive. It has exercised authority which it did not possess, and is bringing improperly within the sphere of its influence and power not only individuals, but organizations and States. The pity of it is that many of the people are losing sight of our form of government and are attributing to the Federal Government authority which it does not possess. They are willing to abdicate rights which free people must enjoy, and not only consent, but ask national control and supervision over their private affairs and the domestic and internal affairs of individual States.

Mr. President, there must be a recrudescence of democracy—a stronger and more virile spirit of independence upon the part of the people; a determination that neither a powerful centralized government nor a socialized government shall take the place of this Republic.

Mr. President, yesterday, as stated, I offered two amendments, one providing for the R. F. C. to make loans to producers of copper and another also directing the R. F. C. to extend credit to the producers of wool. I hoped that the introduction of these amendments would have some effect upon those who gave notice that they intended to suspend the rules and offer an amendment that would call for loans amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars to the producers of cotton. I hoped that by this time it would have become apparent that the cotton policy was unsound, and that no longer would the Federal Treasury be called upon to pay bounties or to tax the people hundreds of millions of dollars in order to contribute to the cotton industry. I knew there were many sound thinkers, and many of the farmers of the South, who recognized that the course of the Government with respect to cotton had furnished no solution to the problem, and was resulting in consequences, past and present, that were injurious, and in future pointing to disaster. However, it appears that my efforts to arouse Senators to the unwise and dangerous course which had been pursued and was to be continued, have not furnished evidence of success. In view of the facts, and my convictions in regard to the theory and philosophy involved in this program, I shall not move to suspend the rules for the consideration of the two amendments referred to.

STATUS OF EXECUTIVE NOMINATIONS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask to have entered the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That paragraph 6 of rule XXXVIII be suspended and that all nominations now on the Executive Calendar of the Senate, or pending before any of the standing committees of the Senate, shall remain in statu quo until the convening of the regular session of Congress on January 3, 1936, and that the said nominations shall not be affected by the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed order?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I recall a precedent where a resolution of this character was agreed to; but what is the condition at this session which makes imperative the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is expected that some nominations may go over and be undisposed of when we adjourn sine die tonight, as it is contemplated that we shall do.

Mr. McNARY. Then the status of those which are pending will remain the same as at this time?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I expect to have an executive session, but it is my expectation that some nominations may not be acted upon.

Mr. McNARY. Then those that go over will be pending before the committees, and not on the calendar?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be agreed to.

IMPORTATIONS OF WOOD PULP OR PULPWOOD

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask permission to offer a resolution, to which I call the attention of the majority leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 200) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission, under authority conferred by section 332 of the Tariff Act of 1930, is directed to investigate and report to the Senate all facts relating to wood pulp, or pulpwood, showing the volume of importations compared with domestic production, and the conditions, causes, and effects relating to foreign competition, and all other facts showing the differences in, or which affect competition between the production of wood pulp, or pulpwood, in the United States or that imported in the principal markets of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am wondering if the Senator from Idaho has had his attention called to Senate Document No. 115, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. That is the forestry report?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. It is a report entitled:

National Pulp and Paper Requirements in Relation to Forest Conservation.

Mr. BORAH. I have had my attention called to that; but I should like to have the information brought down to the present date, or as nearly so as practicable. I take it that the Tariff Commission will be able to avail itself of much of the information which is there contained, and therefore that the investigation will not be so very expensive.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not had an opportunity of making a thorough investigation, but it is my impression that under the section referred to in the resolution now presented by the Senator from Idaho the Tariff Commission has jurisdiction to collect the information for which the Senator's resolution calls, and I make no objection to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as one of what might be called the cotton Senators, I hope we shall not be asked to go too far on this bill; but I believe wheat ought to be added to the list. I think Senators from the cotton-producing States ought to try to unite the leading commodities of agriculture for all the protection they can get through this distress. I hope the liberal sentiment which has been exhibited by the wheat Senators will be reciprocated by the cotton Senators. I understand that what is proposed is that a fair amount be loaned on wheat, and I hope we shall write it into the bill; but I hope that after this we shall not be compelled to burden the bill down to a point where we will destroy its purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Does not the Senator think apples should also be added?

Mr. LONG. I was hoping we would not load the cart down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. FRAZIER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BULKLEY. Repeating the announcement I made on the last vote with respect to my general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], and vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that there are necessarily detained from the Senate the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 23, as follows:

So Mr. FRAZIER's amendment to the amendment of Mr. BYRNES was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it seems to me that, having taken care of cotton and wheat, we ought to take care of other products of the country as well. I think we should add apples and maple sirup.

In order that the matter may be properly before the Senate, I move to amend by including apples from the West, maple sirup from New England, and onions from my State. We ought to have the benefits distributed. If we are to help the forgotten man in the South and in the wheat lands of the West, the forgotten men in Orange County, N. Y., who raise onions, and the forgotten men in Vermont and other States of New England and in northern New York, where they make maple sugar and maple sirup, and the apple growers of Washington and Oregon, should not be overlooked.

I wonder if Senators have ever been out in a sugar camp to see how the people toil? They struggle through the snows of winter in order that we may have maple sirup, and up in my State we have the biggest onion bed in the world—10,000 acres in one place—and those poor people struggle along often afflicted by frost and by the overflow of the Wallkill River.

Then I think about the suffering people who raise apples in Washington and Oregon, as well as in my State; and this, too, will insure the vote of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who has a large apple orchard, and it will get the vote of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. We ought to make it unanimous.

Mr. President, I think it is a shame to be so sectional in the distribution of the benefits. If we are to be nationally minded, let us think of the whole country. So let us include all these parts and sections which are neglected and where the forgotten men and women live. Let us consider everyone.

Mr. President, having delivered myself of this statement, I withdraw the amendment to the amendment which I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe the Congress is making a mistake. I see no reason why, if we are to go as far as we have indicated we are going, we should not go further and take in others. We will be driven to it.

I voted against the motion to suspend the rule. I did not believe we ought to make the loans contemplated by the amendment which brought about the motion to suspend the rule. But if we are to buy all the cotton, we ought to buy all the wheat, and I voted for the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, although, if it were standing alone, I would vote against it.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the case of the loan on wheat it would not mean the buying of the wheat, because the price of wheat is a little more than the amount of the loan would be at the present time. As I understand, it would mean the buying of the cotton but not at too high a price to the farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there are two agricultural products outstanding in this country beyond and above all others. They are cotton and wheat. I do not believe these loans at this time ought to be made by the Government on either one of them. I do not think we ought to loan on one and not on the other. However, I think it would be a mistake to loan on both of them at this time and in the amounts named. I think we should vote down the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. If we vote for these loans why not accept the motion which I submitted the other day for copper and for wool, and take in products all along down the line?

Mr. NORRIS. In principle there is no difference between them. I do not intend to weary the Senate at this hour with an argument which perhaps is useless to make, even were I able to make a convincing argument. It does seem to me that in both instances under consideration we are committing an error. For that reason I voted against the motion to suspend the rule, and I am now going to vote against the amendment as amended.

I have finished what I wish to say, and I shall yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating or marketing securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITIES HOLDING COMPANIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEELER submitted the conference report on Senate bill 2796, the public-utilities holding company bill, which is printed in full in the House proceedings of today's RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on Senate bill 2796.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words before action is taken.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a unanimous consent request?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has the floor. I cannot keep him off the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the conference report be taken up for consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that, but I do object to the Chair having the conference report agreed to without permitting Senators to speak on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is now before the Senate and any Senators desiring to speak on it may do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I cheerfully yield to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] if he desires to speak on the question. Let him discuss it first.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no desire to do so. Proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say just a few words about this matter. This question, as everyone knows, has been controverted very bitterly. I have followed the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in his work, and I think he has done a wonderful work. I never have known, in my public experience, a bill as complicated as the one under consideration, where there was as much patience and ability and ingenuity and courage exhibited as has been exhibited by the Senator from Montana ever since this bill went to conference, and indeed when it was before the Senate for consideration and passage.

I am going to vote for the conference report. I believe that I do not disagree with the Senator from Montana on anything which ought to be in it. I am firmly of the belief, however, that this is a conference report which the Senator from Montana was induced to sign because he realized he could not get anything better. I am confident that he is not satisfied with it, and I also realize that in conference reports there must always be a compromise. I think I will go as far as any other Senator along that line. However, from my point of view, there are some things which ought not to be compromised, and one of those things which I am not willing to compromise on is to extend the life and privileges and legal existence of holding companies beyond the first degree. There are not many holding companies, even in the first degree, which ought to exist, but I concede that in some instances at least there is a reason for the existence of holding companies in the first degree. However, I have many times on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere challenged any man to cite an instance where the existence of a holding company beyond the first degree was justified, or where such a holding company performed a public service which, at least in my judgment, could not be performed as well or better were it not in existence.

The utility-holding companies bill has trod a very weary and wearisome road.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire the Senator to state just what the conference report does with reference to holding companies. I have not been able to satisfy myself on that score.

Mr. NORRIS. I expect to do as well as I can along that line before I shall have finished. I realize that not in recent years at least has a bill gone to conference where there has been the bitterness exhibited which has been exhibited in this conference which has gone on all these weary days. I think the Senator from Montana and his conferees were right in the attitude they took. I have no sympathy whatever with the idea that we should by law permit holding companies to continue their robbery and their thievery of the American investors in securities and the American consumers of electricity. Such companies are parasites. I welcome the definition which was given to section 11 when it was said it was a death sentence to holding companies. It ought to be. In my opinion, we cannot regulate holding companies. There is not any useful service for them to perform. There is not any excuse for their existence. I should rather see this bill fail than to legalize the existence of holding companies beyond the first degree. I would welcome making of that an issue, one which should be decided by the people in the next campaign.

There is some very cumbersome language in the report, as is often found in conference reports.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the Senator is somewhat in error in his statement to the effect that the conference report legalizes holding companies in the second degree. It provides that holding companies shall not be permitted beyond the second degree; and it gives the Commission power, if they are not necessary beyond the first degree, to prohibit them. The Commission must find that they must be subject to local regulation and local authority in order that they may be permitted to exist.

If the Senator will recall, the amendment was first offered in the Senate by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to permit holding companies in the second degree. I accepted it as modified to the first degree. In conference, which has lasted over a month, we finally accepted an amendment which permits holding companies not beyond the second degree under certain terms and conditions, providing that the Commission must find a necessity for their existence in the second degree.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember, when the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho was before the Senate, that I spoke on it very briefly. I think it was a suggestion which I made, though I may be wrong, that induced the Senator from Idaho to change the amendment and make it apply to everything beyond the first degree. I ask the Senator from Idaho if I am correct about that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offered the amendment to apply to anything beyond the second degree, and then at the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, and with the approval of the Senator from Montana, I limited it to the first degree.

Mr. NORRIS. That is my understanding of what happened. The Senator from Idaho made the change so it applied to first degree holding companies.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that it does not go so far as to permit them in the second degree because of the limitation that the Commission must find that they are necessary before they may be permitted.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the language which I think allows holding companies to exist in the second degree:

> In carrying out the provisions of this paragraph the Commission shall require each registered holding company (and any company in the same holding-company system with such holding company) to take such action as the Commission shall find necessary in order that such holding company shall cease to be a holding company with respect to each of its subsidiary companies which itself has a subsidiary company which is a holding company.

That language, to a man who has as weak a mind as I have, is a little bit cumbersome and difficult to understand. But I have studied it as best I could, and I have concluded that it means that a holding company in the second degree is recognized as lawful under the conditions laid down here.

I admit that what will happen will depend a great deal upon the Commission. I have a great deal of confidence in the Commission as it now exists. A recent appointment to it has improved it, in my judgment. I refer to the appointment of Mr. J. D. Ross, of Seattle. I am not finding fault with the Commission. I think it is going to be an excellent body of men and that it will do what it believes to be right. The Commission may exist 6 months or may exist a year; it will be changed as time goes on, but the law, unless it shall be repealed or modified, which is probably doubtful, will remain the same. So we must inevitably come to the conclusion, it seems to me, that the law which we are about to put upon the statute books recognizes, under the conditions set out in the conference report, the lawful existence of a holding company in the second degree. There is no excuse under our civilization for such a condition to exist any more than for a wagon to have five wheels. Why we should be so tender as to defend a system which has ruined millions of investors and has bled white other millions of consumers is more than I can understand.

Mr. President, I wanted to say this much to give my idea of what we are about to adopt, although probably under the circumstances it is the very best we can get. If it were submitted to me for decision, I should rather take nothing than to take this. But, realizing the honesty and the courage of the Senator from Montana and those with him who have made this fight, I feel, under the circumstances, like going along with them in the approval of the conference report.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article on the Holding Company Menace, written by Kenneth G. Harlan, Washington, an eminent engineer and an outstanding authority in the electric world.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOLDING-COMPANY MENACE

[By Kenneth G. Harlan, Public Utility Expert, Tacoma, Wash.]

PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING ACT—1935 (S. 1725)

In reply to the thousands of holding-company advertisements, appearing recently in metropolitan newspapers throughout the country; to the memorandum prepared by Mr. David Friday on The Economic Effects of Holding Company Dissolution, and to the brief submitted by the Engineers Public Service Co. upon the same subject, attention should be directed to certain salient features in connection with these writings which are either misstated or entirely ignored.

The arguments presented by Mr. Friday, at first glance are impressive, but when properly analyzed have little to commend them. A most careful search through his manuscript fails to reveal any real basis for the conclusions reached, and the closer one examines his work the more obvious it becomes that it contains the same insiduous propaganda that the power interests, for years past, have resorted to, just another bold attempt to gloss over the real facts through ingeniously devised arguments prepared by clever and highly paid experts. I think it was Macaulay, who once said:

"If anything could be gained by disputing the law of gravitation, able men could be found to write articles against the truth of that law."

STRONG INDICTMENT OF HOLDING COMPANIES

The Engineers Public Service brief issued February 28, 1935, is another typical example of subtle strategy. It, too, when carefully examined, precludes serious consideration. Arguments are based upon an erroneous premise; therefore, the conclusions reached obviously are fallacious. As a matter of fact, upon careful examination it actually in itself is a strong indictment of the holding company set-up. First, it tacitly admits the 19 abuses set forth in the Federal Trade Commission Report (ch. 14, dated Jan. 28, 1935), then weakly endeavors through ambiguous and evasive arguments to convey the idea that the vices which the Commission objects to become real virtues when committed by Stone & Webster, or its affiliates.

ANCHORED TO CUSTOM INSTEAD OF RIGHTOUSNESS

On page 17, second paragraph, the brief states:

"These preferred stocks were issued in full conformity with accepted customs of the times and in compliance with the spirit of existing laws."

This statement implies that if to do wrong was customary, then it must have been right, and by the same token past wrongs under the circumstances should now be validated.

No one will deny that the "accepted customs of the times" was for public utilities to float huge sums of securities against inflated and fictitious values that never existed except in the minds of avaricious speculators and profiteers. Indeed, such practice was part and parcel of that era of "plunder and prosperity" that preceded 1930. But it was that era which led this country to the verge of ruin, and certainly today, in the readjustment of the Nation's economic structure, no one could seriously contend that fiction, over-capitalization, and high finance deserve the least consideration.

INVESTORS' LOSSES INEVITABLE

Again, on page 17, the third paragraph states:

"Such a forced dismemberment of the company would cause a substantial loss to innocent investors in the preferred and common stocks of the engineering company, inimical to the national interest."

The fear anticipated obviously is well founded, but regardless of what legislation is passed these deflated securities which originally were issued against "'air and water' will never again receive the breath of life." The loss of these investments to citizens of this country is lamentable, but what divine right has the power industry to expect the Government to help them validate these worthless securities? The industry itself, foisted them upon an innocent public, and today their position in this respect is indefensible. Would not the impoverished investors in every other industrial line, that were completely "washed out" in 1929, be entitled to the same degree of protection? Can it be successfully argued that on the one hand investment in private utility stocks should be protected by the Government, while, on the other hand, no attention given to the billions of dollars of public investment in other industrial lines that have been wiped out forever?

RATE PAYERS REAL VICTIMS

Reprehensible as it is that widows, orphans, and countless thousands of people will be forced to bear tremendous losses, sight should not be lost of the "rate payers" who are the real victims, and who outnumber utility investors probably a hundred to one. How about them? Should they be forced to stand a continued burden of excessive rates? And is not their welfare a foremost consideration, particularly when it is clear that in no event will the investors' losses ever be recouped without imposing additional unjust burdens on utility consumers?

EVILS SHOULD NOT BE PERPETUATED

To permit the continuation of holding company abuses is to prolong the undue burden of overcapitalization and high rates that have been imposed upon the general public. "The sins of the fathers should not be visited upon their children," and the time has come for a reckoning and readjustment in this particular industry. I say "particular industry" because the power business differs from the ordinary type of private business. It is by nature a monopoly, and therefore, by nature it is a public business. Because it is a monopoly, the abuses and evils that became deeply rooted within it have been manifold and extend far beyond what could ever be experienced in the ordinary type of "private business", which to the contrary is not a natural monopoly, and where economic and competitive laws protect the public's welfare.

DAVID FRIDAY'S MEMORANDUM

Adverting again to the memorandum prepared by David Friday, arguments are propounded to justify the holding company's high place in the power industry. Mr. Friday attributes the downward trend in the cost of electricity to "holding company domination."

On page 21, in referring to commodity price trends, the memorandum said:

"But one thing did not rise, as against pre-war, and that was the rate charged the consumer for electricity, especially in the domestic field. The average rate paid for electricity for household use during the years 1910 to 1914, which are usually taken today in discussion of price 'parity', was 9 cents per kilowatt-hour. The highest level which it had reached during the war years was 8.27 cents. In 1922 it was 7.38 cents." (In 1929 it was 6.33 cents and in 1934, 5.29 cents per kilowatt-hour.)

Mr. Friday then says: "Growth in demand stimulated and financed by holding companies ignores fundamental cause of price trends."

Now Mr. Friday completely ignores the fundamental cause of price trends in the electrical industry. It is true that for 30 years there has been a progressive downward trend in the average rate paid for electricity, and that at times during the same period other commodities fluctuated considerably, and in certain instances materially advanced, but to attribute the cause of downward trends to the holding company's influence is, indeed, a severe stretch of the imagination. To any student of the electrical industry the cause is obvious; 30 years ago the only outlet an electrical plant had for its product was a few incandescent lights and a limited use of electrical motors. Scientific development in this particular field ensued, and as modern electrical devices came into use, a greater demand was made upon the power plant for its product. This naturally was accompanied by increased earnings. The wider the diversity of use, and the greater the advancement of the art became, the more pronounced was the downward trend in the cost of electricity.

ELECTRIC AGE

We entered what was known as the "electric age." Homes became modernized, freely using electricity for cooking, water heating, refrigeration, air conditioning, and a wide variety of domestic appliances.

As the use per customer grew, naturally the rates for energy decreased. For instance, in 1920 the average annual use per residential customer was less than 300 kilowatt-hours; in 1927, 480 kilowatt-hours; in 1932, 601 kilowatt-hours; and in 1934, 630 kilowatt-hours. Corresponding cost of electricity for the same periods was, in 1920, over 8.75 cents per kilowatt-hour; in 1927, 7.2 cents per kilowatt-hour; in 1932, 5.7 cents per kilowatt-hour; and in 1934, 5.3 cents per kilowatt-hour. Thus it is seen that the real cause for a downward trend in the cost of electricity has been directly attributable to wider use of the product rather than to any virtue of the holding company. It is simply a matter of increased volume, at an unusually progressive rate, and today this has far from reached maximum proportions. Unquestionably the future will bring even greater volume and with wider diversity of use will correspondingly affect the price of electricity and further downward trend without question will be experienced.

HOUSEHOLD INVESTMENT IN ELECTRICAL APPARATUS BEARS IMPORTANT RELATION TO "VALUE OF SERVICE"

Upon page 27, Mr. Friday, commenting upon shrunken purchasing power said:

"The reduction in personal incomes has been so great that the people were compelled to make a reexamination of the importance or worth to them, of the various commodities and service which they had been in the habit of buying. With a drastic shrinking in income, it became necessary to drop something out of the scale of living. This compelled buyers to choose between the various things they had been in the habit of purchasing, and to admit those which were worth less to them, as compared to the price they must pay. * * * This process of choice which we are all compelled to make because of the scarcity of income or purchasing power is the very essence of economic valuation, and the very heart of the problem of economic conduct. * * *"

Mr. Friday then goes on to state:

"When submitted to this test the conclusion as to the value of electric service is that it is very high as evidenced by the economic conduct of domestic consumers. Throughout the period they have increased their consumption of electricity for domestic use at the same time that they were curtailing their purchases of other goods."

We agree with Mr. Friday that the "value of electric service" is very highly regarded by the general public, but we cannot agree that the "process of choice" which the people were compelled to make was actuated by the reason stated. We believe it obvious that the public's choice to use electricity more freely than other commodities during said depression has been because of the comparatively large investment that the average home has in electrical appliances and modern devices. This investment alone would tend to induce the individual to curtail on other commodities before attempting to reduce this particular service.

TAXES

From the figures on pages 29 and 30, Mr. Friday draws some very interesting conclusions regarding taxes. He refers to the $245,000,000 that was paid in 1934 by privately owned electric utilities, and his compilations show that this tax amounted to 14.3 percent of the total annual revenue. These compilations and conclusions do not, however, convey any information as to the rate of tax which was paid by these utilities, based upon the total valuation he sets forth in other parts of his memorandum (p. 7).

Such information is presented in the following table, and in light of statements contained in the various documents presented by the utility companies upon this subject, it should be interesting:

Total tax payments by privately owned electric utilities, 1902–34

Year	Total taxes	Investment in plant	Mills
1902	$2,654,885	$483,000,000	5.5 (70 mills on $37,926,930).
1907	6,345,796	1,054,000,000
1912	13,117,198	2,098,000,000
1917	29,897,106	2,993,000,000	10.2 (70 mills on $437,101,700).
1922	73,128,440	4,229,000,000
1927	150,253,376	8,880,000,000
1932	203,853,468	12,125,000,000	16.8 (70 mills on $2,912,263).
1934	245,000,000	----------

NOTE.—Taxes for years 1902 to 1932, inclusive, taken from U. S. Census reports. Taxes for 1934 compiled by Edison Electric Institute.

Thus it is seen that in 1902, according to Mr. Friday's figures, the power industry paid, or rather collected, a total tax equivalent to 5½ mills on the total investment claimed; in 1917, 10.2 mills; in 1932, 16.8 mills. Stating it differently, if in the year 1932 the companies had paid upon a 70-mill basis (approximate millage then in effect in the State of Washington and various other States), such would have represented a tax basis of $2,912,000,000 (based on 50 percent of total value of $5,834,000,000) instead of $12,125,000,000 as shown; in 1917, $427,101,700 (total value, $854,202,400) instead of $2,933,000,000; and in 1902, $37,900,000 (total value, $75,800,000) instead of $483,000,000.

Again, if the total value claimed ($12,125,000,000) was used for taxation purposes at a 50-percent ratio and a 70-mill rate applied in 1932, the taxes would amount to $424,340,000, instead of $245,000,000, which the companies claim to have paid. These figures included large portions of income tax, franchise fees, and miscellaneous taxes, which, if deducted for the purpose of placing the tax upon a comparable basis, would reduce the $245,000,000 by at least $100,000,000. Consequently, a wide disparity is strikingly apparent.

TAX VALUE VERSUS RATE-MAKING VALUE

In reviewing the tax situation as such pertain to electric utilities, one is impressed by the comparatively small amount of taxes that these utilities have actually paid compared with other lines of enterprise. It emphasizes the wide disparity between tax value and "rate making" value (the latter usually closely follows the "book investment" figures).

TAX ON PUBLICLY OWNED UTILITIES

Another tax angle worthy of mention is the company's claim that in paying these taxes they are placed at a decided disadvantage with publicly owned utilities. As a matter of fact, records clearly show that as a whole the publicly owned electric utilities pay a tax equal to and in many cases more than that paid by private utility companies. It is true this tax is not paid upon the same basis. As a rule, it is in the form of an assessment against gross earnings. For instance, the city of Tacoma pays 7½ percent of its gross revenue into a general fund in lieu of taxes. In other words, out of every $100 paid by a customer for electricity during the year $7.50 is used by the city to help pay the taxes of this individual. When compared with the taxes paid by private utilities in the State of Washington, it is found that the 7½-percent gross revenue tax paid by the city of Tacoma is a little more than equivalent to the total taxes paid by the private power companies to the State and political subdivisions on "power and light" property.

TAX-FREE CITIES

Probably everyone is familiar with the scores of towns and cities throughout this country that raise the total amount of administrative expense through competitive electric rates, thereby precluding the necessity of raising any funds whatsoever through direct taxation.

HOLDING COMPANY FINANCIAL DILEMMA

On page 38, Mr. Friday, in attempting to justify the holding company and the problems of finance, states:

"Beside the technical problems of the immediate future, the electrical industry is faced with the same difficult problems of finance which made the holding companies indispensable in the past."

He then refers to the rapid increase in the use of electricity and forecasts that by 1940 the country will be producing at least 40 percent more kilowatt-hours than in the year 1929. It is difficult to follow Mr. Friday's reasoning in trying to justify the holding company upon the grounds of financing, that is, if one is to apply the measures of sound economics. We admit it is true that through the process of pyramiding and the device of interlocking companies, inflation and overcapitalization are much easier than if each operating company was forced to stand upon its own feet. Through such involution of manipulation and the scrambling together of operation companies it is indeed difficult to tie any one particular operating company to a solid "bench mark" and for the same reason it is extremely difficult for those who buy securities to trace their worth back to specific values or tangible assets.

PUBLIC BECOMING EDUCATED

Naturally we are impressed with Mr. Friday's reasoning, i. e., that it will be more difficult to sell securities in the same manner that they have been sold in the past, for we have grave doubt if the same degree of ignorance on the part of the public will, in the future, permit the abuses that flourished in the past.

Moreover, the problem of financing the future development of the electric industry which the private companies apparently view with so much alarm would present no problem at all, if in the past these companies had practiced sound business principles—if, as in other lines of business, the private utilities had set aside actual depreciation reserves to protect the integrity of their investments instead of paying unwarranted dividends, they would not now be facing these financial problems. But again, this is the misfortune of the company and the holders of its securities, and not an element which should be passed on to the consuming public in the forms of higher rates.

PUBLIC FURNISHES CAPITAL

Through the subtle process of holding companies the local operating company has constantly been "milked dry", and too frequently where renewals and replacements are necessary the utilities go again to the public for more money through the sales of securities because they have failed to set aside adequate funds to keep the "dollar whole" in business.

HOLDING COMPANIES POSITION INDEFENSIBLE

Inevitably the day has arrived when the power and light industry of this country essentially must undergo a complete reorganization. This industry has built a financial card house with a deck that was stacked against the public from the start. A continuation of "high financing" through the immoral practices of the holding companies would be indefensible and improvident, and inimical to the public good.

SUBTLE PROPAGANDA

When these utility corporations buy costly newspaper space and other forms of subtle propaganda in an effort to induce help from their security holders, upon the pretense that deep concern is felt for them, they place themselves in a poor light before the public, for the course they pursue is typical of the methods they previously employed when these worthless securities were foisted upon utility patrons and innocent buyers.

Does anyone think for a moment that this apparent concern for investors is actuated through a desire to recoup the losses of these poor people? It seems hardly reasonable that these big corporations who so shamefully exploited their patrons and the general public, should now manifest so much sympathy and show such a magnanimous spirit.

STATE REGULATION IMPOTENT

Most interesting are the statements that State regulation has in the past fully protected the public's interest; that today it amply guarantees the public against evil practice, and because of past regulation the State now has a moral obligation, so to speak, to protect the securities that have been issued and sold regardless of their propriety and worth. Those conversant with State regulation know full well that regulatory bodies have never assumed jurisdiction over the financial structure of the utility property or the methods that utility corporations have followed in financing their business. Each time in the past when such was attempted, the courts have held that it extended beyond the jurisdiction of State regulatory bodies, i. e.:

Missouri, ex rel. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. case (262 U. S. 276, 67 L. Ed. 981, 43 Sup. Ct. 544, 31 A. L. R. 807). The court said that State regulatory body, while it could regulate with a view to enforcing reasonable rates, etc.:

"It is not the owner of the property of public-utility companies and is not clothed with general power of management incident to ownership."

As a further limitation of power the court quoted with approval from the Springfield G. & Electric Co. case (291 Ill. 209, 234, 125 M. E. 891):

"The Commission is not the financial manager of the corporation and is not empowered to substitute its judgment for that of the directors of the corporation; nor can it ignore items charged by the utility as operating expenses, unless there is an abuse of discretion in that regard by the corporate officers."

Not only is the regulatory body "not clothed with general power of management incident to ownership" and "not empowered to substitute its judgment for that of the directors of the corporation" as to matters of operation, but it has been unsuccessful in its attempts to supervise or regulate the sale of public-utility securities. In face of these facts, it is absurd for the companies to now argue or imply that because of past State regulation there is a moral obligation upon the part of the State or Nation to validate the watered stock and phantom dollars that underlie their financial structure.

ROOT ROT

These utility companies come not before the Nation at this time with clean hands, and in resisting the removal of the "root rot" embedded deeply in their financial tree and in fighting the reorganization through which the industry must inevitably go, they not only lack vision, but are futile attempting to block the tide of public indignation and inevitable "show-down." The evil must be removed and the new tree must bear fruit free from the effects of parasites that have diseased its roots.

Attached hereto is one of the advertisements referred to. It has appeared in numerous metropolitan newspapers and is similarly designed to appeal to security holders. It complains of the fact that although by July 1932 the depression had touched bottom and dragged securities down to a low level, most industrial stocks have since risen more than 100 percent, but that utility stocks were, in March 1935, 25 percent lower than at the depth of the depression in 1932. The argument is advanced that the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, passed in 1933, was responsible for the downfall. The companies deplore the excessive burden of taxation, and the rates that have been forced down through competition. They hold that the Wheeler-Rayburn bill will complete the ruin of the utility investors, because it will wipe out practically all utility-holding companies. And lastly they insert a letter purported to have been written by some elderly couple, pathetically imploring the company to help them.

T. V. A. NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR SORRY PLIGHT OF HOLDING COMPANY

In the first place the holding company need not lay its sorry plight upon the doorstep of the Tennessee Valley development. The malady from which it is suffering is a chronic disease, organic from its inception. The disease promised to be fatal only after the Federal Trade Commission and others active in the public interest had exposed the machinations of this distorted mechanism of "high finance." The light of truth acting as an X-ray revealed to the public the disease which by its sordid nature was inevitably destined to destroy the "holding company."

The "excessive burden of taxation" referred to is a stereotyped argument so greatly overworked that long since has it ceased to be convincing. The obviously inspired letter from the elderly couple is only one of thousands that people have been induced to write. Notably, the paragraphs are carefully couched in language to fit the occasion, but only the most stupid could fail to peer beyond the thin veil of deception relied upon to gloss over the real facts.

SECURITY HOLDERS VICTIMS OF VICIOUS ECONOMIC SYSTEM

These security holders are already facing losses which inevitably are beyond the power of this Government to prevent. They are the victims of a distorted and vicious economic system which took its grim toll, before the Nation was conscious of what had happened. A desperate appeal for support is now being made to the very people who were so shamefully looted, and despite the utter hopelessness of their situation, many a good person is being influenced by the clever and subtle propaganda now being widely disseminated throughout this country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to say a very brief word in respect to the conference report on the public-utilities bill which so recently and so speedily was adopted by the Senate.

I should gladly support legislation providing the most rigid regulation of holding companies engaged in interstate commerce. I should vote for legislation which would make unlawful hereafter the creation of such companies beyond the first degree.

I declined to sign the conference report on the holding-company bill just adopted because I believed the agreement there recorded presented to the Senate a bill economically and industrially deflationary and destructive; that it invades property rights; that it seeks improperly to delegate congressional responsibility and authority; that it lays down no definite standards to guide and control the regulatory body to which such far-flung authority is sought to be given; that it perverts the purpose of the commerce clause of our Constitution; that it is in derogation of the rights of States; and that it otherwise disregards constitutional inhibitions.

For all these reasons, I declined to sign the conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL REGULATION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report on the alcohol-control bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt to make a suggestion? The element of time is of great importance if we wish to get away. The consideration of the deficiency bill has not as yet been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Georgia defer his request for the purpose of completing the deficiency bill, if it does not take too much time?

Mr. GEORGE. I defer my request for that purpose.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to make another appeal to the Senator in charge of the bill relative to the Bureau of Navigation. He assures me that I did not tell the whole story earlier in the day.

I am getting quite accustomed to that charge. I heard it yesterday a number of times; but the Senator from Colorado says that the material presented to the committee relative to the amendment on page 11 was not in accordance with the typewritten statement which was given me by the Commerce Department this morning.

That being the case, I can quite understand how the Senator from Colorado was not sympathetic earlier in the session to the suggestion I made regarding this amendment; but the difference between us lies in the fact that in one case it was represented to the committee that furloughs were necessary, and in the material I have the statement is made that employees would be dismissed.

I am not particularly interested in which is the case. If there is a lack of service in the protection of life at sea by reason of the failure of inspection of vessels, it does not make much difference to me whether it is the technical arrangement regarding furloughs or whether it is a question of more employees. The facts remain—and those facts are not in dispute—that the President of the United States has recommended the addition of $76,000 to this appropriation, and that the Director of the Bureau of the Budget has approved that amount.

I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not permit me to amend this proposal of the committee, and make the amount $126,000, instead of $50,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to put in the RECORD very briefly the difference in facts.

The statement which was apparently furnished the Senator from New York, upon which he based his request, stated that this amount is necessary to meet a deficit in this Bureau to take care of the existing personnel, and that if this amount should not be appropriated the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection Service would be forced to discharge a number of employees to meet the deficit.

The facts are these: The appropriation made for the fiscal year beginning less than 8 weeks ago for this service was $1,598,000; and yet in 8 weeks we are told by the statement of the Department of Commerce that there is a deficit. If they have consumed that amount, and need over $100,000 more, they are quite helpless.

The request which came to us from the Director of the Budget was for additional employees and to relieve from the furlough situation. This bill is a deficiency bill. It is not an annual appropriation bill. Congress will meet on the 3d of January 1936. There are adequate and ample funds to take care of this Bureau and this Department up until that time. It simply has become the habit—and I think the Senator from New York knows it—of every bureau and every department to think up, every time there is a deficiency bill, how many applications they can make for appropriations, and if the matter is of a sympathetic type, the applications come in.

Here is a proposed appropriation which is not needed at the present time. Therefore, it seems to me that the Senator from New York ought not to ask for it. I do not think the Bureau of the Budget understood the situation, and I do not believe a sufficient showing has been made to justify the committee in receding from its position.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am a member of the Appropriations Committee; but unfortunately, by reason of the ship-subsidy situation, I did not attend the meeting of the committee when this matter was considered. Therefore, I did not know all the things which have been told me since by the Senator in private conversation here upon the floor. I feel that my strictures earlier in the day were not quite in order, and I am sorry about that. I ask the Senator to forgive me for that part of my speech.

Mr. ADAMS. I may say to the Senator that he does not need to ask that. My only concern was for the members of the committee whom I am representing.

Mr. COPELAND. The sentiment I expressed to the Senator personally I extend to all the members of the committee. Having said that, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this fact—and forgive me for speaking about it again:

We have had working for several months a committee of investigation suggested by my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] under an arrangement made by the Senate for an official investigation of the Morro Castle and Mohawk disasters, with a view to determining the causes, if any, which may be removed by legislative action to make travel at sea safer than it is at the present time; and in connection with that work the committee invited a group of technical experts, naval architects and other persons, to serve with us.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me at this point to put in three dates? There was a discussion of these disasters, and I desire to put in the dates, to show their relevancy. I have checked them up.

I find that the Morro Castle disaster was on September 8, 1934, practically a year ago; the Habana disaster, January 6, 1935; the Mohawk disaster, January 24, 1935; all before the passage of the annual appropriation bill which covered this service. I am merely saying that so that the Senator will understand that the subject is not something new, or something which the committee has disregarded.

Mr. COPELAND. I appreciate that; but there is another matter of which I have not spoken to the Senate, and I wish to speak of it now.

There passed the House yesterday a bill seeking to reorganize the Steamboat Inspection Service. The bill is upon the table; and before we adjourn, if I have an opportunity, I hope to be able to pass it through the Senate. There can be no doubt that the inspection service of ships upon the sea and upon the Great Lakes is inadequate; and this bill, which has passed the House and which is now before us with the recommendation of the Commerce Committee, seeks to reorganize the service and make it a more efficient and more effective service. Of course, what I am now saying was not known to the subcommittee on the deficiency appropriation bill.

It is necessary, in my opinion, to have this amount of money to carry us through until the first of next year, when our technical committee will be prepared to recommend a more suitable and proper inspection service. Having made my apologies to the Senator from Colorado—and he did not need those, because our intimacy is such that we do not need to have any apologies—having stated the matter as I have, and attempted to impress upon the Senate the real necessity of tightening up our rules and regulations in the inspection of vessels, and furthermore to improve that work, it is necessary to have more personnel.

Therefore I beg of the Senator that he will permit this item to be increased.

I think I saw the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] on his feet. No man here is better informed on the subject of the merchant marine than is he, and I am sure that his feeling is the same as mine. We have had a very active committee, and one which has worked faithfully, regardless of what may be the personal feeling of those in charge of the Bureau of Navigation, and so far as I am personally concerned, I should be quite unwilling to fail to urge every possible argument why this service should be taken care of. Have I said anything which impresses the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am impressed, but the Senator does not want the committee to take a bill to conference and endeavor to support something which it thinks is not necessary. I therefore must maintain the objection.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is for the Senate to decide. It is not my responsibility alone if disasters like the sinking of the Morro Castle and the sinking of the Mohawk, not to mention many others, should occur. If at sea disasters occur which can be traced to the failure to provide that efficient, alert, and perfect inspection which is necessary, it is the responsibility of all Senators, it is the responsibility of the Congress—it is not alone my responsibility, and I do not intend to carry any more of that responsibility than I have to.

I have been criticized about this matter. All through my campaign last year there were certain great metropolitan newspapers in New York which criticized me daily in the news columns and in their editorial columns because of my failure to do my duty in regard to providing for safety at sea. That will be the charge brought against every Senator here, and if for the small sum of $76,000 we can make our ships safer and make safety more certain upon the seas, certainly it is our duty to expend money.

Mr. President, there is a particular reason why we should adopt this amendment. The inspectors collect in fines inflicted on the owners of speed boats and other craft which violate the rules of our Department of Commerce tens of thousands of dollars in excess of what we are asking for here. As a matter of fact, this whole Department is self-sustaining.

Therefore, in order that the responsibility may rest upon the Senate itself, I am about to move a reconsideration of the action of the Senate by which it adopted the amendment on page 11 of the bill relating to the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection. I am offering the motion in order that I may ask, if it succeeds, that the sum be changed from $50,000 to $126,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York moves that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 11 of the bill was agreed to be reconsidered.

The motion was rejected.

FEDERAL REGULATION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8870) to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages; to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto; to enforce the twenty-first amendment, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 76, 77, 78, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 87½, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 100, 101, 102, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 129, 131, 134, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 145, 148, 149, 152, 154, 155, 156, and 157.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 26, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 49, 55, 57, 73, 75, 93, 104, 111, 121, 133, 135, 137, 143, 144, and 147; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) The Administrator shall make a report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, of the administration of the functions with which he is charged, and shall include in such report the names and compensation of all persons employed by the Administration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "the date upon which the Administrator first appointed under this Act takes office"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "the date upon which the Administrator first appointed under this Act takes office"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment; and on page 22 of the House bill, after line 23, insert the following:

"In the case of malt beverages, the provisions of subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) shall apply to transactions between a retailer or trade buyer in any State and a brewer, importer, or wholesaler of malt beverages outside such State only to the extent that the law of such State imposes similar requirements with respect to similar transactions between a retailer or trade buyer in such State and a brewer, importer, or wholesaler of malt beverages in such State, as the case may be. In the case of malt beverages, the provisions of subsections (e) and (f) shall apply to the labeling of malt beverages sold or shipped or delivered for shipment or otherwise introduced into or received in any State from any place outside thereof, or the advertising of malt beverages intended to be sold or shipped or delivered for shipment or otherwise introduced into or received in any State from any place outside thereof, only to the extent that the law of such State imposes similar requirements with respect to the labeling or advertising, as the case may be, of malt beverages not sold or shipped or delivered for shipment or otherwise introduced into or received in such State from any place outside thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "as will require an accurate statement, in the case of distilled spirits (other than cordials, liqueurs, and specialties) produced by blending or rectification, if neutral spirits have been used in the production thereof, informing the consumer of the percentage of neutral spirits so used and of the name of the commodity from which such neutral spirits have been distilled, or in case of neutral spirits or of gin produced by a process of continuous distillation, the name of the commodity from which distilled; (4)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein nor any decision, ruling, or regulation of any Department of the Government shall deny the right of any person to use any trade name or brand of foreign origin not presently effectively registered in the United States Patent Office which has been used by such person or predecessors in the United States for a period of at least five years last past, if the use of such name or brand is qualified by the name of the locality in the United States in which the product is produced, and, in the case of the use of such name or brand of any label or in any advertisement, if such qualification is as conspicuous as such name or brand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert, "The prohibitions of this subsection and regulations thereunder shall not apply to the publisher of any newspaper, periodical, or other publication, or radio broadcaster, unless such publisher or radio broadcaster is engaged in business as a distiller, brewer, rectifier, or other producer, or as an importer or wholesaler, of distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, or as a bottler, or warehouseman and bottler, of distilled spirits, directly or indirectly or through an affiliate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the fifth line of said amendment strike out "Commission" and insert "Administrator"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DISPOSAL OF FORFEITED ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

"SEC. 9. (a) All distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages forfeited, summarily or by order of court, under any law of the United States, shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury to be disposed of as hereinafter provided.

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall dispose of all distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages which have been delivered to him pursuant to subsection (a)—

"(1) By delivery to such Government agencies as, in his opinion, have a need for such distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages for medicinal, scientific, or mechanical purposes; or

"(2) By gift to such eleemosynary institutions as, in his opinion, have a need for such distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages for medicinal purposes; or

"(3) By destruction.

"(c) No distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages which have been seized under any law of the United States, may be disposed of in any manner whatsoever except after forfeiture and as provided in this section.

"(d) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 11. Section 610 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1310), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'The provisions of the internal-revenue laws applicable to natural wine shall apply in the same manner and to the same extent to citrus-fruit wines which are the product of normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound ripe citrus fruit (except lemons and limes), with or without the addition of dry cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per centum of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) for the purpose of perfecting the product according to standards, but without the addition or abstraction of other substances, except as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying or aging.'

"SEC. 12. Section 612 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1301), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 612. That under such regulations and official supervision and upon the giving of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, any producer of wines defined under the provisions of this title may withdraw from any fruit distillery or special bonded warehouse grape brandy, or wine spirits, for the fortification of such wines on the premises where actually made, and any producer of citrus-fruit wines may similarly withdraw citrus-fruit brandy for the fortification of citrus-fruit wines on the premises where actually made: Provided, That there shall be levied and assessed against the producer of such wines or citrus-fruit wines a tax (in lieu of the internal-revenue tax now imposed thereon by law) of 20 cents per proof gallon of grape brandy, citrus-fruit brandy, or wine spirit whenever withdrawn and hereafter so used by him in the fortification of such wines or citrus-fruit wines during the preceding month, which assessment shall be paid by him within 10 months from the date of notice thereof: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as exempting any wines, citrus-fruit wines, cordials, liqueurs, or similar compounds from the payment of any tax provided for in this title.

"'Any such wines or citrus-fruit wines may, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, be sold or removed tax free for the manufacture of vinegar, or for the production of dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol by volume.

"'The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply to dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol by volume.'

"SEC. 13. Section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1300 (a) (2)), is amended by inserting after 'grape brandy' a comma and the following: 'or containing citrus-fruit wine fortified with citrus-fruit brandy.'

"SEC. 14. Section 42 of the Act entitled 'An Act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes', approved October 1, 1890, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1302(a)), is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'The provisions of this section and section 43 shall apply to the use of citrus-fruit brandy in the preparation of fortified citrus-fruit wines in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply to the use of wine spirits in the fortification of sweet wines, except that no brandy (other than a citrus-fruit brandy) may be used in the fortification of citrus-fruit wine and a citrus-fruit brandy prepared from one kind of citrus fruit may not be used for the fortification of a citrus-fruit wine prepared from another kind of citrus fruit or for the fortification of a wine prepared from any fruit other than citrus fruit.'

"SEC. 15. Section 3255 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1176), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3255. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, oranges, pears, pineapples, apricots, berries, plums, pawpaws, persimmons, prunes, figs, cherries, dates, or citrus fruits (except lemons and limes) from any provision of the internal-revenue laws relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: Provided, That where, in the manufacture of wine or citrus-fruit wine, artificial sweetening has been used, the wine, or the fruit pomace residuum thereof, or the citrus-fruit wine may be used in the distillation of brandy or citrus-fruit brandy, as the case may be, and such use shall not prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, from exempting such distiller from any provision of the internal-revenue laws relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: And provided further, That the distillers mentioned in this section may add to not less than five hundred gallons (ten barrels) of grape cheese not more than five hundred gallons of a sugar solution made from cane, beet, starch, or corn sugar, 95 per centum pure, such solution to have a saccharine strength of not to exceed 10 per centum, and may ferment the resultant mixture on a winery or distillery premises, and such fermented product shall be regarded as distilling material.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 16. (a) Section 1 of the Act of March 3, 1877, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, sec. 1250), is amended by striking out "not exceeding ten in numbers in any one collection district," and by inserting at the end of such section the following new paragraph:

"'The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such regulations as he may promulgate from time to time with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, in his discretion, establish such warehouses adjacent to distilleries, and may, in his discretion, permit the removal of brandy directly from the distillery to such warehouses, and from such warehouses to the distillery warehouse of the producing distiller.'

"(b) Section 51 of the Act of August 27, 1894, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, sec. 1265), is amended by striking out "not exceeding ten in number in any one collection district," and by inserting at the end of such section the following new paragraph:

"'The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such regulations as he may promulgate from time to time with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, in his discretion, establish such warehouses adjacent to distilleries, and may, in his discretion, permit the removal of spirits directly from the distillery to such warehouses, and from such warehouses to the distillery warehouse of the producing distiller.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 153: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "17"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the title.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GEORGE. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this is the only enjoyable day I have had during the session. I have been working hard this year. I find that the duties of my committee are arduous and exacting. Having met more or less disaster, as well as a few successes, and the work being over so far as my committee is concerned, I have today had rather a field day of my own. Nobody else has enjoyed it, but I have.

Mr. President, this bill theoretically is called a bill to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto, and to enforce the twenty-first amendment. That is pretty comprehensive.

I offered an amendment to the bill, which was accepted by the committee. Then I was permitted, by grace of the committee and of the Senate, to insert in the RECORD my speech regarding the amendment.

Mr. President, this bill is capable of being amended to bring in $300,000,000 which we should have and could have.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand correctly that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York was rejected by the conferees?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, it was.

Mr. WALSH. I am sorry to hear that.

Mr. COPELAND. That is, the Senator from Massachusetts is sorry because he has faith to believe that it would accomplish something like what I am speaking of.

Mr. WALSH. As a member of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee who heard the evidence, I was very much impressed with the proposal for increasing the revenue from liquor taxes. Will the Senator from Georgia later explain what were the reasons for the rejection of the amendment of the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps the Senator from Georgia will do so now.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to state, Mr. President, that the amendment, as the Senator from Massachusetts knows, would, if adopted, change the entire method of collecting revenues upon alcoholic beverages.

Mr. WALSH. It was opposed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and as I understand nothing which was presented before the committee changed his views.

Mr. GEORGE. The Secretary of the Treasury continued in his opposition to the proposal, and the House committee refused to give in. The House committee had objections to the proposal.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the difficulties which confronted the Senate conferees in regard to this matter.

Mr. GEORGE. The chairmen of both the conferees of each body agreed in conference that a special study should be made of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, and to that study should be assigned certain of the experts of the Committee on Taxation.

Mr. WALSH. And that the report of that study should be available at the next session of the Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; the report of that study should be available at the next session. In addition to that, a bill, House bill 8001, came over from the House yesterday, which I believe it is understood we shall not have time to consider, to which the amendment of the Senator from New York will be entirely pertinent, because that bill relates directly to revenue.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the bill which came over yesterday rather extensively changes the tax provisions of the present law.

Mr. GEORGE. Rather extensively changes them, and it will necessarily remain on our calendar until the next session.

Mr. WALSH. That bill has been referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. The committee gave full consideration to the proposal which the Senator from New York suggested, and we were disposed to retain it if we possibly could have retained it in the bill. The House conferees, backed as they were by the rather strong statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that he thought the bill would be unworkable, did not give in.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator, there is no possible chance, even if it went back to conference now, of the amendment being agreed to because of the attitude of the House, but the Senator believes it may be worked out later. I am very much in favor of the plan and I hope it will be worked out later.

Mr. GEORGE. I think there is a chance of doing so. I am sure the members of the conference know with what diligence we labored on this particular matter. We gave it more time than almost any other bill considered, excepting the utility holding companies bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to add to the statement made by the Senator from Georgia, that the conference committee did not indicate that their minds were closed upon the proposal contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from New York but they took the position that their committee had had no opportunity to hold hearings upon it, nor to consider it, and for that reason they felt that they could not in a conference make necessary investigation upon which to predicate a sound judgment concerning this proposal.

I should like further to state that the Chairman of the Finance Committee has already appointed a subcommittee on the bill H. R. 8001, to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has referred, and it seems to me that it would be very appropriate—and I am sure the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be glad to act along that line—if that subcommittee would give consideration at an early date to the proposal contained in the amendment of the Senator from New York.

As one member of the conference I wish to say that I feel certain that any suggestion which holds out the hope of raising an additional $300,000,000 of revenue, which is not now being collected, will obtain the sympathetic consideration not only of the members of the Finance Committee but of every other Member of the Senate and of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may say that I am chairman of the subcommittee which will consider the bill to which this measure might be appended as a legitimate, germane proposition, and I can assure the Senator from New York that the committee will welcome his attendance and will be very glad to receive his suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, by virtue of the favorable position taken by the Senators and the promises of Senators that in January the Senator from New York will be permitted to present the matter, I suggest that the Senators no longer prolong the debate on this subject but let the deficiency bill be disposed of. I think there is every reason for expecting success in January.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this matter was brought to the attention of the Chairman of the Finance Committee and the members of the committee, and I wish to congratulate the Senator from New York for having brought it to our attention. I will say that the Senator performed a great public function in bringing it to our attention. I can assure him, in view of a conference with the Ways and Means Committee which we had this afternoon, that this matter will receive all due consideration, with the hope that something may be worked out. However, it could not be done at this time, although the Senate conferees insisted upon it and tried to bring it up, but they just could not succeed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in my profession we make it a point to sugar-coat our bitter pills. This is a sugar-coat which is being applied to the bitter pill which is being administered to me. I am not unconscious of that fact. I do not wish the Senators to think that I disregard the real situation.

Mr. President, I am going to say two or three things about this matter and then we shall see what we will do. I wish every Senator here to know just a word about this plan. There is a group of citizens in my city who were very bitter in their opposition to prohibition. Some of them were very pious folk. Some of them belong to the church of which I am an unworthy member. So they entered into a compact that they would make every effort, if prohibition should be repealed, to find a way to do away with bootlegging and all the evils thereof. Out of that organization came this plan to increase the revenues, to decrease bootlegging, and to cheapen the price of liquor. The latter was of no interest to me.

Let me show what the situation is at present. May I have the attention of the few Senators who are here, because it is not every day that somebody offers a plan to give the Government $300,000,000? We had a tax bill here and labored for weeks with it and finally evolved a monstrosity. The most that anybody contends it will bring in is $250,000,000. Here is a plan that will bring $300,000,000 to the Government. What is that plan?

The tax on liquor is paid to the Government when the liquor leaves the bonded warehouse. That tax is $2 a gallon; $2 a gallon is paid when the liquor leaves the bonded warehouse. The only evidence that the liquor which one may buy is legal liquor is a little strip over the cork. For $100 I can buy a million of them. That does not bring any worthwhile money to the Government. That encourages bootlegging.

What is the plan? The plan is that the bond which covers the liquor in the bonded warehouse shall be extended to cover the wholesaler and the retailer; that when the liquor is sold to the consumer there shall be a revenue stamp upon the bottle representing 50 cents or 25 cents, or whatever it is the particular parcel of liquor requires under the law.

What happens under this tax? It takes 3 gallons of liquor to make a case of 12 quarts. The tax would be three times $2, or $6. That is what the Government is entitled to have—$6 a case. When that liquor is taken out of the bonded warehouse, 25 percent is added to it as the profit to the wholesaler. Twenty-five percent of $6 is $1.50. That makes the tax $7.50. When the liquor is sold to the retailer there is a 33⅓-percent increase put on. Thirty-three and a third percent of $7.50 is $2.50, which makes it $10. Then there is still another additional tax, which brings the total tax up to $12. The $6 which the Government had in the beginning has become $12 when the liquor reaches the consumer. Senators can readily realize what that means. It means that the bootlegger can go to the retailer and say, "I will sell you liquor at $5 or $10 a case less than you can buy legal liquor for, and I will supply you with the beautiful little stamps which go with the corks."

The testimony shows that the Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Choate, the Director of the A. B. C., and others say that less than half the liquor consumed in the United States pays any tax. That is demonstrated here in the District, so it is not theoretical at all. Under this plan the stamp is placed on the bottle. Under this plan the bond would be extended to the retailer. He would be under a thousand dollar cash bond, and no retailer is going to take a chance, for a 25-cent stamp, of a thousand dollar fine and imprisonment for a year.

This plan would mean that bootlegging would cease. It would have to cease. The retailers would not dare take a chance on the penalty which would be imposed upon them of a loss of their thousand dollar bond and a prison sentence. There can be no doubt—at least, it is the belief of those who have investigated it—that the revenues of the country would be increased by $300,000,000 a year by reason of this system.

Is not that worth while? It impressed the chairman of the committee [Mr. GEORGE], it impressed the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and it impressed everybody who has taken the pains to study it. But on the theory that this might be considered a tax-revenue measure, of course, I can quite understand, and I say it without any ill-feeling, that the House Members might feel it ought to originate in the House.

Mr. President, I had a talk with the chairman of the House committee, Mr. DOUGHTON, and with the Chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. HARRISON], and with our leader [Mr. ROBINSON], and with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I want this to appear in the RECORD, and I want Senators to remember it. I had been solemnly promised that a joint subcommittee of the two committees should be appointed to study the plan.

I do not feel just right about one matter in this connection, so I have asked that the Senator from Mississippi may be sent for in order that he may be here when I make the statement, because I do not want to say it in his absence if I can help it. I was asked by the chairman of the committee to go to his office, and there I met Mr. Robert Jackson, the attorney of the Department, and Mr. Parker, the tax expert whom we all respect and love. We discussed this matter and it was determined that Mr. Jackson should take the message to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that on Monday I should have an opportunity to present the matter to him. I never heard anything more about it. That is one thing I do not like. I do not know who is to blame and I am not blaming anybody, but, at least, I had no opportunity to try to convert the Secretary of the Treasury. His letter, which is founded upon a misapprehension, in my judgment, was the conclusive thing which defeated action in the adoption of the report.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask my colleague whether he will permit an interruption; or will it interfere with his train of thought? I desire to read a short letter and make a request of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] but if it is going to interrupt my colleague, I would rather wait until later on.

Mr. COPELAND. I will ask the Senator to wait just a minute.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that some of us have been sitting here for hours and hours waiting for action on the deficiency bill so that it may go to conference. There will have to be a conference on the bill, and all of this talk may go on while the conference is proceeding. Some consideration ought to be given to Senators who wish to work instead of talking. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to my friend from Virginia that work is my middle name. I wish to work, too; and I do work. I have no objection to suspending my procedure and letting the appropriation bill go to conference. Are Senators ready to vote upon it now?

Mr. GLASS. That is all we desire to do.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; go ahead and vote.

Mr. GLASS. For the past hour we could have been in conference. For 2 hours we could have been in conference while all this talk was going on.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us lay aside this conference report for the present and vote on the other matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. What is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report on the alcohol-control bill, in charge of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from New York yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request that the conference report be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GEORGE. I am in charge of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is in charge of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I have been here all afternoon on this one report; but I ask now that it be laid aside temporarily, if there is to be no further debate upon the deficiency bill, in order that that bill may be disposed of.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I must tell my colleague that I have one amendment, which it will take about 2 minutes to consider, which I must offer to the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment to the administrative features of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I insist on proceeding with the conference report. It is privileged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is before the Senate, and the Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say to my genial friend from Virginia that I did not bring up the conference report on the alcohol bill. It is not my fault that it was brought up.

Mr. GLASS. My remarks were not particularly directed to the Senator from New York. I think we ought to get to conference on the deficiency bill, and I think we ought to have been there 2 hours ago.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was saying that a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, based, in my judgment, upon a failure of understanding on the part of the man who prepared the letter, was responsible for the failure of the conferees to include this item in the final report. I had a right, in view of the pledges made to me, to have an opportunity to explain this matter to the Secretary of the Treasury; but I did not have that opportunity.

Now, I have gotten that out of my system; but, as I understand the matter, may I say to the chairman of the committee a subcommittee has now been appointed from the Senate committee.

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true.

Mr. COPELAND. And the chairman of the House committee has promised to appoint a similar subcommittee from that committee for the purpose of giving serious study to this problem.

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, may I ask the Senator, is this just a little bit more of sugar coating?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope not, because the Senator knows I have talked to these gentlemen every time he has requested me to do so, and they have impressed me, and I have thought well of the plan.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I thank the Senator.

I desire to say that so far as the House conferees are concerned, from the able chairman down, I understand that they did not have time to study this question. On the strength of this pledge and the statement I have made for the RECORD, I am going to withdraw any further opposition to the conference report. I was prepared to go on for 5 or 6 hours, hoping to rival the genial Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], not in the material presented, but at least in the length of speech which I intended to make.

With this understanding, to which the entire Senate now is a party, I am going to withdraw any opposition to the adoption of this report. I was prepared to go on for hours in opposition to it, but I should not feel that I was doing my duty to the Senate, or being fair to the gentlemen who represent us upon the committee, if I should go further in the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish very briefly to cover some matters which I have been undertaking to state all day. I wish these matters to be in the RECORD.

Farm revenue began to show its slump in 1929. That year it was $11,941,000,000—$394 to every farm person. Farm revenue today, on a dollar that is worth only 59 cents where the other dollar was worth 100 cents in 1929, is much less than even the $11,000,000,000, probably somewhere around $7,000,000,000; and instead of there being $394 to every farm person in earnings, I am informed, according to some of the statements made on the floor this evening, that many of the share-croppers do not earn over $75 to $100 per family. Therefore, in this year 1935, from a farm standpoint, we are far worse off than could have been anticipated even on any comparison made with some of the bad years.

Unemployment relief shows that the roll is today greater than it ever before has been in the history of the country. Unemployment figures furnished to me today by the American Federation of Labor show that this month of August 1935—to wit, on the 22d day of August 1935—the unemployed persons in America are 359,000 in excess of the month of August 1934.

Public debts are up several billion dollars. Private debts are up several billion dollars. Costs of living are up, in some instances, 40 percent. The cotton surplus is greater than it was a year ago. The carloadings are less this month, we find, than they have been even in the worst months of 1933.

If I may quote the figures, in January 1935 we were a little bit better off as to carloadings than in January 1933, but worse off than in January 1934; but in the month of June the carloadings in 1935 were only slightly more than they were in 1933 and less than they were in 1934. In the month of July, however, we began to strike a new low. In the month of July—the month that is just past—carloadings in 1934 were 2,351,015 cars. In 1933, for the same month, there were 2,498,390 cars; and in the month of July 1935 there were 2,228,737 cars. So the carloadings today are not only worse than they were in 1934, but they are worse than they were in 1933. For the week of August 3, carloadings for 1933 for the same week were 620,482 cars; for 1934 there were 612,660 cars; and for 1935 they were lower than they have ever before been, 597,083 cars.

Mr. President, I have submitted this report in order that Senators here may have an opportunity to know that, instead of getting better, unemployment is worse, the cost of living is higher, public debts are higher, private debts are higher, taxes are higher, the farmer makes less, there are more laborers walking the streets, and general paralysis must come unless after all these other experiments we try the one safe course that has been suggested to the Senate beginning with this depression—redistribution of wealth of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN EMPLOYEES AND CONTRACTORS ON PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, pursuant to Senate Resolution 228 (73d Cong.), as amended, submitted a supplementary report containing a detailed enumeration concerning certain typical cases coming to the attention of the committee in connection with the relationship between employees and contractors on public works, a discussion of the economic and social effects thereof, together with additional proposals, suggestions, and recommendations, which was ordered to be printed as Report No. 332, part 3.

UNITED STATES SILVER POLICY

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a Senate resolution. I ask also that it be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

I give notice that when the Senate reconvenes in January next at the first opportune time I shall take occasion to discuss the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 201) was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed immediately to carry out the United States silver policy enthusiastically to the end that our silver monetary stocks shall contain $1 in silver to each $3 in gold, or until the price of silver in the world market shall reach $1.29 per fine ounce; be it further

Resolved, That if and when silver reaches $1.29 per ounce, thereby making the bullion in the silver dollar worth $1, then such value be fixed, maintained, and stabilized by the free sale and purchase of silver at such price; be it further

Resolved, That in any monetary or stabilization conference called by or participated in by the United States the question of making silver a primary and basic monetary metal shall be considered.

PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES—DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SENATE AND HOUSE BILLS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement explaining the principal differences between the Senate bill and the House bill relating to public-utility holding companies.

The two principal differences between the Senate bill and the House bill relate to sections 11 and 13.

Section 11 in the Senate bill, as you will recall, required that a holding company limit its operations to one integrated operating system and to businesses reasonably incidental thereto. The House bill also purported to limit the operations of a holding company to one integrated system, but permitted an exception which allowed the Commission to permit a holding company to control as many systems as it deemed consistent with the public interest. The House bill accordingly thrusts the entire burden of breaking up the giant holding companies upon the Securities Commission without any effective or constitutional standard to guide them in their task and with no concrete congressional sanction to fall back upon to resist the pressures that would inevitably be brought against the Commission to prevent their taking any effective action. Since both bills accepted the proposition that a holding company should normally be limited to one integrated system, my colleagues and I conceived it to be our task to find what concrete exceptions, if any, could be made to this rule that would satisfy the demand of the House for some greater flexibility. After considerable discussion the Senate conferees concluded that the furthest concession they could make would be to permit the Commission to allow a holding company to control more than one integrated system if the additional systems were in the same region as the principal system and were so small that they were incapable of independent economical operation and if the combination of these small systems under one holding company would not create a corporation so large as to impair the advantages of localized management and the effectiveness of regulation. I consider this a very generous concession upon the part of the Senate. If properly administered, however, this concession should not defeat the purpose of the President to break up the giant holding companies with their undue concentration of economic power and with their absentee management by remote control.

The conferees also agreed to accept the substance of the Senate provisions of section 11, which gives the Commission power to require the removal of unnecessary complexities from the corporate structures of the holding companies and to require the fair and equitable distribution of voting power among the security holders. There is a mandatory provision which requires the Commission to compel holding companies to take such action as may be necessary to make them cease to be holding companies beyond the second degree. While holding companies beyond the first degree are not completely proscribed, the Commission could prevent a holding company beyond the first degree if it found that the second link created an unnecessary corporate complexity.

The Senate had to yield on the provision that all holding companies should cease to be holding companies after 1940 unless affirmatively found to be necessary to the operations of an integrated system under the applicable State law. The provisions retained in the bill, however, which require as a general rule the limitation of the holding company to one integrated system and which require that the corporate structure of the holding company be not unnecessarily complicated, should serve to break up all of the unnecessarily large and complicated holding-company empires.

The second principal difference between the Senate and the House was section 13. The Senate bill provided that all intrasystem service, construction, and engineering contracts should be performed economically at cost fairly allocated among the operating companies, and only through mutual service or cooperative companies. The House bill gave the Commission power to regulate intrasystem contracts of this character but did not forbid the making of a profit on such contracts. The Senate conferees took the point of view that there is no justification for a holding company's making a profit from subsidiary operating companies under its control. The holding company stands in a trustee relationship to such companies, and it is impossible to regulate profits in such transactions. The House conferees yielded to the Senate on this point but objected to the provisions in the Senate bill requiring all such contracts to be performed by mutual service or cooperating companies. The Senate conferees felt that the mutual-service company device which is now used by a few of the more progressive holding companies was the most, if not the only, effective means of avoiding abuses in this field, but the Senate yielded to the House to the extent of not making the use of mutual-service companies mandatory by statute. The machinery for the use of such companies, however, is set up in the act, but the Commission is not obliged to force the companies to adopt this device if the Commission finds that the companies can, through some other device, perform these intrasystem services economically and efficiently at cost fairly allocated among the operating companies.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, after line 8, after the amendment of Mr. BANKHEAD heretofore agreed to, to insert the following:

No part of any funds made available for the use of the Commodity Credit Corporation either from the Treasury directly or through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be paid to any person, firm, corporation, or cooperative association for services in connection with the removal of cotton under what is known as the "reconcentration program", from any warehouse heretofore approved by said Commodity Credit Corporation, nor shall any such funds be expended for storage of any cotton moved under such program from the place of original storage.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I feel obligated to raise the point of order against the proposed amendment as legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as it was stated by the clerk, the amendment is a limitation on an appropriation, and it was approved by the Committee on Appropriations. I should like to have a few minutes to explain the purpose of the amendment. I do not think there will be any objection to it once it is explained.

If the amendment is understood by the Senate I am sure it will not provoke the slightest opposition. Mr. President, at the present time the Commodity Credit Corporation has loans on cotton amounting to more than 5,000,000 bales stored in small warehouses throughout the entire Cotton Belt. Recently there has been a threat to move this cotton by the Corporation under a plan that would permit the American Cotton Cooperative Association to have the cotton reconcentrated in the great cotton centers of the South and stored in warehouses owned by the large cotton factors.

I understand that the American Cotton Cooperative Association is to receive a fixed fee, to be paid by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and this program further contemplates that this cotton will be stored with a few cotton factors and taken away from the many smaller warehouses which now have it in storage.

This movement could not possibly benefit the cotton growers of the South. They do not desire to have the cotton moved because, as a general proposition, cotton brings about 25 points more in the smaller markets than the spot price which obtains in the large cotton centers. This reconcentration could not benefit the Commodity Credit Corporation. It will add to charges to be assessed against the person who made the loan on the cotton. It can only inure to the benefit of the American Cotton Cooperative Association and of the few cotton factors who have the warehouses in the large centers and will receive the cotton for storage.

Applying the old rule of a barber shop, that the first come shall be first served, or the rule of the mill, that the man who first brings his corn in shall first have it ground, this cotton should be left where it is. Why should it be moved? There is the flimsy excuse that it is to make room for this year's crop. Common fairness would demand that this year's crop should be moved if it is necessary to move any cotton to the reconcentration centers.

There are a number of small warehouses which have spent thousands of dollars in order to afford facilities to store this year's crop, and there is no reason, justification, or excuse for picking this cotton up at the small warehouses, paying the American Cotton Cooperative Association a benefit thereon, and moving it to the large warehouse centers. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I submit an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, on page 35, after line 8, after the amendment of Mr. FRAZIER heretofore agreed to—

That so much of the last sentence of section 32 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (H. R. 8492, 74th Cong.) as precedes the second proviso is amended to read as follows: "The amounts appropriated under this section shall be expended for such of the above-specified purposes and at such times, in such manner, and in such amounts as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HALE, and Mr. KEYES conferees on the part of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION COMMISSION UNDER RAILWAY RETIREMENT ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints Mr. BROWN, Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. CAPPER as the Members, on the part of the Senate, of the Investigation Commission authorized by section 8 of House bill 8651, the Railway Retirement Act.

PURCHASE OF SILVER AND ISSUANCE OF SILVER CERTIFICATES

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3260, the silver-purchase measure.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the request for unanimous consent may be granted in order that the bill may be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. METCALF. I object.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object. I am sure it will save much time, and we can get the conference report on the tax bill through much more readily if this bill may be passed. That is the interest I have in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3260) to amend Public Law No. 438, Seventy-third Congress, entitled, "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes", which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6, section 7, and section 8 of Public Law No. 438, Seventy-third Congress, are hereby repealed and all Treasury rules and regulations made in pursuance of said sections 6, 7, and 8 of Public Law No. 438 are declared null and void and inoperative.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in support of Senate bill 3260, let me say that the Congress, on June 19, 1934, enacted legislation commonly entitled "The Silver Purchase Act of 1934", directing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver at his discretion in world markets until the total so acquired would establish a ratio of $1 in silver to $3 in gold in our total monetary stocks.

A provision in this bill levied a tax of 50 percent on profits realized by holders of silver, and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate regulations for the administration of the act.

Another provision authorized the President to acquire by nationalization all silver held in this country at his discretion. This was done by proclamation on August 9, 1934, and profits that resulted to individuals whose silver was thus acquired by the Government were not taxed, because the method of acquisition necessitated that a fair and just market price be the basis of settlement. This price was 50.01 cents per fine ounce.

Section 6, the first section proposed to be repealed, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to regulate domestic silver dealings through a license system.

Section 7 authorizes the President to nationalize all silver owned and held within the United States.

Section 8 provides for a tax of 50 percent of all profits on silver transactions gained by citizens of the United States.

Pursuant to the authority granted in the said three sections, all exchanges dealing in silver have either been forced to suspend entirely or have discontinued the handling of silver either through future sales contracts or spot silver transactions. In addition to closing the exchanges, the President, through a proclamation, nationalized and took over for the account of the Treasury all domestic silver.

All persons desiring to buy and sell silver must place their orders with foreign brokers and deal with foreign silver exchanges. All fees, commissions, and expenses are paid to foreigners to the disadvantage of Americans.

Since the approval of the act all persons, firms, associations, and corporations realizing a profit through silver transactions have paid to the Government a tax of 50 percent upon the profits thus realized.

While we have no report on the amount of tax or revenue collected by the Government, it is estimated to be scarcely more than a nominal sum.

In carrying out the mandate of the Congress the Treasury Department authorized the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to act as the fiscal agent for the Treasury in its silver transactions. As evidence of this statement, a responsible representative of the Treasury Department, on June 21, 1934, advised a New York firm of silver brokers as follows:

Since the Federal Reserve Bank of New York is acting as fiscal agent for the Treasury in its silver transactions, it is suggested that you address your application to that institution.

As further evidence that the New York Federal Reserve Bank was commissioned to represent the Government in the purchase of silver, a responsible representative of the Treasury Department in a letter of date November 5, 1934, made the following statement:

I would suggest that if you care to discuss this situation further that you communicate with Mr. Knoke, Assistant Deputy Governor, Federal Reserve Bank, New York.

The New York Federal Reserve Bank is a private institution, owned wholly by the member banks located within the New York Federal Reserve Bank district. The New York Federal Reserve Bank evidently accepted the agency to represent the Government in the purchase of silver, and as such agent in turn commissioned certain member banks to assist in carrying out the program of purchasing silver for the Government.

As proof of this statement a responsible official, representing the New York Federal Reserve Bank, on June 25, 1934, made the following statement:

In reply would say that we use only member banks for the purchase of such silver as we may buy for account of the United States. We do not select or in any way suggest the brokers which the member banks use.

To those who are familiar with the silver monetary program it is obvious that the agency or agents selected by the Treasury Department to assist in carrying out the silver-purchase program are antagonistic to such program, as it is well known that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and the great majority, if not all, of the member banks in the New York Federal Reserve district are enemies of and opposed to the wider use of silver in our monetary system.

So far as the committee can ascertain, the Treasury has no other agent or agents cooperating to carry out the silver-purchase program; hence, it is obvious that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and such member banks as may have been commissioned as subagents by the New York Federal Reserve Bank, and such brokers as may have been selected by the favored member banks, know from day to day the policy of the Treasury Department in purchasing silver.

The first major effect of the enactment of the silver-purchase program was the closing of the silver exchange in New York City, thus forcing all transactions in silver to be made outside the borders of the United States. Immediately after the enactment of the said legislation a silver exchange was set up in Montreal, Canada, and the silver exchange in London took on added importance, and such London silver market has become the center for world transactions in both silver futures and in spot silver.

The enactment of the Silver Purchase Act obviously has had the effect of increasing the price of silver throughout the world.

When the law was passed silver was selling for less than 50 cents per ounce on the world market. As a result of our increased buying of silver, the world price increased to 81 cents per ounce. The congressional mandate to the Treasury Department was to purchase silver until one of two things happened: First, until the stock of monetary silver in the Treasury should equal one-third in monetary value of our Treasury gold stock; or, second, until silver should reach the price of $1.29 per ounce in the world market.

When the Silver Purchase Act was passed we had gold to the value of some $7,820,000,000 and silver to the monetary value of some $838,000,000. At that time, with the amount of gold in the Treasury, we obligated our Government to acquire additional silver to the monetary value of approximately $1,750,000,000. Since June 1934 we have increased our gold holdings by the sum of over $1,300,000,000, and while we have increased our silver stocks to the extent of some 450,000,000 ounces, we find that, to carry out the policy fixed in the Silver Purchase Act, we must yet secure silver to the monetary value of approximately $1,500,000,000.

Evidence before the committee disclosed that recently the price of silver in the London world market rose to 81 cents per ounce, at which time, due to unknown influences, the price rise was checked and during subsequent weeks the price of silver in such market has fallen to 67¾ cents per ounce, or a decline of over 13 cents per ounce.

Thus, after almost 14 months we find that we are obligated to acquire almost as much silver now as when the law was passed, thus showing that the first objective—the acquiring of one-third as much silver at its monetary value as we have gold in the Treasury—is not being obtained.

The further fact that the price of silver has been reduced from 81 cents to some 67¾ cents per ounce demonstrates that the second objective—the purchasing of silver until the price should rise to $1.29 per ounce—likewise is not being obtained.

The committee is of the opinion that the three sections proposed to be repealed serve as a barrier to reaching the objectives set forth in the Silver Purchase Act.

The provisions of law embraced in said sections have brought about the following conditions:

(1) Destroyed the leading silver market of the world, which had been built up in this country at New York over a period of years.

(2) Transferred to London the business and profits of American persons and firms.

(3) Diverted to foreigners the business of melting and refining silver coins and bullion of low content which ultimately finds its way to the United States Treasury and the cost of which treatment is reflected in the price the United States Treasury subsequently pays for such silver.

(4) Encouraged American industrial firms to acquire property abroad for the purpose of constructing and operating manufacturing plants, the operation of which outside the boundaries of the United States will permit such firms to refine, manufacture, and sell abroad silver articles in competition with citizens of the United States.

(5) Concentrated with foreign interests the shipping, both by rail and ocean freight, as well as the incidental insurance and handling charges, of silver coin and bullion acquired abroad for Government account, despite the fact that such foreign charges do not permit of competition with rates of American lines. As an example, the freight from Shanghai to London is five-eighths percent ad valorem and from London to New York three-fourths percent, making the combined freight cost, Shanghai to New York via London, 1⅜ percent ad valorem, the elapsed time about 48 days; while the freight on direct shipments from Shanghai to San Francisco is but three-eighths percent, the elapsed time in transit about 22 days; and from Shanghai to New York it is also but three-eighths percent ad valorem, while the elapsed time in transit is about 42 days.

(6) Deprived American brokers of business to which they are justly and legitimately entitled by making it possible for Government orders to be entrusted solely to a chosen few New York banks, which, in turn, deal exclusively with the four London bullion brokers.

(7) In practical operation have the effect of showing our hand daily to the same agencies that are not only non-American, but are constantly in the employ of foreign interests that are openly opposed to the financial policies of this Government, and notably to its silver program.

AMERICANS INJURED, FOREIGNERS BENEFITED

The four firms of London bullion brokers, to whose hands is entrusted silver buying and selling orders from every market, have received upward of $300,000 in commissions alone on purchases during the past year for account of banks acting for the United States Treasury. During the same period American bullion brokers are estimated to have received less than a total of $10,000 in commissions on United States Government business.

The established brokerage or commission of the London brokers is one-eighth percent on purchases, or at a price of 68 cents per ounce, $85 per 100,000 ounces, as against the established New York open-market brokerage of $30 per 100,000 ounces.

The said sections of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 have operated to injure, if not destroy, the following American interests:

(1) American silver exchanges and markets.

(2) American brokerage and commission houses.

(3) Americans engaged in the buying and selling of silver for profit.

(4) The policy of selecting the New York Federal Reserve Bank to act as the exclusive agent of the Federal Treasury in the purchase of silver is an unjustifiable discrimination against the other 11 Federal Reserve banks, and especially injurious to the Pacific coast Federal Reserve banks and their members.

(5) American shipping lines have been damaged by reason of the forced shipping of all silver to the London market.

(6) American insurance companies have likewise been damaged by the loss of business to the London insurance companies.

(7) American smelting and refining companies have been damaged because of the concentration of silver interest in London.

Eighth. The London silver market has failed to render satisfactory services to the world silver trade in that the London banks have failed and refused to grant and extend proper credits to those dealing in silver; hence, to the extent that credit is needed the American banks have been damaged through the loss of such business.

Ninth. The records show that the bulk of silver shipments originate in British South Africa, British India, China, and Japan. At present such silver is shipped to London and such portion as is purchased for American account is in turn shipped to America. The evidence shows that vast sums could be saved if such silver were shipped direct to the Pacific coast ports, and processed in American refineries and deposited at suitable points, without the double expense of being sent to London and thence on to the United States. It is injurious to our Government and our citizens to have Japan, for example, ship 15,000,000 ounces of silver to London at a cost of 1 percent and have that silver reshipped from London to the United States at an additional cost of 1 percent when these 15,000,000 ounces could have been shipped—a change in the law permitting—to San Francisco direct at a saving to us of 1 percent. And yet the periodical reports of Samuel Montagu & Co., of London, show that this is precisely what is happening at this time. And the same condition is true of practically every ounce of silver imported into this country by the Treasury within the past year. It is equally injurious to have this silver smelted in London in order to make it acceptable delivery for the American Treasury when it could be smelted in this country at the same cost and to the benefit of American labor and capital. It is equally injurious to have the remaining 3 percent for storage, handling, trucking, commissions, and miscellaneous items go to the benefit of British business when it could benefit our own people with a change in the law. This condition, however, must continue indefinitely unless the said sections are repealed, thus permitting this silver to be sold in the United States without tax.

Tenth. On the some 60,000,000 ounces of silver which the Treasury bought in London during recent weeks—and this 60,000,000 figure is that of the eminently reliable firm of Sharps & Wilkins, bullion dealers—it is estimated that our country has sustained a direct loss of 5 percent, or $2,000,000. If we assume that our entire foreign-trade figures do not represent more than 10 percent in actual profit, this loss of $2,000,000 is equivalent to a loss of potential American business of not less than $20,000,000. The figure of 5 percent as the loss to this country on this business consists of 1 percent excess shipping costs; 1 percent average smelting cost; 1 percent for handling, storage, trucking, interest, and various commissions in London; 2 percent representing miscellaneous financing, foreign exchange, and other incidental costs.

To secure the silver necessary to make our silver stocks equal to $1 in silver to $3 in gold we must buy some 1,100,000,000 additional ounces of silver. To secure such silver we must pay the sum of approximately $1 per ounce on the average; thus the necessary silver will cost us approximately $1,100,000,000. Under the law we can buy such silver with silver certificates, so in effect we will exchange paper for such silver. If the total expense of handling such silver is some 5 percent, then, unless the said sections are repealed, we will have to pay foreign brokers, commission houses, shipping lines, insurance companies, smelting and refining companies, and trucking and storage companies the approximate sum of $55,000,000 in fees, commissions, tariff, wages, and salaries, all to the damage and injury of our American institutions and citizens.

With 6 years of the worst depression in history still upon us; with a subsidy in force to domestic producers of silver; with America, North and South, producing the bulk of the world's newly mined silver; with an unbalanced Budget; with proposals pending for greatly increased taxes; with millions still out of employment, your committee recommends the repeal of said sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, thereby causing the return to American institutions and Americans citizens the control of and the profits arising from the silver industry.

Mr. President, this bill, if enacted into law, will produce, indirectly, far more revenue than the sections proposed to be repealed have or will produce the Government of the United States. I believe it is perhaps the first bill that ever repealed a tax which by its repeal actually will contribute many times the revenue which the tax itself has contributed.

We are informed that the Silver Purchase Act by its tax provisions has increased the revenue of the United States by only a million dollars, or thereabout. That means that the profit on silver by citizens of the United States has been only $2,000,000.

Silver was 45 cents an ounce when the act was passed. The object of the Silver Purchase Act was to increase the price of silver. It was thought at the time by the Treasury that this increase in the price of silver, being due to governmental action, should carry with it a tax of 50 percent of the profits. Mr. President, what are the facts?

Silver, after having gone up to 81 cents an ounce, is now about 65 cents an ounce. In other words, silver is 20 cents an ounce higher than it was the day before the act was passed. There are approximately 10,000,000,000 ounces of silver available for monetary use in the world. At 20 cents an ounce the world's monetary silver stocks have increased $2,000,000,000. That increase has affected Americans seemingly only to the extent of $2,000,000. One million has been paid into the Treasury as a 50-percent tax. The whole two-billion increase, of course, may not have been realized by the sale of silver. I say that the increase in the value of the monetary silver stock in the world has been $2,000,000,000. It was this type of increase that was made the subject matter of the consideration of the tax at the time the tax was levied. I voted against the imposition of the tax at the time the Silver Purchase Act was passed; and there were 22 Members who are now Members of this Chamber who voted against the imposition of the tax at the time.

We do not claim any particular gift of foresight, but perhaps a little closer attention to the problem might be credited to those Members who foresaw that any action on silver would certainly raise the price of silver as was intended under the act, and that any tax on profits would tend to drive the Americans away from silver and permit the profit to accrue to foreigners.

The Silver Purchase Act became operative on June 19, 1934. We have not had 14 months' experience under the act, and the tax provisions have yielded the Treasury a little over a million dollars, say a million one hundred thousand. The act itself appropriated $500,000 for its execution. Certainly the tax cannot be considered as a revenue measure.

I make bold to state the elimination of the tax will produce revenue. The Secretary of the Treasury has asserted that the silver-purchase policy laid down in the act would be carried out in the full intent and spirit of the act. Consequently we are to expect that either one-fourth of our monetary stocks will become silver or that silver will reach $1.29 an ounce. These are the alternate mandates laid down by the Congress of the United States on the Treasury. Discretion, of course, was given the Treasury in the matter of the detail of carrying out the policy.

We have the Silver Purchase Act on the statute books. We have the definite promise of the Treasury to carry out the act in its full extent and purport. So, silver will either be accumulated until it amounts to one-fourth our monetary stock or, in the meantime, its price will be raised to $1.29 an ounce.

With respect to the first proposition I have little hesitancy in stating that silver will not be accumulated until it reaches one-fourth of our monetary stocks. Mr. President, we have now over nine billions one hundred and ninety millions of gold in the Treasury of the United States. We will have to accumulate over three billions of silver at its monetary price to fulfill the first alternative of the act. The truth is that we are but little advanced over what we were on June 19, 1934, in the increase of the ratio of silver to gold in this country. If we pay for the silver in silver certificates, we will have to accumulate approximately a billion and a half ounces of silver at $1.29 an ounce. If we sell gold and with it buy silver, we reduce the gold stocks by the sale, and consequently we reduce the number of ounces of silver which we will have to purchase to perfect the ratio of 3 to 1 gold to silver. But even that requires the purchase of nearly a billion ounces of silver.

I do not think that the silver market of the world will produce the sale either for silver certificates or for gold of such quantities of silver until the price reaches the $1.29 an ounce. In other words, I think that the fulfillment of the policy laid down in the Silver Purchase Act will be reached by the alternative, namely, not by the accumulation of one-fourth our monetary stocks in silver but by silver first reaching $1.29 an ounce.

This brings me to the heart of the discussion of the proposed amendment to the tax bill. The tax provisions of the Silver Purchase Act have, I repeat, denied American participation in the profits accruing from that act. The removal of the tax provisions will admit of American participation in the profits accruing from the increased price of silver. These profits are immediately subjected to all present provisions of the income-tax law, whether it applies to corporate or individual income-tax returns.

Let me repeat. In raising the price of silver from 45 cents to 65 cents in the 14 months, we have increased the value of the monetary stocks of silver in the world by $2,000,000,000. Let me also repeat that out of this increased value American participation has been to the extent of approximately only $2,000,000. The rest of the world has seemingly profited by the policy. The reason why America has not received her portion of the increase, I truly believe, is to be found in the tax provisions of the Silver Purchase Act. Our profit has been only $2,000,000, with 50 percent, or $1,000,000, returned to the Treasury of the United States.

Now, were America to hold but 10 percent of the silver of the world and to profit by Treasury action, our profit would approximate most conservatively $200,000,000. This $200,000,000 would be subject to the income tax. It is rational and sensible to assume that people with respectable incomes would be the actual beneficiaries of this profit participation.

But, Mr. President, I am going to be conservative, very conservative. I am going to assume that only those in the lowest income brackets would hold any silver, which is a ridiculous assumption on the face of it. I am going to assume that the normal 4-percent tax in the lowest brackets would apply in this country. But even on that assumption, the repeal of the silver tax would yield $8,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States.

The present tax provisions yield a million. The elimination of them yields a minimum of eight million. At the time of the passage of the Silver Purchase Act it was estimated by the Treasury that the tax would yield twenty-five million. But it really drove the American from any participation and it has yielded only a million dollars.

I think, in the discussion of this bill, that we should consider most favorably the elimination of the silver-profit tax and thereby admit of the participation of Americans in this and admit of the restoration of the American silver market on the primary grounds of additional revenue to the Treasury of the United States.

I want to add that silver now is depressed to 65 cents an ounce. If we accept the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, and if the silver-purchase policy is followed up to its true intent and purport, silver will reach $1.29 an ounce. This is practically double the present price. The increase of 64 cents an ounce on the 10,000,000,000 ounces in the monetary stocks of the world is an increase that must be anticipated of $6,400,000,000. American participation in this to only 10 percent of the total increase is a participation that amounts to $640,000,000. I want to throw this open to the income-tax law now on the statute books.

I do not want to seek out any new ways of raising revenue. I do not want any bill that represents new tax provisions. I merely want to abolish what seemingly is, after 14 months' experience, a nuisance tax, and to permit the prevailing laws incorporated in the income-tax laws to run as they were intended to run and yield to this Government its true share of an additional anticipated income in the form of profit on a $640,000,000 base.

Certainly this is almost an ideal approach to new revenues. It carries with it no suggestion of anything destructive. It does not attack a dollar of present property value. Nor does it reach down to the poor and put added burdens upon them. It merely says that by an act of Congress wealth is in the process of creation. Why limit this to foreigners? It is the action of the United States that increases the value of the 10,000,000,000 ounces of silver in the world. It never should be the action of the United States to deny this to its own citizens.

Mr. President, I have studied this matter closely for the 14 months the Silver Purchase Act has been in operation. I have watched particularly the progress we have made in the accumulation of silver with respect to gold in the monetary stocks in this country. I have seen practically no increase in the ratio. I have seen the price of silver, of course, rise. But from that I can get no lesson that profit is certain or assured or axiomatic, for I have seen it rise to 81 cents an ounce and then drop step by step until it is the lowest it has been in 6 months.

Mr. President, I now wish to lay before the Senate a few statements with respect to silver, so that every Member of this body may have a clear conception of what we want to do with silver, and not for silver.

Why do we want to raise the price of silver? Why do we want to accumulate one-fourth of our monetary stocks in silver? We have urged monetary adjustment continuously in order to bring about a higher general price level. We have believed that we can do this most effectively by an expansion of the currency. The gold is not in circulation. It is sterilized in the vaults of the Treasury. The Treasury notes are not favored by the administration, and we have continuously urged an expansion of the currency through an increase in the amount of silver money.

Over in India there are perhaps 4,500,000,000 ounces of silver; in China, 2,500,000,000; and in the United States approximately 1,500,000,000 ounces. This leaves perhaps 1,500,000,000 distributed among the other nations of the world.

Silver is the money of far over half the peoples of the world. It is within the power of the United States to increase or decrease at will the value of the monetary units of the silver-using nations. Cheap silver makes cheap money, and cheap money makes cheap costs of production. Cheap costs of production in the silver-using countries of the world make it possible for them to produce cotton, for example, more cheaply than we can produce it and to sell it on the world market at a profitable price to them which is lower than the price at which the United States can produce cotton and secure out of it even the costs of production.

So I am not at this moment emphasizing the monetary feature of the tax on imports. I am emphasizing two things—revenue to the Treasury of the United States, and revenue which is potential if we remove the tax provisions of the Silver Purchase Act. And I am emphasizing another thing, and that is the competitive position in the world of America if we put to use our power to raise silver.

Mr. President, the tax laws of this country today are predicated principally upon tariffs, upon excises, upon personal incomes, upon corporate incomes, upon inheritances, upon gifts, and upon the newer forms of processing taxes. In the study of revenue there is no subject more important than the study of the means to induce general prosperity in this country. The more we increase prosperity, the more the present laws will yield in the wiping out of deficits and the reduction of the tremendous national debt.

The clamor has gone up to balance budgets. There are wide-spread demands throughout the Nation that the debt be no more increased, but that it be reduced. And there is also the wide-spread attack on any program of new modes and methods of taxation. The answer to the whole question is prosperity. And if step by step we can increase the general prosperity of America, the old taxes will yield sufficient to operate and to wipe out deficits and to reduce the debt.

I am thinking of the tax provisions of the Silver Purchase Act in the sense that they, I repeat, instead of being revenue producing actually deny at least eight times their present revenue to the Government. That is simply one approach to it. But I am looking at the great cotton South with its competition among the silver-using nations of the world, and I am thinking what the rise in the price of silver, which is almost assured in the elimination of this tax, will do in increasing the income of America due to her ability to sell cotton in the markets of the world and resume her former position which she has lost in the cheap-cotton producing nations of the world. All that we can garner for America in respect to her greatest single agricultural crop in turn is reflected in income to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, 3 weeks ago there was transmitted to the President of the United States a letter signed by 46 Members of this body recommending to our Chief Executive the following specific things:

First. The bringing about of the higher level of commodities.

Second. Placing silver in a position where it can assist gold in serving as a basis for currencies and credits of the world.

Third. The adjustment of the value of silver currencies so as to serve the best interests of the cotton-producing sections of the United States.

Fourth. Increasing the possible profit to the Treasury through a legitimate revaluation of gold and silver.

Fifth. The adjustment of the value of gold and silver, making possible early stabilization of world currencies.

I do not care to go into many of the objectives set forth in that letter and acknowledged by the President of the United States in a communication already read into the RECORD. But I merely say that the repeal of the provisions of the Silver Purchase Act, the repeal of sections 6, 7, and 8 of that act will, in my mind, do much to restore the American market, to permit of Americans participating in a profit, and to raise the price of silver rapidly to the point of $1.29 an ounce.

I am going to make this comment. I am going to say that if we had asked England what policies she would prefer that America follow, I think the answer would be that she would prefer to have America keep silver low in price for the benefit of the British Empire. If we were to ask France what policy she would prefer that America adopt, I believe that France would ask us to go directly to the gold standard. I believe that if we would ask the cotton-producing countries of the world, in South America or in the east, they would reply: "Keep silver low in price so that we may compete in the markets of the world."

I believe we should ask of our own minds and consciences what we should do as the American policy. I commend to every Member of this body the passage of this bill, so that additional revenues may accrue to the Treasury directly through wide-spread American participation in the increased prices of silver and indirectly through the prosperity certain to agriculture and industry by the regaining of our competitive position in the markets of the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCOME AND INHERITANCE TAXATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 8, 12, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 10, 13, 14, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Upon net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 12½ per centum.

"$250 upon net incomes of $2,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 13 per centum in addition of such excess.

"$1,940 upon net incomes of $15,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 14 per centum in addition of such excess.

"$5,440 upon net incomes of $40,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $40,000, 15 per centum in addition of such excess."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 20 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 6 to 25, both inclusive, and lines 1 to 16, both inclusive, on page 21, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 202. Estate tax—valuation

"(a) Section 302 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended by adding a new subdivision as follows:

"'(j) If the executor so elects upon his return (if filed within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioner in pursuance of law), the value of the gross estate shall be determined by valuing all the property included therein on the date of the decedent's death as of the date the year after the decedent's death, except that (1) property included in the gross estate on the date of death and, within one year after the decedent's death, distributed by the executor (or, in the case of property included in the gross estate under subdivision (c), (d), or (f) of this section, distributed by the trustee under the instrument of transfer), or sold, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of, shall be included at its value as of the time of such distribution, sale, exchange, or other disposition, whichever first occurs, instead of its value as of the date one year after the decedent's death, and (2) any interest or estate which is affected by mere lapse of time shall be included at its value as of the time of death (instead of the later date) with adjustment for any difference in its value as of the later date not due to mere lapse of time. No deduction under this title of any item shall be allowed if allowance for such item is in effect given by the valuation under this subdivision. Wherever in any other subdivision or section of this title or in Title II of the Revenue Act of 1932, reference is made to the value of property at the time of the decedent's death, such reference shall be deemed to refer to the value of such property used in determining the value of the gross estate. In case of an election made by the executor under this subdivision, then for the purposes of the deduction under section 303(a)(3) or section 303(b)(3), any bequest, legacy, devise, or transfer enumerated therein shall be valued as of the date of decedent's death with adjustment for any difference in value (not due to mere lapse of time or the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a contingency) of the property as of the date one year after the decedent's death (substituting the date of sale or exchange in the case of property sold or exchanged during such one-year period).'

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 6 of the Senate engrossed amendments, in line 1 and in line 7, strike out "$1.50" and insert "$1.40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "(except subsections (f), (g), and (i) thereof)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 109. Personal holding companies

"(a) Section 351(a) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Imposition of tax.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year, upon the undistributed adjusted net income of every personal holding company a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

"'(1) 20 per centum of the amount thereof not in excess of $2,000; plus

"'(2) 30 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $100,000; plus

"'(3) 40 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; plus

"'(4) 50 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000; plus

"'(5) 60 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000,000.'

"(b) Section 351 (b) (C) of such Act is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: 'and distributions (not in complete or partial liquidation and not a "dividend" as defined in section 115) made during the taxable year out of earnings or profits of such year.'

"(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply only in the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 110. Corporate liquidations.

"(a) Section 112 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by adding after paragraph (5) a new paragraph reading as follows:

"'(6) EXCHANGE IN LIQUIDATION.—No gain or loss shall be recognized upon the receipt by a corporation of property (other than money) distributed in complete liquidation of another corporation, if the corporation receiving such property on such exchange was on the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935 and has continued to be at all times until the exchange, in control of such other corporation. As used in this paragraph "complete liquidation" includes any one of a series of distributions by a corporation in complete cancellation or redemption of all its stock in accordance with a plan of liquidation under which the transfer of the property under the liquidation is to be completed within a time specified in the plan, not exceeding five years from the close of the taxable year during which is made the first of the series of distributions under the plan. If such transfer of property is not completed within the taxable year the Commissioner may require of the taxpayer, as a condition to the non-recognition of gain under this paragraph, such bond, or waiver of the statute of limitations on assessment and collection, or both, as he may deem necessary to insure the assessment and collection of the tax if the transfer of the property is not completed in accordance with the plan. This paragraph shall not apply to any liquidation if any distribution in pursuance thereof has been made before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935.'

"(b) Section 112 (c) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out 'or (5)' and inserting in lieu thereof '(5), or (6)'.

"(c) Section 112 (e) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out 'subsection (b) (1) to (5)' and inserting in lieu thereof 'subsection (b) (1) to (6)'.

"(d) Section 112 (i) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out '(4), or (5)' and inserting in lieu thereof '(4), (5), or (6)', and by striking out '(3) or (5)' and inserting in lieu thereof '(3), (5), or (6)'.

"(e) The amendments made by this section shall apply only in the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment strike out "15½" and insert "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment strike out "85 per centum" and insert "90 per centum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) Section 144 of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That in the case of the payment, after December 31, 1935, of dividends of the class with respect to which a deduction is allowed by section 23 (p), the deduction and withholding provided for in this section shall also apply to 10 per centum of the amount of the payment: Provided further, That the Commissioner, under rules and regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize withholding under this section and section 143 (a) (1) (B), in cases where the taxpayer has a taxable year ending on any other date than December 31, at the rate of 13¾ per centum (and, in the case of payments of dividends with respect to which withholding is required, may authorize such payments to be made without withholding) until the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year which begins after December 31, 1935.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

"(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective only with respect to transfers of estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 27 of the Senate engrossed amendments, lines 7 and 8, strike out "after the date this amendment takes effect" and insert "on or after the first day of the second month following the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935"; and on page 29 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 3, strike out "fifteenth" and insert "thirtieth"; and on page 31 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 13 to 17, both inclusive; and on page 32 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 1 to 6, both inclusive; and the Senate agree to the same.

PAT HARRISON,
WILLIAM H. KING,
WALTER F. GEORGE,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
R. L. DOUGHTON,
SAMUEL B. HILL,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN BILLS AFTER ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution No. 39, which is on the table.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered, read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bill or joint resolution duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of each House and found truly enrolled.

LOAD LINES FOR VESSELS IN THE COASTWISE TRADE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2002) to provide for the establishment of load lines for American vessels in the coastwise trade, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 15, to strike out "September 30", and on the same page, line 17, after the word "law" to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in applying the load lines to vessels on the Great Lakes the Secretary of Commerce is vested with discretion to vary the load-line marks from those established by said treaty when in his opinion the changes made by him will not be above the actual line of safety.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 407, which has just come over from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. This is a measure giving consent of Congress to the oil States compact, a measure containing but one section. A similar measure containing four or five sections passed this body on a former occasion. The House passed a joint resolution containing one section. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. METCALF. What is the calendar number?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a measure just sent over from the House of Representatives embracing one section of an oil bill which has heretofore been passed by the Senate. The remainder of the sections have been stricken out. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask consent that the radio address to be delivered by the President of the United States this evening be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The address is as follows:

I am deeply sorry that I have had to forego the opportunity of accompanying my old friend, Senator RYAN DUFFY, to Milwaukee to be with you, as I had planned tonight. But the closing days of a far-reaching and memorable session of the Congress of the United States keeps me here in Washington.

You doubtless know everything that I am going to say to you—because starting as early as last Monday certain special writers of a few papers have given you a complete outline of my remarks. I have been interested and somewhat amused by these clairvoyants who put on the front pages many days ago this speech which, because of pressure of time, I could only think out and dictate this very morning.

Whatever his party affiliations may be, the President of the United States, in addressing the youth of the country—even when speaking to the younger citizens of his own party—should speak as President of the whole people. It is true that the Presidency carries with it, for the time being, the leadership of a political party as well.

A DUTY TO ANALYZE NEEDS

But the Presidency carries with it a far higher obligation than this—the duty of analyzing and setting forth national needs and ideals which transcend and cut across all lines of party affiliation. Therefore, what I am about to say to you, members of the Young Democratic Clubs, is precisely—word for word—what I would say were I addressing a convention of the youth of the Republican Party.

A man of my generation comes to the councils of the younger warriors in a very different spirit from that in which the older men addressed the youth of my time. Party or professional leaders who talked to us 25 or 30 years ago almost inevitably spoke in a mood of achievement and of exultation. They addressed us with the air of those who had won the secret of success for themselves and of permanence of achievement for their country for all generations to come.

NO SPECTER OF WANT IN PAST

They assumed that there was a guarantee of final accomplishment for the people of this country and that the grim specter of insecurity and want among the great masses would never haunt this land of plenty as it had widely visited other portions of the world. And so the elders of that day used to tell us, in effect, that the job of youth was merely to copy them and thereby to preserve the great things they had won for us.

I have no desire to underestimate the achievements of the past. We have no right to speak slightingly of the heritage, spiritual and material, that comes down to us. There are lessons that it teaches that we abandon only at our own peril. "Hold fast to that which is permanently true", is still a counsel of wisdom.

While my elders were talking to me about the perfection of America, I did not know then of the lack of opportunity, the lack of education, the lack of many of the essential needs of civilization; that all these existed among millions of our people who lived not alone in the slums of the great cities and in the forgotten corners of rural America—existed even under the very noses of those who had the advantages and the power of government of those days.

YOUTH'S TASK TO CORRECT ERRORS

I say from my heart that no man of my generation has any business to address youth unless he comes to that task, not in a spirit of exultation but in a spirit of humility. I cannot expect you of a newer generation to believe me, of an older generation, if I do not frankly acknowledge that had the generation that brought you into the world been wiser and more provident and more unselfish, you would have been saved from needless difficult problems and needless pain and suffering.

We may not have failed you in good intentions, but we have certainly not been adequate in results. Your task, therefore, is not only to maintain the best in your heritage, but to labor to lift from the shoulders of the American people some of the burdens that the mistakes of a past generation have placed there.

There was a time when the formula for success was the simple admonition to have a stout heart and willing hands. A great, new country lay open. When life became hard in one place, it was necessary only to move on to another. But circumstances have changed all that. Today we can no longer escape into virgin territory; we must master our environment. The youth of this generation finds that the old frontier is occupied, but that science and invention and economic evolution have opened up a new frontier—one not based on geography but on the resourcefulness of men and women applied to the old frontier.

LESSONS LEARNED BY SUFFERING

The cruel suffering of the recent depression has taught us unforgettable lessons. We have been compelled by stark necessity to unlearn the too comfortable superstition that the American soil was mystically blessed with every kind of immunity to grave economic maladjustments and that the American spirit of individualism—all alone and unhelped by the cooperative efforts of government—could withstand and repel every form of economic disarrangement or crisis. The severity of the recent depression, toward which we had been heading for a whole generation, has taught us that no economic or social class in the community is so richly endowed and so independent of the general community that it can safeguard its own security, let alone assure security for the general community.

The very objectives of young people have changed. In the older days a great financial fortune was too often the goal. To rule through wealth or through the power of wealth fired our imagination. This was the dream of the golden ladder—each individual for himself.

It is my firm belief that the newer generation of America has a different dream. You place emphasis on sufficiency of life rather than on a plethora of riches. You think of the security for yourself and your family that will give you good health, good food, good education, good working conditions, and the opportunity for normal recreation and occasional travel. Your advancement, you hope, is along a broad highway on which thousands of your fellow men and women are advancing with you.

LIFE TODAY VASTLY MORE COMPLEX

You and I know that this modern economic world of ours is governed by rules and regulations vastly more complex than those laid down in the days of Adam Smith or John Stuart Mill. They faced simpler mechanical processes and social needs. It is worth remembering, for example, that the business corporation, as we know it, did not exist in the days of Washington and Hamilton and Jefferson.

Private businesses then were conducted solely by individuals or by partnerships in which every member was immediately and wholly responsible for success or failure. Facts are relentless. We must adjust our ideas to the facts of today.

Our concepts of the regulation of money and credit and industrial competition, of the relation of employer and employee created for the old civilization, are being modified to save our economic structure from confusion, destruction, and paralysis. The rules that governed the relationship between an employer and employee in the blacksmith's shop in the days of Washington cannot, of necessity, govern the relationship between the 50,000 employees of a great corporation and the infinitely complex and diffused ownership of that corporation.

If 50,000 employees spoke with 50,000 voices, there would be a modern Tower of Babel. That is why we insist on their right to choose their representatives to bargain collectively in their behalf with their employer. In the case of the employees, every individual employee will know in his daily work whether he is adequately represented or not. In the case of the hundreds of thousands of stockholders in the present-day ownership of great corporations, however, their knowledge of the success of the management is based too often solely on a financial balance sheet.

RIGHT OF INVESTOR PROTECTION

Things may go wrong in the management without their being aware of it for a year, or for many years to come. Without their day-to-day knowledge, they may be exploited and their investments jeopardized. Therefore, we have come to the recognition of the need of simple but adequate public protection for the rights of the investing public.

A rudimentary concept of credit control appropriate for financing the economic life of a nation of 3,000,000 people can hardly be urged as a means of directing and protecting the welfare of our twentieth-century industrialism. The simple banking rules of Hamilton's day, when all the transactions of a fair-sized bank could be kept in the neat penmanship of a clerk in one large ledger, fail to protect the millions of individual depositors of a great modern banking institution.

And so it goes through all the range of economic life. Aggressive enterprise and shrewd invention have been at work on our economic machine. Our rules of conduct for the operation of that machine must be subjected to the same constant development.

And so in our social life. Forty years ago slum conditions in our great cities were much worse than today. Living conditions on farms and working conditions in mines and factories were primitive. But they were taken for granted. Few people considered that the Government had responsibility for sanitation, for safety devices, for preventing child labor and night work for women.

RECALLS FIGHT IN 1911 FOR REFORM

In 1911, 24 years ago, when I was first a member of the New York State Legislature, a number of the younger members of the legislature worked against these old conditions and called for laws governing factory inspection, for workmen's compensation, and for the limitation of work for women and children to 54 hours, with 1 day's rest in 7. Those of us who joined in this movement in the legislature were called reformers, Socialists, and wild men.

We were opposed by many of the same organizations and the same individuals who are now crying aloud about the socialism involved in social-security legislation, in bank-deposit insurance, in farm credit, the saving of homes, in the protection of investors, and the regulation of public utilities. The reforms, however, for which we were condemned 24 years ago, are taken today as a matter of course. And so, I believe, will be regarded the reforms that now cause such concern to the reactionaries of 1935.

We come to an understanding of these new ways of protecting people because our knowledge enlarges and our capacity for organized action increases. People have learned that they can carry their burdens effectively only by cooperation. We have found out how to conquer the ravages of diseases that years ago were regarded as unavoidable and inevitable. We must learn that many other social ills can be cured.

PICTURES NEW INDIVIDUALISM

Let me emphasize that, serious as have been the errors of unrestrained individualism, I do not believe in abandoning the system of individual enterprise. The freedom and opportunity that have characterized American development in the past can be maintained if we recognize the fact that the individual system of our day calls for the collaboration of all of us to provide, at the least, security for all of us. Those words "freedom" and "opportunity" do not mean a license to climb upward by pushing other people down.

Any paternalistic system which tries to provide for security for every one from above only calls for an impossible task and a regimentation utterly uncongenial to the spirit of our people. But government cooperation to help make the system of free enterprise work, to provide that minimum security without which the competitive system cannot function, to restrain the kind of individual action which in the past has been harmful to the community—that kind of governmental cooperation is entirely consistent with the best tradition of America.

Just as the evolution of economic and social life has shown the need for new methods and practices, so has the new political life developed the need for new political practices and methods. Government now demands the best-trained brains of every business and profession. Government today requires higher and higher standards of those who would serve it. It must bring to its service greater and greater competence. The conditions of public work must be improved and protected. Mere party membership and loyalty can no longer be the exclusive test. We must be loyal, not merely to persons or parties but to the higher conceptions of ability and devotion that modern government requires.

GLOOMY PROPHETS IN EVERY AGE

There was a day when political sages, or those who controlled them, took the attitude that anything new, or what they called "new fangled", would lead to dire results. There is nothing new in those prophecies of gloom. I read these lines in a paper the other day—a little poem entitled "Going to the Dogs":

My grandpa notes the world's worn cogs,
And says we're going to the dogs;
His grandad in his house of logs,
Swore things were going to the dogs;
His dad, among the Flemish bogs,
Vowed things were going to the dogs;
The caveman in his queer skin togs,
Said things were going to the dogs;
But this is what I wish to state—
The dogs have had an awful wait.

I would be lacking in any sense of responsibility and lacking in elementary courage if I shared in such a hopeless attitude. I, for one, am willing to place my trust in the youth of America. If they demand action as well as preachments, I should be ashamed to chill their enthusiasm with the dire prophecy that to change is to destroy. I am unwilling to sneer at the vision of youth merely because vision is sometimes mistaken. But vision does not belong only to the young.

CALLS FOR UNITED MARCH

There are millions of older people who have vision, just as there are some younger men and women who are ready to put a weary, selfish, or greedy hand upon the clock of progress and turn it back.

We who seek to go forward must ever guard ourselves against a danger which history teaches. More than ever we cherish the elective form of democratic government, but progress under it can easily be retarded by disagreements that relate to method and to detail rather than to the broad objectives upon which we are agreed. It is as if all of us were united in the pursuit of a common goal, but that each and every one of us were marching along a separate road of our own. If we insist on choosing different roads, most of us will not reach our common destination.

The reason that the forces of reaction so often defeat the forces of progress is that the Tories of the world are agreed and united in standing still on the same old spot and, therefore, never run the danger of getting lost on divergent trails. One might remark in passing that one form of standing still on the same spot consists in agreeing to condemn all progress and letting it go at that.

Therefore to the American youth of all parties I submit a message of confidence—unite and challenge! Rules are not necessarily sacred; principles are. The methods of the old order are not, as some would have you believe, above the challenge of youth.

Let us carry on the good that the past gave us. The best of that good is the spirit of America. And the spirit of America is the spirit of inquiry of readjustment, of improvement; above all a spirit in which youth can find the fulfillment of its ideals. It is for the new generation to participate in the decisions and to give strength and spirit and continuity to our Government and to our national life.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION, FIRST SESSION, SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave to print in the RECORD a comprehensive review of the legislation of the present session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON subsequently submitted excerpts from an article appearing in the New York Times, dated Tuesday, August 27, 1935, by Hal H. Smith, giving a summary of the principal acts of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress and other material:

SUMMARY OF THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE FIRST SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

The close of the session of Congress showed a wide range of important legislation enacted. A summary of the principal measures adopted, their intent and effect, is presented.

AGRICULTURE

THE A. A. A. AMENDMENT ACT

(Approved Aug. 24, 1935. Public Law No. 320)

Designed to bring the farm program within the limits of constitutionality and to add to its effectiveness in raising farm purchasing power to the level set by Congress, the act makes no radical change on the program, but includes many provisions for strengthening and clarifying its operation.

Covers the question of constitutionality in three general provisions: (1) Seeks to plug every loophole against the charge of undue delegation of powers by Congress by spelling out in detail what shall be done and what cannot be done at every step of the A. A. A. program; (2) confines the program strictly to interstate and foreign commerce, as that term has been defined in decisions of the Supreme Court, in an effort to obviate any charge of invading the field that belongs to the States and at the same time makes provision for dovetailing Federal and State agricultural programs; (3) ratifies and confirms all past A. A. A. acts prior to the adoption of the amendments carried in this new act, including adjustment contracts with farmers, taxes, benefit payments, marketing agreements, and licenses to handlers of farm products.

Allows the institution of suits to recover processing taxes, but only after a claim has been presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with evidence that no part of the tax has been passed on to the consumer or back to the producer. Prohibits injunction suits to stop the collection of a tax in order to prevent tying up the farm program. Allows the taxpayer to obtain redress, if entitled to it, after he has paid his tax, by filing a claim refund.

Contains a new clause designed for the protection of consumers, making it clear that no steps can be taken to maintain prices above what is termed fair exchange value.

Authorizes the Ever-Normal granary plan, a method for keeping supplies of nonperishable crops stored on the farm as insurance against a shortage or violent price fluctuations.

Provides for control by quota of imported products when they enter in such quantities as to threaten the price structure of American-grown products.

Allows the use of 30 percent of receipts from import duties (about $92,000,000 this year) to subsidize the export of farm products, with the exception of raw cotton, or to increase the returns of producers on the part of the crop consumed in this country.

Strengthens the marketing agreement method for producers of milk, fruits, vegetables, soybeans, pecans and walnuts, tobacco and naval stores. Licensing handlers as a means for enforcing marketing agreements is done away with. Instead, marketing agreements are to be enforced by administrative orders, but these cannot apply to apples or to fruits and vegetables for canning, except olives and asparagus.

Authorizes a farm-adjustment program for potato growers.

Makes $10,000,000 in addition to present funds available to eliminate diseased cattle.

Appropriates funds from the $4,000,000,000 work-relief fund to carry out existing options for the purchase of submarginal land.

Eliminates price fixing for all commodities except milk.

Extends for another year the Smith-Kerr Tobacco Control Act and the Bankhead Cotton Control Act.

THE FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1935

(Approved June 3, 1935. Public Law No. 87)

Amends the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, the Federal Farm Loan Act, the Agricultural Marketing Act, and the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

Permits land bank commissioners to make loans secured by first or second liens on real property with maturities up to 43 years.

Enlarges the purposes for which land-bank commissioners may make loans to include all those for which the Federal land banks are authorized to make loans.

Makes the definition of the term "farmer" in the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 identical with the term "farmer" as defined in the amended Federal Farm Loan Act.

Extends until February 1, 1940, the time within which loans can be made by the land-bank commissioner; removes the present limitation ($600,000,000) on the amount of bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation which may be used in making such loans; and permits such loans to be made in consolidated farm-loan bonds, if acceptable to the borrower.

Reduces the interest rate paid by Federal land bank borrowers whose loans were obtained through national farm-loan associations or were outstanding on May 12, 1933, to a maximum of 3½ percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 1 year, beginning July 1, 1935, and to a maximum of 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years, commencing July 1, 1936.

Authorizes Federal intermediate credit banks to discount paper for banks for cooperatives and to make loans to such banks.

Permits the issuance of consolidated debentures by Federal intermediate credit banks, following substantially the same procedure as that followed by the Federal land banks in the issue of their consolidated bonds.

Provides that the rate of interest on any loan made by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration or a bank for cooperatives to any cooperative association on the security of commodities shall conform, as nearly as practicable, to the prevailing interest rate of commodity loans charged borrowers from the Federal intermediate credit bank of the district in which the principal office of the association is located.

Extends for an additional period of 2 years the authority of the land bank commissioner, under section 30 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to make loans to joint-stock land banks in order to further their orderly liquidation.

THE TOBACCO INSPECTION ACT

(Approved Aug. 23, 1935. Public Law No. 314)

Seeks to establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco and provide and maintain an official tobacco-inspection service.

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the marketing of tobacco and establish official standards for its grading; to demonstrate the official standards and prepare and distribute samples of these grades at reasonable charges for such service.

Empowers the Secretary of Agriculture to designate those auction markets where tobacco moves in commerce, but provides that before taking such action he shall determine the wishes of tobacco growers, who must approve such action by two-thirds majority of those voting on the question. At markets so designated, after not less than 30 days' public notice, no tobacco may be offered for sale until graded by an authorized representative of the Secretary.

Provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall order such reinspection, or appeal inspection, of tobacco as he may deem necessary for confirmation or reversal of certificates issued under the act.

Authorizes the Secretary to collect, publish, and distribute, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, without cost to the grower, timely information on the market supply and demand, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of tobacco.

THE A. A. A. RICE AMENDMENT ACT

(Approved Mar. 18, 1935. Public Law No. 20)

Levies a processing tax on rice, beginning April 1, 1935. Without such an amendment of the A. A. A. Act a processing tax could not have been made effective until the beginning of the next marketing year, August 1, 1935.

Provides that, for the period from April 1, 1935, to July 31, 1936, the processing tax with respect to rice shall be at the rate of 1 cent per pound of rough rice, subject to any modification of such rate made pursuant to any other provision of the act.

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue tax-payment warrants to growers who hold rough rice from the 1933 and 1934 crops and to millers holding stocks of rough rice which have been purchased at the prices specified in the existing marketing agreements and licenses. These warrants may be used in the payment of the processing tax on rice.

Eliminates the floor-stocks tax on clean rice in the hands of millers, jobbers, retailers, or others in the trade who, at the time of the passage of the act, had stocks on hand, in order to exempt from the tax all old-crop rice for which the marketing-agreement price had been paid.

THE FARM RESEARCH ACT

(Approved June 29, 1935. Public Law No. 182)

Directs the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct research into laws and principles underlying basic problems of agriculture in its broadest aspects; research relating to improvement of the quality of, and the development of new and improved methods of production, distribution, and new and extended uses and markets for agricultural commodities and byproducts and also research relating to the conservation, development, and use of land and water resources for agricultural purposes.

Appropriates for this purpose $1,000,000 annually for five fiscal years, beginning July 1, 1935, and $5,000,000 for each fiscal year after July 1, 1940.

Provides for further development of the cooperative extension system by appropriating $8,000,000 for such extension work in agriculture and home economics for the fiscal year 1936, and for each succeeding fiscal year $1,000,000 additional until the total appropriations shall amount to $12,000,000 annually, the appropriation to continue in the latter amount for each succeeding year.

AIR MAIL

THE AIR MAIL CONTRACT ACT

(Approved Feb. 21, 1935. Public Law No. 12)

Postpones from March 1, 1935, to April 1, 1936, the provision of section 15 of the Air Mail Act of June 12, 1934, that no contract for any primary air-mail route should be awarded to or extended for a contractor already holding contract for one primary route.

Makes no other change of any kind in the legislation previously enacted governing the carriage of air mail but obviates the letting of new contracts for a brief period pending action by Congress on the report of the Commission which was authorized to report recommendations for a national aviation policy.

BANKING

THE GLASS BANKING ACT OF 1935

(Approved Aug. 23, 1935. Public Law No. 305)

Seeks to provide for sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system through amendment of the Federal Reserve Act, reorganization of the Federal Reserve Board and technical amendments of the banking laws, and by making Federal deposit insurance of bank deposits permanent.

Reorganizes the Federal Reserves Board into a seven-member board, all to be appointed by the President and each to have the title of "governor" and serve a 14-year term. Changes the name of the Federal Reserve Board to the "Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System." The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency are eliminated from membership, ex officio, on the Board after February 1, 1936. The entire reorganization of the Board is to be effected by that date.

Creates a Federal open market committee, effective March 1, 1936, which shall consist of the 7 members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and 5 representatives of the 12 regional Federal Reserve banks, to be elected annually by designated regions, the committee to have power to control credit fluctuations by purchasing and selling Government bonds, notes, or other obligations of the United States on the open market through the Reserve banks. The open market committee is to have charge of open-market operations and the Reserve banks must act in accordance with its instructions.

Amends section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act to make eligible for purchase by Federal Reserve banks, without regard to maturities, direct obligations of the United States or obligations fully guaranteed by the United States, but provides that such direct and guaranteed obligations may be purchased only in the open market.

MAY DOUBLE RESERVES RATIO

Retains existing statutory requirements governing maintenance of reserves against deposits as a further check on the use of bank funds for speculation. Provides that by a vote of not less than 4 of the 7 members of the Board of Governors, the present requirements of 7, 10, and 13 percent could be doubled, but not lowered.

Allows Reserve banks to continue to propose changes in rediscount rates, subject to Board approval, but requires such rates to be restated "every 14 days, or oftener if deemed necessary by the Board."

Authorizes the President to designate one of the seven governors of the Federal Reserve System to act as its chairman and another to serve as vice chairman, each for 4 years; and gives the heads of the 12 Federal Reserve banks the new title of "president" instead of "governor" so as not to conflict with the new Reserve Board titles. The presidents of the Federal Reserve banks would be selected for 5-year terms by the boards of directors of the banks, subject to approval by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Permits national banking associations to make real-estate loans secured by first liens upon improved real estate, including improved farm land and improved business and residential properties, up to 50 percent of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security, for a term of not over 5 years, except in cases of amortized loans, when 60 percent may be loaned for a 10-year term. Forbids national banking associations to make such loans in an aggregate sum in excess of the capital and surplus of the bank, or in excess of 60 percent of its time and savings deposits, whichever is the greater.

BROADENS LOAN REQUIREMENTS

Broadens the eligibility requirements of paper upon which the Federal Reserve banks may make loans.

Makes permanent the temporary law, expiring August 31, 1935, fully insuring bank deposits up to $5,000 for a depositor. Provides that the annual assessment on banks for insurance fund membership shall be one-twelfth of 1 percent upon their average deposit liability.

Requires all State banks with deposits of $1,000,000 or more to join the Federal Reserve System by July 1, 1942, if they desire to continue to have their deposits insured.

Permits nonmember banks to terminate their insured status within 30 days of effective date of the Banking Act of 1935 by giving written notice to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Provides that the total amount of the securities of one issuer or obligor held by a national banking association for its own account shall not exceed 10 percent of the actually paid-in and unimpaired capital stock and surplus fund, except that this provision shall not apply to lawful holdings as of the effective date of the Banking Act of 1935.

Requires the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever in the judgment of the directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation additional funds are required for insurance purposes, to purchase obligations of the corporation in an additional amount not exceeding $250,000,000.

THE DEPOSIT INSURANCE EXTENSION ACT

(Approved June 28, 1935. Public Resolution No. 38)

Extends for 60 days, or until August 31, 1935, the temporary plan for Government insurance of bank deposits up to $5,000.

Provides that the deposits in banks which, on June 30, 1935, were members of the fund should continue to be insured during the extended period to August 31, 1935, without liability on the part of such banks to further calls or assessments.

BANKRUPTCY

THE LIVESTOCK BANKRUPTCY ACT

(Approved May 15, 1935. Public Law No. 60)

Amends the National Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, so as to permit livestock raisers to take advantage of that act.

Enlarges the definition of "farmer", which has been restricted by the courts in some instances to include not only individuals primarily bona fide engaged in producing products of the soil, but also those who are primarily bona fide personally engaged in dairy farming, the production of poultry or livestock, or the production of poultry or livestock products in their unmanufactured state.

THE FARM MORTGAGE ACT

(Approved Aug. 28, 1935. Public Law No. 384)

Amends section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, so as to permit farmers threatened with foreclosure, and unable to obtain relief through conciliation methods, to go into bankruptcy.

Provides, in a new subsection (s), written to conform to the Supreme Court's decision of last spring holding the original 5-year moratorium law invalid, that any farmer failing to obtain a composition or extension, or if he feels aggrieved by a composition or extension proposal, may ask to be adjudged a bankrupt. He may also ask the court that all his property, wherever located, be appraised, and that his exemptions, as prescribed by State law, be set aside to him, and that he be allowed to retain possession, under supervision and control of the court, of all the remainder of his property, including his encumbered exemptions under terms and conditions set forth in the new act.

Authorizes courts to stay all proceedings against such a farm debtor for 3 years, during which time the debtor shall be permitted to retain possession of all or any part of his property, in the custody and under the supervision and control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental for that part of the property of which he retains possession. The rental would be paid into court to be used, first, for payment of taxes and upkeep, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors and applied on their claims.

Provides that at the end of 3 years, or prior thereto, the property having been appraised, the debtor could regain unencumbered possession of it by paying into court the amount of the appraisal of the property of which he retains possession, including the amount of encumbrances on his exemptions, up to the amount of the appraisal, less the amount paid on principal.

Directs that upon request in writing by any secured creditor or creditors holding a lien on the property, the court shall order its sale at public auction. The debtor would be allowed 90 days in which to redeem any property sold at such a sale by paying the amount for which the property is sold, with interest at 5 percent, to the court, and he may then apply for his discharge from bankruptcy, as provided for in the act.

COMMUNICATIONS

THE TELEPHONE INQUIRY ACT

(Approved Mar. 15, 1935. Public Resolution No. 8)

Directs the Federal Communications Commission to investigate and report to Congress on the following matters with respect to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and all other companies engaged directly or indirectly in telephone communication in interstate commerce, including all of their subsidiary, affiliated, associated, and holding companies in which any of them have any direct or indirect financial interest or in which any of their officers or directors hold office or any control:

1. The corporate and financial history and the capital structure and relationship of such company and of its subsidiary, affiliated, associated, and holding companies, including the determination of whether such structure may enable them to evade State or Federal regulation, or taxation or to conceal, pyramid, or absorb profits, or to do any act contrary to the public interest.

2. The extent and character of intercompany service contracts and all transactions between telephone companies and their subsidiaries and holding companies, etc., and particularly between the A. T. & T. Co. and the Western Electric Co. and other manufacturers of electrical equipment.

3. The reasons for failure generally to reduce telephone rates and charges during years of declining prices.

4. The effect of monopolistic control upon reasonableness of rates.

5. The effect of mergers, consolidations, and acquisitions of control by telephone companies, including "write-ups" in purchase prices.

6. Methods of competition with other companies or industries.

7. Whether the companies, through propaganda or money expenditure, have sought to control channels of publicity to control public opinion.

Makes $750,000 available for the inquiry.

CONSERVATION

THE SOIL-EROSION ACT

(Approved Apr. 27, 1935. Public Law No. 46)

Recognizes that unless soil erosion can be controlled on farm, grazing, and forest lands the prosperity of the United States cannot be permanently maintained; declares it to be the policy of Congress to provide permanently for the control and prevention of such erosion and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to coordinate all Federal activities in that direction.

Authorizes him to conduct soil-erosion surveys, investigations, and research; to carry out preventive measures, including engineering operations, methods of cultivation, the growing of vegetation, and changes in use of land; to enter into agreements with, or to furnish financial aid to, any agency, governmental or otherwise, for the purposes of the act; and to acquire lands, or rights or interests therein, by purchase, gift, condemnation, or otherwise wherever necessary to protect land resources against soil erosion.

Authorizes certain conditions to the extending of benefits under the act to lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies.

Directs the Secretary of Agriculture to establish an agency to be known as the "Soil Conservation Service" to exercise the powers conferred by the act and authorizes the utilization of the Soil Erosion Service, making the latter's unexpended funds available until June 30, 1937.

CRIME

THE FEDERAL MARSHALS ACT

(Approved June 15, 1935. Public Law No. 146)

Amends and clarifies existing law by providing that United States marshals may serve process in any Federal judicial district.

Empowers Federal marshals and their deputies to make arrests without warrants for any offense against laws of the United States committed in their presence, also for any felony cognizable under Federal laws where the felony has in fact been or is being committed and they have reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing it.

Provides Federal statutory authority for Federal marshals and their deputies to carry firearms.

THE POULTRY RACKET ACT

(Approved Aug. 14, 1935. Public Law No. 272)

Seeks to break up the poultry racket in New York and New Jersey or elsewhere which is interstate by placing the live-poultry industry under the Packers and Stockyards Act and thereby undertaking to establish correct and reasonable charges for all services rendered at the unloading point in destination of shipment.

Adds a new title V to the Packers and Stockyards Act, approved August 15, 1921, so as to bring the shipment of such poultry within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

GAME PROTECTION

THE GAME AND WILDLIFE ACT OF 1935

(Approved June 15, 1935. Public Law No. 148)

Amends the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of 1934 by liberalizing and simplifying the issuance of stamps by the Post Office Department.

Amends the Lacey Act of 1900, which in large part was designed to aid the States by prohibiting shipment in interstate commerce of game and other wildlife killed or shipped in violation of their laws so that it will apply to present-day vehicles and methods of transportation such as the automobile and airplane.

Extends the operation of the Lacey Act to foreign commerce in game and wildlife and puts teeth into that act, which made no provision for its enforcement, by imposing penalties for its violation.

Authorizes payment to the States of 25 percent of any revenue that may be derived from wildlife refuges and reservations administered by the Department of Agriculture.

Empowers the President to allocate out of the $4,880,000,000 appropriation made in the Work Relief Act of April 8, 1935, such sum as he may deem necessary or advisable for the acquisition of areas in carrying on the Government's program of wildlife restoration, rehabilitation, and protection.

FORESTS

THE NATIONAL FORESTS CONTRACT ACT

(Approved Apr. 17, 1935. Public Law No. 38)

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to terminate contracts for the purchase of national-forest timber, made prior to June 30, 1934, without the collection of damages for failure on the part of the purchaser to cut all of the timber, except as the value of the remaining timber may have been reduced by the cutting and removal done by the purchaser.

Provides that all applications for action by the Secretary under authority of the act must be submitted before April 17, 1936.

HOUSING

THE HOME MORTGAGE RELIEF ACT

(Approved May 28, 1935. Public Law No. 76)

Liberalizes the Federal Home Loan Bank Act so as to facilitate the functioning of the Federal home-loan banks and enable their members to carry home mortgages over longer terms and on an easier basis. Extends the limitation of existing law with respect to the maturity of mortgages which may be accepted as collateral for advances by Federal home-loan banks from 15 to 20 years and makes all home mortgages up to $20,000 in amount—instead of those on properties valued up to $20,000—eligible as such collateral.

Increases the borrowing power of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation from $3,000,000,000 to $4,750,000,000 to provide for applications already filed and for applicants who in good faith sought relief prior to the enactment of the new act or who filed their applications within 30 days thereafter.

Provides that for the purposes of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 assessments levied upon real property by special districts organized in any State for public improvements should be treated as general-tax levies, leaving it to the Home Loan Bank Board to determine the reasonableness of the annual tax burden on property securing loans by the Corporation.

Removes the prohibition against making a deduction from the loanable value of the property where the aggregate amount of the annual taxes, levies, and assessments does not exceed 5 percent of the value of the property as determined by the appraisal.

Permits State-chartered institutions which are converted into Federal savings and loan associations to continue to make loans in the territory in which they made loans while operating under a State charter.

Authorizes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to purchase: (1) Federal home-loan bank bonds, debentures or notes (including consolidated bonds or debentures); (2) full-paid income shares of Federal savings and loan associations on the same terms and conditions and within the same limitations as in the case of purchases of such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury after the funds made available have been exhausted; and (3) shares in any institution which is a member of a Federal home-loan bank and whose accounts are insured under title IV of the National Housing Act, if the institution is eligible for such insurance. The total amount available to the Corporation under this section was fixed at $300,000,000.

Increases by $200,000 the amounts made available to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for encouraging the promotion, organization, and development of Federal loans and savings associations.

Extends from January 1, 1936, to April 1, 1936, the time within which loans must be made in order to be eligible for insurance under section 2 of the National Housing Act and makes loans up to $50,000 eligible for such insurance if made for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements with respect to real property "improved by, or to be converted into apartment or multiple-family houses, hotels, offices, business or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, or manufacturing or industrial plants."

LABOR

THE WAGNER LABOR RELATIONS ACT

(Approved July 5, 1935. Public Law No. 198)

Creates a permanent National Labor Relations Board of three members, appointed by the President with Senate consent, to promote equality of bargaining powers between employers and employees and to diminish the causes of labor disputes. This permanent Board replaces the old temporary National Labor Relations Board established under Executive orders of President Roosevelt.

Declares collective bargaining to be a national policy.

Provides that employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

Lays down five unfair labor practices by forbiding employers—

1. To interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in the collective bargaining section (sec. 7) of the act.

2. To dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it.

3. To encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment.

4. To discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee for filing charges or giving testimony under the act.

5. To refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of employees subject to the provisions of section 9a of the act which provides that bargaining representatives chosen by a majority of such unit exclusively in bargaining on pay, wages, hours, and other conditions. A minority would be allowed to present "grievances."

Empowers the Board to decide in each case whether, in order to insure to employees the full benefit of their right of self-organization and to collective bargaining, and otherwise effectuate the policies of the act, the unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining shall be the employer unit, plant unit, or any subdivision thereof.

Directs the Board to prevent any person from engaging in any of the five enumerated unfair labor practices affecting commerce, this power to be exclusive and not affected by any other means of adjustment or prevention that has been or may be established by agreement, code, law, or otherwise.

Stiplates that nothing in the act shall be construed so as to interfere with or impede or diminish in any way the right to strike.

THE EMPLOYMENT SERVICE ACT

(Approved May 10, 1935. Public Law No. 54)

Amends the so-called "Wagner-Peyser Act" of June 6, 1933, so as to alter the amount apportioned to certain States for public employment offices affiliated with the United States Employment Service.

Provides for an apportionment of not less than $10,000 to each State for its assistance in the establishment of local employment offices. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act the appropriation of $3,000,000 annually until June 30, 1938, was to be apportioned among the States in the proportion of their population to the total population of the Nation. By strict application of this rule four States—Delaware, Nevada, Vermont, and Wyoming—receive less than $10,000 each.

THE GUFFEY COAL BILL

(Approved Aug. 30, 1935. Public Law No. 402)

Seeks to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce.

Recognizes and declares that the mining and distribution of bituminous coal are affected with a national public interest and that the general welfare of the Nation requires that the industry be regulated as provided in the act.

Establishes in the Interior Department a National Bituminous Coal Commission of five members, appointed by the President to administer the act.

Sets up in the Interior Department the office of consumers' counsel, appointed by the President, to appear in the interest of the consuming public in any proceeding before the Commission, and also to conduct independent investigation of matters relative to the soft-coal industry.

Imposes upon the sale or other disposal of all bituminous coal produced in the United States a punitive excise tax of 15 percent on the sale price at the mine, to be payable to the United States by producers of such coal. Coal producers who file with the National Bituminous Coal Commission their acceptance of the Bituminous Coal Code provided for in the act are to be entitled to a drawback in the form of a credit upon the amount of such tax equivalent to 90 percent of the tax.

Directs the Commission to formulate a Bituminous Coal Code, which shall contain certain mandatory conditions, provisions, and obligations set forth in the act.

Provides for the organization of 23 district boards of coal producers, each district consisting of not less than 3 nor more than 17 members; permits the establishment or maintenance of marketing agencies within any district by a voluntary association of producers within any producing field in such district, and vests district boards and marketing agencies with power to adopt rules of procedure, subject to approval of the Commission.

Authorizes the district boards, on their own motion or when directed by the Commission, to establish minimum prices on coal produced in a district; to make such classification of coal and price variations as to mines and consuming market areas as the boards may deem necessary and proper, and, in order to sustain the stabilization of wages, working conditions, and maximum hours of labor, the act directs that these prices shall be established so as to yield a return per net ton for each district in a minimum price area equal as nearly as possible to the weighted average of the total costs, per net ton, of the tonnage of such minimum price area.

Reenacts and makes applicable to the bituminous-coal industry the provisions of section 7a of the National Recovery Act giving to labor the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing free from interference, restraint, or coercion of employers.

Creates a Bituminous Coal Labor Board of three members appointed by the President, to see that the labor-relations provisions of the act are carried out, adjudicate disputes, and act as mediator in any dispute between a producer and its employees where such dispute is not determined by the tribunal set up in a bona fide collective contract.

LIQUOR

THE FEDERAL ALCOHOL CONTROL ACT

(Approved Aug. 29, 1935. Public Law No. 401)

Creates a Federal Alcohol Administration as a division in the Treasury to exercise control over the liquor traffic. This Administration is to be headed by an administrator appointed by the President.

Makes it unlawful, except pursuant to a basic permit issued under this act by the Administrator, to engage in the business of importing liquor, wine, or malt beverages, or to sell or ship liquor so imported. This provision becomes effective 60 days after the Administrator takes office.

Makes it unlawful, except pursuant to a basic permit, to engage in distilling liquor, producing wine, rectifying or blending distilled spirits or wine, or bottling or warehousing of distilled spirits, or to sell or ship the same, also effective 60 days after the Administrator takes office.

Makes it unlawful, effective March 1, 1936, to engage in the business of purchasing for resale at wholesale distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, except under a basic permit.

Stipulates that basic permits shall be given (1) to any person who on May 25, 1935, held a basic permit as distiller, rectifier, wine producer, or importer issued by a Federal agency, and (2) any other person, unless the Administrator finds that such person does not fall within definitions in the act.

Directs that all basic permits shall be conditioned upon compliance with the requirements of section 5 (relating to unfair competition and unlawful practices), of section 6 (relating to bulk sales and bottling), of the twenty-first amendment and relating to its enforcement, and of all other Federal laws relating to distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, including taxes respecting them.

Makes it unlawful for any distiller, brewer, rectifier, blender, or other producer to indulge in various kinds of unfair competition and unlawful practices specifically forbidden by section 5 of the act. These practices relate to exclusive outlets, commercial bribery, consignment sales, labeling, advertising, and other matters.

Provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or otherwise dispose of distilled spirits in bulk except under regulations of the Administrator for export, or to import, or to the following: Distilled spirits in bulk, except, under such regulations, for sale or use by the following: A distiller, rectifier of distilled spirits, person operating a bonded warehouse qualified under the internal-revenue laws or a class 8 bonded warehouse qualified under the customs laws, a wine maker for the fortification of wines, a proprietor of an industrial alcohol plant, or an agency of the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof.

Defines the term in bulk to mean containers having a capacity in excess of 1 wine-gallon.

Abolishes the temporary Federal Alcohol Control Administration which President Roosevelt established under the provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act. This becomes effective when the new Administrator takes office.

MISCELLANEOUS

THE FEDERAL REGISTER ACT

(Approved July 26, 1935. Public Law No. 220)

Provides for the custody in The National Archives establishment of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents and their prompt printing and distribution by the Public Printer in a new Federal serial publication to be known as the "Federal Register."

THE CENTRAL STATISTICAL ACT

(Approved July 25, 1935. Public Law No. 219)

Provides for the creation of a Central Statistical Board to plan and promote the improvement, development, and coordination of, and the elimination of duplication in, statistical services carried on by or subject to the supervision of the Federal Government, and, so far as may be practicable, of other statistical services in the United States.

MONETARY

THE GOLD CLAUSE ACT

(Approved Aug. 24, 1935. Public Resolution No. 63)

Provides that lawful holders of coins and currencies of the United States shall be entitled to exchange them, dollar for dollar, for other coins or currencies which may be lawfully acquired and are legal tender for public and private debts.

Permits the owners of the gold-clause securities of the United States, at their election, to receive immediate payment of the stated dollar amount thereof with interest to the date of payment or to prior maturity or to prior redemption date, whichever is earlier.

Directs the Secretary of the Treasury to make such exchanges and payments upon presentation in accordance with the act and in the manner provided in regulations prescribed by him.

Stipulates that the period within which the owners of gold-clause securities shall be entitled to receive payment prior to maturity shall expire January 1, 1936, or on such later date, not after July 1, 1936, as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Withdraws any consent which the United States may have given to the assertion against it of any right, privilege, or power whether by way of suit, counter-claim, set-off recoupment, or other affirmative action or defense in its own name, or in the name of any of its officers or instrumentalities in any proceeding (1) upon any gold-clause securities of the United States or for interest thereon, or (2) upon any coin or currency of the United States, or (3) upon any claim or demand arising out of any surrender, seizure, or acquisition of any such coin or currency or of any gold or silver and involving the effect or validity of any change in the metallic content of the dollar or other regulation of the value of money.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

THE WAR DEPARTMENT SUPPLY ACT

(Approved Apr. 9, 1935. Public Law No. 29)

Appropriates $401,998,170 for all activities under control of the War Department, of which $341,348,204 is for military purposes which are chargeable to the national defense, and $60,649,966 for nonmilitary activities, including the Panama Canal, river and harbor work, and flood-control projects.

Raises the average enlisted strength of the Army from 118,750 to 165,000 men, the increase of 46,250 enlisted men extending to all branches.

Grants the Army Air Corps $45,383,400, an increase of $17,986,947 over the total for the current fiscal year, of which $19,138,000 is immediately available for production or purchase of new airplanes, their equipment and accessories, and $2,500,000 for procurement of spare engines and parts for airplanes and engines; and, in addition, authorizes the making of contracts for $7,686,753 for equipment, spare parts, and accessories for planes.

Makes a direct appropriation of $500,000 for increasing the enlisted strength of the National Guard by 5,000 men, and appropriates $4,452,304 for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps; $2,000,000 for training about 30,000 in citizens' military training camps, and $6,372,178 for the Organized Reserves.

THE WILCOX AIR BASE ACT

(Approved Aug. 12, 1935. Public Law No. 263)

Authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to determine in all strategic areas of the United States, including Alaska and overseas possessions and holdings, the location of such additional permanent Air Corps stations and depots as he deems essential for the effective peace-time training of the General Headquarters Air Force and the Air Corps components of overseas garrisons.

Directs that, in determining the locations of the new primary air base, consideration be given to the location of bases as follows: (1) The Atlantic Northeast—to provide for training in cold weather and fog; (2) the Atlantic seacoast and Caribbean areas—to permit training in long-range operations, especially those incident to reinforcing the Panama Canal; (3) the Southeastern States—to provide a depot essential to the maintenance of the General Headquarters Air Force; (4) the Pacific Northwest—to establish and maintain air communication with Alaska; (5) Alaska—for training under conditions of extreme cold; (6) the Rocky Mountain area—to provide a depot essential to the maintenance of the General Headquarters Air Force and afford opportunity for training in operations from field at high altitudes; (7) such intermediate stations as will provide for transcontinental movements incident to the concentration of the General Headquarters for maneuvers.

Authorizes the appropriation of such money as may be necessary for the purposes of the act.

THE NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS' ACT

(Approved June 19, 1935. Public Law No. 154)

Gives the President the right to order officers of the National Guard of the United States to active duty in an emergency at any time and for the period thereof, provided that, except in time of a national emergency expressly declared by Congress, no officer of the National Guard shall be employed on active duty for more than 15 days in any calendar year without his consent.

Increases the number of junior officers in order to make it possible that the most capable young men may be retained as commissioned officers.

Creates an inactive Reserve, and enables the National Guard to have some connection with those officers who do not wish to remain as active officers.

THE NAVAL SUPPLY ACT

(Approved June 24, 1935. Public Law No. 163)

Carries $458,684,379 in direct appropriations for the Naval Establishment and reappropriates enough money to bring the total to $466,184,379.

Appropriates $126,795,000 for new warships, including those already under construction, including sufficient funds for the initial year's work on 24 vessels in the current year's building program. The latter includes a $27,895,000 aircraft carrier, two $19,150,000 light cruisers, 15 destroyers, and 6 submarines.

Grants an appropriation of $26,515,660 for new airplanes and, in addition, authorizes the Navy Department to enter into contracts for $6,000,000 worth of planes to be appropriated for later.

Provides for an increase of 11,000 enlisted men, bringing the authorized enlisted strength to 93,500 men.

Increases the allowance for the Naval Academy so as to permit the appointment of four midshipmen, instead of three, by each Member of Congress.

Reopens the Great Lakes Naval Training Station and also the Newport, R. I., training station.

THE NAVAL AVIATION CADET ACT

(Approved Apr. 15, 1935. Public Law No. 37)

Creates the grade of aviation cadet in the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve.

Empowers the Secretary of the Navy to appoint aviation cadets from male citizens of the United States to serve on active duty for a period of 4 years, unless sooner released. At the completion of their active duty they would be eligible for commission in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve.

Provides for pay of aviation cadets while on active duty undergoing training at the rate of $75 a month, including extra pay for flying risk, as provided by law, and at $125 a month while on active duty not undergoing training.

NEUTRALITY

THE NEUTRALITY ACT

(Approved Aug. 31, 1935. Public Resolution No. 67)

Directs that, upon the outbreak or during the progress of war between foreign states, the President shall proclaim the fact and thereafter it shall be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States or its possessions to any port of such belligerent states, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country. Violations of this provision are punishable by $10,000 fine or 5 years' imprisonment, or both. Except with respect to prosecutions committed or forfeitures incurred prior to March 1, 1936, this section and all proclamations issued thereunder shall not be effective after February 29, 1936.

Establishes a National Munitions Control Board, consisting of the Secretaries of State, Treasury, War, Navy, and Commerce, to carry out the act.

Requires all persons engaged in manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, and implements of war to register with the Secretary of State within 90 days after the act takes effect, listing the arms they manufacture, export, or import. The registrants would pay a fee of $500 and, upon receipt of this, the Secretary of State would issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years.

Provides that all persons required to register shall maintain, subject to inspection of the Board, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Board shall prescribe.

Forbids any person to export or attempt to export from the United States, or to import to the United States, any of the munitions referred to in the act without a license from the Board.

Makes it unlawful, after the President issues a proclamation under the act, to carry munitions to belligerent ports, or to neutral ports for transshipment to belligerent countries named in the proclamation as being at war, under penalties of $10,000 fine or 5 years' imprisonment, or both, and forfeiture of munitions and vessel.

Authorizes the President to lay down conditions barring foreign submarines from American ports, except under such conditions as he may prescribe, during any war in which the United States is a neutral.

Directs that whenever, during any war in which the United States is a neutral, the President finds the maintenance of peace between this country and foreign nations, protection of lives of American citizens, protection of the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or the security of the United States are involved, he shall so proclaim, and thereafter no citizen of the United States shall travel on any vessel of any belligerent nation except at his own risk, unless in accordance with rules prescribed by the President.

PETROLEUM

THE "HOT OIL" ACT

(Approved Feb. 22, 1935. Public Law No. 14)

Regulates interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment or transportation of contraband or "hot oil" from any State in which produced.

Calls for Federal confiscation of illegal petroleum taken across a State line.

Authorizes the President to lift the prohibition of interstate movement of contraband petroleum whenever he finds that the amount of petroleum and petroleum products moving in interstate commerce is so limited as to be the cause, in whole or in part, of a lack of parity between supply and consumptive demand resulting in an undue burden on or restriction of interstate commerce in petroleum and its products.

Stipulates that if the section of the measure giving the President authority to so act is held invalid the prohibition against shipment in interstate commerce shall still be in force.

Makes the legislation effective until June 16, 1937.

THE OIL AND GAS PROSPECTING ACT

(Approved Aug. 21, 1935. Public Law No. 297½)

Amends the Oil Leasing Act of 1920 by authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to grant prospecting permits giving the exclusive right, for not exceeding 2 years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are not within any known geological structure or producing field, subject to specified conditions and requirements that must be met by the applicant.

Stipulates that upon discovery of valuable deposits of oil or gas, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease of one-fourth of the land embraced in the permit.

POSTAL SERVICE

THE M'KELLAR-MEAD 40-HOUR MAIL ACT

(Approved Aug. 14, 1935. Public Law No. 275)

Provides a 40-hour week for 123,000 postal employees, effective October 1, 1935.

Affects supervisors, clerks, special clerks, carriers, rural-delivery men, mail equipment shop workers, laborers in first- and second-class post offices, cleaners, janitors, telephone operators, and elevator conductors.

Extends the benefits of the act to railway postal clerks by providing that the service of such clerks assigned to road duty shall be based on an average not exceeding 6 hours and 40 minutes daily for 306 days annually and that railway postal clerks required to perform over 6 hours' and 40 minutes' service daily shall be paid in cash at the annual rate of pay or granted compensatory time, at their option, for such overtime.

POWER

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY ACT

(Approved Aug. 31, 1935. Public Law No. 412)

Amends the organic T. V. A. Act to give clarifying and remedial legislation to the Tennessee Valley Authority, based upon its 2 years of operation.

Gives the T. V. A. definite sanction to sell surplus power, a right challenged in the courts in rulings on injunctions brought under the original T. V. A. Act of 1933.

Affirms the right of the T. V. A. to sell electricity to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations within transmission distance from its dams, and specifically mentions the construction of Norris, Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams, along with the existing Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals, as being necessary in the unified development of the Tennessee River system for navigation, flood-control, and power purposes.

Authorizes the T. V. A. to utilize its yet unused bond issues of $50,000,000 for loans to States, counties, and municipalities to enable them to acquire electric distribution facilities.

Empowers the T. V. A. to construct such dams and reservoirs in the Tennessee River and its tributaries as, in conjunction with the Wilson, Norris, Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams, would provide a 9-foot channel in the Tennessee River from Knoxville to its mouth.

Permits T. V. A. regulation of power-resale rate schedules.

Grants power to acquire existing electric facilities used in serving farms and small villages.

Directs the Comptroller General to audit T. V. A. transactions at such times as he shall determine, not less frequently than once in each fiscal year, but specifically restrains the Comptroller General from making his report on his periodic audit of T. V. A. accounts until the corporation shall have reasonable opportunity to examine the exceptions and criticisms of the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office and to point out errors therein, explain or answer the same. Assesses the General Accounting Office for the cost of such audits with the exception of such part of such expenses as may be allocated to the cost of generating, transmitting, and distributing electric energy.

Affirms the right of the corporation to exercise its own judgment in contract awarding.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE

THE R. F. C. EXTENSION ACT

(Approved Jan. 31, 1935. Public Law No. 1)

Extends the lending power and other active functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, or until February 1, 1937.

Provides that the Corporation may make disbursement at any time prior to January 31, 1936, on account of any commitment heretofore made to make a loan or subscribe to preferred stock or purchase capital notes or debentures.

Provides for loans or advances, or renewals of extension thereof, to mature not later than January 31, 1945, instead of February 1, 1940, as under previously existing law.

Empowers the Corporation to require, as a condition of making, renewing, or extending a loan to a railroad for more than 5 years, that arrangements be made to reduce or amortize its indebtedness according to a plan approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Authorizes the R. F. C. to assist in the reestablishment of a normal mortgage market by subscribing for or making loans upon the nonassessable stock of any class of any national mortgage association organized under the National Housing Act and of any mortgage-loan company, trust company, saving and loan association, or other similar financial institution. The borrowing powers of the R. F. C. are increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this section.

Continues the Commodity Credit Corporation until April 1, 1937, and the export-import banks to June 16, 1937.

Enlarges aid to industry by authorizing the R. F. C. to lend to any institution, now or hereafter established, financing principally the sale of electrical, plumbing, or other household appliances, both urban and rural.

Grants power to the R. F. C. to make loans to recognized and established concerns and individuals engaged in mining, milling, or smelting ores.

RECOVERY

THE N. R. A. EXTENSION ACT

(Approved June 14, 1935. Public Resolution No. 26)

Extends the N. R. A. in skeletonized form until April 1, 1936.

Repeals all provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act delegating power to the President to approve or prescribe codes of fair competition and providing for the enforcement of such codes.

Provides that the exemption (from the antitrust laws) provided in section 5 of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act shall extend only to agreements and action thereunder (1) putting into effect the requirements of section 7a, including minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor; and (2) prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including antitrust laws, or which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

RELIEF

THE WORK RELIEF ACT

(Approved Apr. 8, 1935. Public Resolution No. 11)

Appropriates $4,000,000,000 in a new sum, together with $880,000,000 in existing balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Public Works Administration, to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President to provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects.

Earmarks the $4,000,000,000 appropriation in eight general classifications of projects, intended to cover every possible line of public works, as follows:

(a) Highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination, $800,000,000.

(b) Rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas and water conservation, transmountain water diversion, and irrigation and reclamation, $500,000,000.

(c) Rural electrification, $100,000,000.

(d) Housing, $450,000,000.

(e) Assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons, $300,000,000.

(f) Civilian Conservation Corps, $600,000,000.

(g) Loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, possessions, including their subdivisions and agencies, municipalities, and the District of Columbia, and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, $900,000,000.

(h) Sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, forestation, flood control, rivers and harbors, and miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000.

Gives to the President full authority to fix wage scales on these works, with the limitation that he shall pay prevailing wages, according to the Davis-Bacon Act, on strictly Federal building projects, and that other wages shall not be lower than existing private scales.

Authorizes the President to make loans to farmers, farm tenants, croppers, or farm laborers for the purchase of farm lands and necessary equipment.

Continues in full force and effect until June 30, 1936, the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933.

Authorizes continuation of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works until June 30, 1937.

Extends to March 31, 1937, the authority of the President under the act of March 31, 1933, for the relief of employment through the performance of useful public works under which the C. C. C. was established.

THE DISASTER LOAN ACT

(Approved July 26, 1935. Public Law No. 224)

Authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations, with or without capital stock, organized for the purpose of financing the acquisition of home or building sites in replacement of sites formerly occupied by buildings where such sites are declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake; and for the purpose of financing the repair or construction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood control, communication, or transportation systems, damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, or flood in the years 1934, 1935, and 1936.

SHIPPING

THE COASTWISE TRADE ACT OF 1935

(Approved July 2, 1935. Public Law No. 191)

Amends section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920 so as to prohibit the following classes of vessels from engaging in the coastwise trade:

1. Vessels built in or documented under the laws of the United States and later sold to foreign owners.

2. Vessels built in the United States for foreign countries or foreign purchasers.

Prevents the repatriation of old ships which originally qualified for the coastwise trade of the United States and have been sold and are trying to return.

SOCIAL SECURITY

(Approved Aug. 14, 1935. Public Law No. 271)

Provides for the establishment of a system of Federal old-age benefits and undertakes to enable the States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of State unemployment compensation laws.

Creates a bipartisan Social Security Board of three members, to administer the program independently of the Department of Labor. They are to be appointed by the President, by consent of the Senate, and serve 6-year terms, except that of the first three members appointed, one would hold office for 2 years, another for 4 years, and the third for 6 years.

Authorizes an appropriation of $49,750,000 for the current fiscal year, and so much as may be needed thereafter, to enable each State to furnish financial assistance as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to aged needy persons more than 65 years old. Federal grants are authorized on a 50-50 matching basis with the States, except that the Federal Government's share in no case would exceed $15 a month.

Provides for a long-range contributory old-age pension system, to be financed by an income tax on employees and a pay-roll tax on employers, starting in each case at 1 percent in 1937 and rising each 3 years until 1949, when each contribution is to be 3 percent. Under the operation of the system, each qualified worker who retires at the age of 65, but not prior to January 1, 1942, would receive a monthly pension until his death ranging from $10 to $85, depending upon the total amount of wages earned by the beneficiary after December 31, 1936, and before he reaches retirable age.

Provides for a Federal-State system of unemployment compensation by Federal grants in aid, based on the imposition of a uniform pay-roll excise tax on employers.

Authorizes an appropriation of $24,750,000 for the current fiscal year and such amounts as may be needed in future years to enable each State to furnish financial assistance as far as practicable under the conditions in such State to needy dependent children.

Authorizes an appropriation of $3,800,000 a year, beginning with the current fiscal year, to assist the States in promoting the health of mothers and children especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress.

Authorizes an appropriation of $2,850,000 a year, beginning with the fiscal year 1936, to assist States in providing medical, surgical, and corrective services for crippled children, the Children's Bureau to operate with State public welfare agencies.

Authorizes an appropriation of $1,500,000 to aid State agencies in caring for homeless and neglected children.

Authorizes an appropriation of $841,000 for the fiscal years 1936 and 1937, $1,938,000 a year thereafter to supplement and strengthen State vocational rehabilitation of the physically disabled and $8,000,000 annually for assistance to the States and their political subdivisions in maintaining adequate public health services, as well as $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1936, and as much as may be needed annually thereafter to assist State plans for aiding the needy blind, the Federal grants for the latter to be made on a 50-50 matching basis to States meeting set standards.

TAXATION

THE REVENUE ACT OF 1935

(Approved Aug. 30, 1935. Public Law No. 407)

Amends the existing revenue laws so as to yield an estimated additional revenue of $250,000,000 from the following changes in tax rates:

Estate taxes: Increases the rates of the present estate taxes, beginning the impost at 2 percent on net estates of $10,000 and ranging upward to 67 percent on that part of the estate between $10,000,000 and $20,000,000, 69 percent on that part between $20,000,000 to $50,000,000, and to a maximum of 70 percent on all above $50,000,000. In addition the specific exemption is lowered from $50,000 (in existing law) to $40,000 thereby providing for a thoroughly upward revision affecting every estate-tax bracket. (This section of the new act is a complete substitute for the inheritance tax as requested by the President and as adopted by the House but rejected in conference.) Under existing law estate taxes begin at 1 percent on the first $10,000 and range up to 60 percent on that part of the estate over $10,000,000. The new estate-tax provision is effective as to decedents who die after the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935.

Gift taxes: Revises the existing gift taxes so as to make them three-fourths of the new estate-tax schedule. The new gift-tax rates begin at 1½ percent on the first $10,000 and range up to 50¼ percent on $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, 51¾ percent on $20,000,000 to $50,000,000, and 52½ on gifts of more than $50,000,000. The gift-tax exemption also is reduced from $50,000 to $40,000. The new gift taxes are effective as to gifts in the calendar years 1936 and thereafter. Under the existing law the first bracket rate is three-fourths of 1 percent on the first $10,000, ranging upward to 45 percent upon net gifts in excess of $10,000,000.

Individual income surtaxes: Increases the surtaxes on individual incomes, beginning with a surtax of 31 percent in the bracket of net incomes between $50,000 and $56,000, graduating upward through the brackets to 73 percent on net incomes between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000, 74 percent on $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 and 75 percent on over $5,000,000. The new individual surtaxes are to become effective for the first taxable year ending after December 31, 1935. Under existing law the individual income surtaxes begin with a tax of 30 percent in the bracket for incomes between $50,000 and $56,000 and range upward to 59 percent on incomes in excess of $1,000,000.

Graduated income tax on corporations: Imposes a new graduated income tax on corporations, to be levied as follows: 12½ percent on net corporation incomes up to $2,000, 13 percent on $2,000 to $15,000, 14 percent on $15,000 to $40,000, and 15 percent on net corporation incomes in excess of $40,000. The tax is to become effective for the first taxable year ending after December 31, 1935. Under existing law the corporation income tax is a flat rate of 13¾ percent and there is no graduation of the rate.

Capital-stock tax: Increases the capital-stock tax, levied under existing law at the rate of $1 per $1,000 on the declared value of corporation stock, to a new rate of $1.40 per $1,000. A new declaration of values is also allowed with respect to the capital-stock tax. The new tax takes effect beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936.

Excess-profits tax: Levies a graduated tax on excess profits of corporations as follows: 6 percent on profits exceeding 10 percent and not over 15 percent, and 12 percent on profits exceeding 15 percent of the declared value of corporation stock. The new excess-profits tax takes effect with the first income taxable year that ends after June 30, 1936. Under existing law there is a flat rate of 5 percent on profits exceeding 12½ percent.

Intercorporate-dividends tax: Under existing law intercorporate dividends of domestic corporations are deducted entirely from gross income in computing net income subject to tax. Under the new revenue act 90 percent of such dividends are deductible, leaving 10 percent taxable at the new graduated corporation tax rate. This provision takes effect the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1935.

Personal holding company tax: Increases the rates of tax on undivided profits of personal holding companies to make them conform to the higher surtaxes. Existing law provided for a surtax on undistributed adjusted net incomes of personal holding companies at the rate of 30 percent of the amount of such income not in excess of $100,000, and 40 percent on incomes in excess of $100,000. Under the Revenue Act of 1935 the tax is to be 20 percent on such incomes not over $2,000, plus 30 percent of the amount thereof over $2,000 and not over $100,000, plus 40 percent of the amount thereof over $100,000 and not over $500,000, plus 50 percent on the amount thereof over $500,000 and not over $1,000,000, plus 60 percent of the amount thereof over $1,000,000. This provision takes effect the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1935.

THE EXCISE TAX ACT

(Approved June 28, 1935. Public Resolution No. 36)

Continues for another 2 years, or until the summer of 1937, certain excise taxes and also the 3-cent postage rate on nonlocal, first-class mail matter, yielding an estimated revenue of $501,991,000 in the current fiscal year 1936. Under the Revenue Act of 1932 certain of these excise taxes would have become inoperative after June 30, 1935, certain others would have ceased on July 31, 1935, and still others would have continued to operate only at reduced rates or with increased exemptions after June 30, 1935. The extra penny, first-class postage rate would have become inoperative on June 30, 1935.

Defers for 2 years scheduled reductions in taxes on future sales of produce, issue and transfer of stocks and bonds.

Continues until 1937 excise taxes on gasoline, brewers' wort, matches, lubricating oil, electrical energy, toilet preparations, furs, jewelry, radio sets, phonographs, mechanical refrigerators, sporting goods, cameras, lenses, firearms, chewing gum, admissions, telephone and telegraph messages, oil by pipe line, automobile trucks, passenger automobiles and motorcycles, parts and accessories, and tires, as well as temporary import duties on crude petroleum, gasoline, lubricating oil, paraffin wax, coal and coke, lumber, and copper.

INCOME-TAX RETURNS

(Approved Apr. 19, 1935. Public Law No. 40)

Repeals the "pink slip" provision of the Revenue Act of 1934, pertaining to the publicity of income-tax returns.

TRANSPORTATION

MOTOR CARRIER ACT

(Approved Aug. 9, 1935. Public Law No. 255)

The Motor Carrier Act of 1935 provides that the power to regulate transportation of passengers or property by motor carriers engaged in interstate commerce is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, provides regulations for the supervision of busses and trucks, and provides penalties for failure to comply.

THE RAIL EXTENSION ACT

(Approved June 14, 1935. Public Resolution No. 27)

Extends for 1 year, or until June 17, 1936, the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 and the office of Coordinator of Transportation.

Provides that orders of the Coordinator or of the Interstate Commerce Commission made under that act shall continue in effect until vacated by the Commission or set aside by other lawful authority.

Continues the assessment of $2 a mile on railroads for financing the Coordinator's office and makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to collect such assessments.

THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

(Approved Aug. 29, 1935. Public Law No. 399)

Establishes a system of retirement annuities for railroad workers who reach the age of 65 years, and for any under that age who have had 30 years' service with the rail carriers and who either make application for retirement or are retired because of physical or mental disability.

Attempts to meet the objections of the Supreme Court in setting aside the original Rail Retirement Act of 1934, by basing it on the taxing power of Congress to tax instead of on its authority to regulate interstate commerce.

Creates as an independent agency of the Government a Railroad Retirement Board of 3 members to be appointed by the President, 1 on recommendation of the employees, 1 on recommendation of the carriers, and the third without recommendation of either interested party, to administer the act and submit a special report within 4 years recommending changes regarded as necessary in the retirement system.

Sets up an Investigation Commission of 9 members, including 3 Senators appointed by the Vice President, 3 Representatives named by the Speaker, and 3 others to be selected by the President. Authorizes the Commission to make a thorough investigation of all pertinent facts relative to a retirement annuity system applicable to railroad carriers, and report its findings to Congress not later than January 1, 1936.

Provides for the payment of annuities from the Treasury to rail employees, after retirement, who are 65 years of age or more, or who have given 30 years of service, provided they are over 50 years of age.

Stipulates that in the event of death of a person entitled to an annuity the Board shall for 1 year pay to his estate an annuity equal to one-half of the annuity to which he may have been entitled.

The act imposes no excise or income taxes on employers or workers, leaving this to be provided for in supplementary companion act for financing the retirement plan.

Becomes effective March 1, 1936.

THE RAILROAD REORGANIZATION ACT

(Approved Aug. 29, 1935. Public Law No. 381)

Designed to simplify and improve the procedure for financial reorganization of railroads (engaged in interstate commerce) under the Bankruptcy Act and to assist the administration's rail coordination plan.

Provides that any railroad corporation which is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature (or creditors of such a company having claims aggregating not less than 5 percent of its indebtedness) can file a petition in a Federal court for relief under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended by this new act, upon approving which the court would have exclusive jurisdiction of the property, wherever located, its process extending to any judicial district.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

(Approved Aug. 23, 1935. Public Law No. 312)

Amends the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, by providing that needy war veterans and former members of the peace-time forces suffering from service-connected disabilities may receive free hospitalization, and extends until January 2, 1940, the time within which World War veterans may make application for adjusted compensation.

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES

(Approved May 10, 1935. Public Law No. 54)

Amends section 5 (a) of the Wagner Act of June 6, 1933, establishing public employment offices in the several States, by providing that in making the apportionments no State shall receive less than $10,000.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS

(Approved May 22, 1935. Public Law No. 64)

Provides that any homestead settler during 1935 who is compelled to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life or to educate his children may be excused from compliance with the law governing residence, cultivation, etc., for that year.

DAMAGES FROM FLOODS AND OTHER CATASTROPHES

(Approved July 26, 1935. Public Law No. 224)

Extends for 2 years the time within which nonprofit corporations may obtain loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to repair damages caused by floods and other catastrophes.

PRISON-MADE PRODUCTS

(Approved July 24, 1935. Public Law No. 215)

Makes unlawful the transportation of prison-made goods from one State into another where such goods are intended to be sold in violation of State law, and provides that packages containing such goods shall be plainly marked.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PENSIONS

(Approved Aug. 13, 1935. Public Law No. 269)

Provides that all laws in effect on March 19, 1933, granting pensions to Spanish-American War veterans which were repealed or amended by the Economy Act of 1933 are reenacted, effective August 13, 1935.

ANTISMUGGLING ACT

(Approved Aug. 5, 1935. Public Law No. 238)

Seeks to prevent the loss of millions of dollars of revenue annually, since the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, from the smuggling of intoxicating liquors by providing (1) for the establishment of customs-enforcement areas adjoining the 12-mile limit; (2) for search, seizure, and forfeiture of smuggling vessels; (3) for the enforcement of revenue laws within treaty limits against foreign vessels; (4) for prohibiting smuggling offenses by American nationals and vessels against the revenue laws of other countries; (5) for the general increase of fines and penalties; (6) for effective administrative control over boats of less than 500 net tons; and (7) for a change of the rules of proof in forfeiture cases.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

(Approved June 27, 1935. Public Law No. 182)

Directs the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct research into laws and principles underlying basic problems of agriculture in its broadest aspects; relating to the improvement of the quality of agricultural commodities and byproducts and manufactures thereof; into improved methods of production and distribution of, and new markets for, agricultural products, all of the foregoing to be in addition to that provided by existing law. It also authorizes similar research to be conducted by agricultural experiment stations, and provides for payments to the several States of sums to be allotted for that purpose; authorizes additional appropriations to carry out the purposes of the act and to pay the expenses of cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics; it also authorizes additional appropriations for the benefit of the land-grant colleges.

THE PROMISE OF A "BREATHING SPELL" FOR BUSINESS

(Mr. Howard's Letter)

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: As an independent editor keenly interested in the objectives of the new deal, I have been seeking reasons for the doubts and uncertainties of those business men who are skeptics, critics, and outright opponents of your program at a time when there is no commensurate dissatisfaction being evidenced by other of the electorate.

I do not accept it as a fact that the interests of what we broadly term business necessarily are in conflict with mass interests.

I expect to continue in support of your stated interpretation of American liberalism—notwithstanding my dissent and disagreement as to some details and some theories. Therefore it is in a friendly and, I hope, constructive spirit that I attempt a few observations and opinions which I believe timely and pertinent.

These represent, I believe, a composite of the most frequently expressed criticisms of your administration.

HOSTILE AND FRIGHTENED

That certain elements of business have been growing more hostile to your administration is a fact too obvious to be classed as news. So long as this hostility emanated from financial racketeers, public exploiters, and the sinister forces spawned by special privilege, it was of slight importance. No crook loves a cop. But any experienced reporter will tell you that throughout the country many business men who once gave you sincere support are now not merely hostile but are frightened.

WHAT IS FEARED

Many of these men whose patriotism and sense of public service will compare with that of any men in political life, have become convinced and sincerely believe—

That you fathered a tax bill that aims at revenge rather than revenue—revenge on business;

That the administration has side-stepped broadening the tax base to the extent necessary to approximate the needs of the situation;

That there can be no real recovery until the fears of business have been allayed through the granting of a breathing spell to industry, and a recess from further experimentation until the country can recover the losses.

I know you have repeatedly stated your position on sections of the Nation's problems, but as an editor I know also the necessity for repetition and reiteration. There is need to undo the damage that has been done by misinterpreters of the new deal.

I know that you feel as I do—that with all its faults, and the abuses it has developed, our system has in the past enabled us to achieve greater mass progress than has been attained by any other system on earth.

Smoke out the sinister forces seeking to delude the public into believing that an orderly modernization of a system we want to preserve is revolution in disguise.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

ROY W. HOWARD.

AUGUST 26.

(The President's Reply)

SEPTEMBER 2, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. HOWARD: I appreciate the tone and purpose of your letter, and fairness impels me to note with no little sympathy and understanding the facts which you record based on your observation as a reporter of opinion throughout the United States.

I can well realize, moreover, that the many legislative details and processes incident to the long and arduous session of the Congress should have the unavoidable effect of promoting some confusion in many people's minds.

I think we can safely disregard the skeptics of whom you speak. Skeptics were present when Noah said it was going to rain, and they refused to go into the ark.

We can also disregard those who are actuated by a spirit of political partisanship or by a willingness to gain or retain personal profit at the expense of and detriment to their neighbors.

Then there were those who told us to do nothing. We had heard of the do-nothing policy before and from the same sources and in many cases from the same individuals. We heard it when Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson proposed reforms.

The country has learned how to measure that kind of opposition. But there are critics who are honest and nonpartisan and who are willing to discuss and to learn. I believe we owe, therefore, a positive duty to clarify our purposes, to describe our methods, and to reiterate our ideals.

Such clarification is greatly aided by the efforts of those public-spirited newspapers which serve the public well by a true portrayal of the facts and an unbiased printing of the news.

However, experience is the best teacher, and results are the best evidence. As the essential outline of what has been done rises into view, I am confident that doubts and misapprehension will vanish. I am confident further that business as a whole will agree with you and with me that the interests of what we broadly term "business" are not in conflict with but wholly in harmony with mass interests.

I note what you say of the hostility emanating from financial racketeers, public exploiters, and sinister forces. Such criticism it is an honor to bear. A car with many cylinders can keep running in spite of plenty of carbon—but it knocks. When it is overhauled an important part of the job is the removal of that carbon.

In the large, the depression was the culmination of unhealthy, however innocent, arrangements in agriculture, in business, and in finance.

RECOVERY AND REFORM

Our legislation was remedial, and as such it would serve no purpose to make a doctrinaire effort to distinguish between that which was addressed to recovery and that which was addressed to reform. The two, in an effort toward sound and fundamental recovery, are inseparable. Our actions were in conformity with the basic economic purposes which were set forth 3 years ago.

As spokesman for those purposes I pointed out that it was necessary to seek a wise balance in American economic life, to restore our banking system to public confidence, to protect investors in the security market, to give labor freedom to organize and protection from exploitation, to safeguard and develop our national resources, to set up protection against the vicissitudes incident to old age and unemployment, to relieve destitution and suffering, and to relieve investors and consumers from the burden of unnecessary corporate machinery.

DEFENDS TAX PROGRAM

I do not believe that any responsible political party in the country will dare to go before the public in opposition to any of these major objectives.

The tax program of which you speak is based upon a broad and just social and economic purpose. Such a purpose, it goes without saying, is not to destroy wealth but to create broader range of opportunity, to restrain the growth of unwholesome and sterile accumulations, and to lay the burdens of government where they can best be carried.

This law affects only those individual people who have incomes over $50,000 a year and individual estates of decedents who leave over $40,000.

Moreover, it gives recognition to the generally accepted fact that larger corporations, enjoying the advantages of size over smaller corporations, possess relatively greater capacity to pay. Consequently the act changes the rate of tax on net earnings from a flat 13¾ percent to a differential ranging from 12½ percent to 15 percent.

No reasonable person thinks that this is going to destroy competent corporations or impair business as a whole. Taxes on 95 percent of our corporations are actually reduced by the new tax law.

A small excess-profits tax is also provided as well as an intercorporate dividend tax, which will have the wholesome effect of encouraging the simplification of overly complicated and wasteful intercorporate relationships.

Congress declined to broaden the tax base because it was recognized that the tax base had already been broadened to a very considerable extent during the past 5 years.

TAXES THAT POOR PAY

I am aware of the sound arguments advanced in favor of making every citizen pay an income tax, however small his income. England is cited as an example. But it should be recalled that despite complaints about higher taxes our interest payments on all public debts, including local governments, require only 3 percent of our national income, as compared with 7 percent in England.

The broadening of our tax base in the past few years has been very real. What is known as "consumers' tax"—namely, the invisible taxes paid by people in every walk of life—fall relatively much more heavily upon the poor man than on the rich man.

In 1929 consumers' taxes represented only 30 percent of the national revenue. Today they are 60 percent and even with the passage of the recent tax bill the proportion of these consumers' taxes will drop only 5 percent.

NEED OF PROMPT ACTION

This administration came into power pledged to a very considerable legislative program. It found the condition of the country such as to require drastic and far-reaching action. Duty and necessity required us to move on a broad front for more than 2 years.

It seemed to the Congress and to me better to achieve theso objectives as expeditiously as possible in order that not only business but the public generally might know those modifications in the conditions and rules of economic enterprise which were involved in our program.

NOW A BREATHING SPELL

This basic program, however, has now reached substantial completion and the breathing spell of which you speak is here—very decidedly so.

It is a source of great satisfaction that at this moment conditions are such as to offer further substantial and wide-spread recovery. Unemployment is still with us, but it is steadily diminishing and our efforts to meet its problems are unflagging.

I do not claim the magician's wand; I do not claim that Government alone is responsible for these definitely better circumstances. But we all know the very great effect of the saving of banks, of farms, of homes, the building of public works, the providing of relief for the destitute, and many other direct governmental acts for the betterment of conditions. And we do claim that we have helped to restore that public confidence which now offers so substantial a foundation for our recovery.

RETURN OF CONFIDENCE

I take it that we are all not merely seeking but getting the recovery of confidence, not merely the confidence of a small group but that basic confidence on the part of the mass of our population, in the soundness of our economic life and in the honesty and justice of the purposes of its economic rules and methods.

I like the last sentence of your letter, and I repeat it: "With all its faults and with the abuses it has developed, our system has in the past enabled us to achieve greater mass progress than has been attained by any other system on earth. Smoke out the sinister forces seeking to delude the public into believing that an orderly modernization of a system we want to preserve is revolution in disguise."

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

STATEMENT OF JESSE H. JONES, CHAIRMAN OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, August 26, 1935.

Loans for the construction of pulp and paper mills were advocated and discussed before the House Banking and Currency Committee in January of this year when the extension of the R. F. C. Act was under consideration, and debated on the floor of the House January 29, 1935, when the amendments to the R. F. C. Act were adopted. Reference is made to pages 77, 78, 79, and 80 of the hearings of the House Committee on Banking and Currency "to extend the functions of the R. F. C.", January 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1935; also, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 29, 1935, pages 1164–1184.

We have only had one formal application for the construction of a pulp and paper mill—that of the Crossett Lumber Co., at Crossett, Ark.

The security for this loan is conservatively estimated at $12,000,000, or more than three times the amount of the loan. It includes, in addition to the new mill, a first mortgage on 333,803 acres of timber and pulpwood land; 970,000,000 feet of pine saw timber; 198,000,000 feet of hardwood saw timber; 1,054,000 cords of pine pulpwood; 716,000 cords hardwood chemical; 3 large sawmill plants; and the town of Crossett, Ark., with a population of 3,500 people, who are dependent upon the operations of the Crossett Co. The town of Crossett, Ark., comprises about 3,000 acres of land on which there is located 685 modern homes, store buildings, office buildings, hotel, boarding houses, hospital, theater, ice plant, and such other buildings as are needed to make a complete town, served by electricity, water, and sewerage, all belonging to the borrower, and included in the mortgage.

The loan is for $3,850,000—estimated cost of the new mill—and matures in installments ending January 31, 1945. The company's previous earning record, including the last few years, assures payment of the loan.

The annual capacity of the new pulp and paper mill will be approximately 31,000 tons of kraft paper, and 15,500 tons of dried sulphate pulp, and we have been importing approximately 500,000 tons of kraft pulp annually.

Construction of the Crossett mill will furnish a great deal of employment immediately and continually thereafter in its operation.

A brief filed by the American Pulp and Paper Association, opposing the loan, was given full consideration before the loan was granted.

Every governmental loan to industry competes with private capital, and it is for Congress to determine how long it wishes such loans made.

THE CONGRESS THAT KEPT ITS WORD

Adjournment of Congress—the greatest liberal Congress in the country's history—leaves a tremendously increased appreciation of its accomplishments.

Removed from the welter of legislative controversy the enactments of this session stand out as an imposing monument to the American spirit of liberalism. In perspective those enactments appear not as an oddly assorted collection of laws but as a far-reaching and integrated foundation for new and greater American progress.

Above all, this was a people's Congress, a Congress which kept its pledged word to support President Roosevelt and the new deal, a Congress in which the vested interests had less influence than in any Congress within the memory of living men.

The Tories are damning it.

But compare its record with that of any Tory-dominated Congress in the past 150 years—and you'll understand.

For once, human rights took precedence over property rights.

For the first time since Lincoln the people came into their own.

Paramount in the record of this Seventy-fourth Congress are its broad and fundamental reforms:

1. The banking bill creating a central banking system under which the Government wrests control of the Nation's monetary system from Wall Street—far and away the greatest achievement of the session and the most momentous single piece of legislation in latter-day American history.

2. The Social Security Act, which sets up old-age-pension and unemployment-insurance systems—an act which does not go nearly as far as it should, but which still is a precedent-breaking step forward.

3. The Wagner Labor Disputes Act, which gives belated recognition to the rights of labor in collective bargaining—an act which should mean a new era in industrial relations and which should set up new safeguards for the buying power of the workers.

4. The new tax bill, frankly based on the principle of ability to pay and embodying the companion principle of redistributing purchasing power through income and inheritance taxes in the higher brackets—a bill which is expected to raise comparatively little additional revenue, but which beats a new path through the economic jungle of plutocracy.

5. The Wheeler-Rayburn Act regulating public-utility holding companies—a long-needed reform for protection of utility stockholders as well as consumers, a bill fought through only in the face of the most impudent and highly financed lobby in congressional annals.

6. The act giving the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to regulate motor carriers—a reform which has been hanging fire in Congress since 1926.

7. The Guffey coal bill, which sets a far-reaching precedent in industrial regulation and which offers the only practical solution to the chaos in the bituminous fields.

The Record, we are proud to say, fought for every one of these liberal measures—and it was fighting for most of them long before Mr. Roosevelt took office. But we are particularly gratified to have initiated the fight for Government control of the monetary system—a victory won in the Eccles bill.

All of these measures are dedicated to the purpose of bringing order out of the chaos into which this Nation was plunged by the excesses of capitalism run rampant—excesses which even today the Tories confuse with liberty.

In other words, these new-deal reforms are aimed to prevent our economic machine from racking itself to pieces.

President Roosevelt would save capitalism—by curbing the power of capitalists to destroy it.

All this constitutes a record of which Mr. Roosevelt and every liberal Member of Congress may be proud.

It was achieved only in the face of bitter opposition from Tories within the President's party and within his own circle.

It was achieved only by compromising on point after point, sometimes on essential issues.

But it was achieved.

In spite of everything, the record of this Seventy-fourth Congress is the record of a Congress which kept its word, a magnificent victory for the principles of liberal democracy.

And it is a monument to our great liberal President, who not only possessed the vision to point the way but who was gifted with the political genius to reach the goal.

DEMOCRATIC LEADER SAYS CONGRESS HAS AIDED HUMANITY

(By Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, Democratic leader of the Senate)

The achievements of this session of Congress will be memorable. Practically every problem that touches human interest has been made easier of solution by the legislation enacted.

As a coordinate branch of the Government cooperating with the executive and judicial branches, I think it can be truly said that the Congress has done its part to carry on through a grave crisis. Legislation enacted in the Seventy-third Congress, and reinforced by the legislation of this session, was passed with the expectancy that it would help every phase of human and industrial endeavor.

Salient features of legislation are the appropriation of $4,880,000,000 for work relief, purposely proposed to substitute for the dole. If the people whole-heartedly cooperate with the Government in this great enterprise, we should hear the increased hum of industry.

LENDING POWERS EXPANDED

Industry has been materially aided also by the extension of lending powers to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and Farm Credit Administration, thus making it possible for the self-reliant to reestablish themselves and continue with Government loans instead of direct Government relief.

A bill declaring a moratorium on farm mortgages, coupled with the increased powers to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, will further promote the come-back that agriculture has made and give to the farming interests additional courage. The Senate voted to assist the tenant farmers and share-croppers.

The social-security bill, providing a system of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance, is an outstanding enactment that, working in cooperation with the States, will give a definite feeling of security to the aged and unemployed.

LABOR AND FINANCE

The law revising the central banking system will improve our banking methods and give further security to financial interests. The extension of deposit insurance continues the faith of the individual small depositor in our banks. The establishment of bargaining rights for labor has been provided in a law creating the National Labor Relations Board. The regulation and stabilization of the soft-coal industry has been provided for in the Guffey bill, and a national strike in the industry thereby averted.

The railroads have been aided by a revision of the bankruptcy law, and steps have been provided to pension their old employees. The regulation of motor carriers—bus and truck transportation—has been provided.

The tax bill increasing surtaxes in the higher brackets and raising the tax on gifts and large estates, coupled with the repeal of the "pink slip" income provision, constituted generally the revenue legislation.

The World War veterans last session had restored the benefits they were receiving before the enactment of the Economy Act, and I have made definite arrangement for a vote on the bonus bill in the Senate at the beginning of the next session in January. The Spanish-American War pensions have been restored to full former rates.

PROVIDE PATHWAY

Enactment of a law placing public-utility holding companies under Government regulation gives further security to the investing public and consumers.

Congress in these enactments, coupled with those of a former Congress, has provided a way for the people to carry on. The American spirit, so nobly exemplified in our 150 years, having been shown the way by Government cooperation, has but to exhibit its usual courage and determination to regain full restoration of prosperity and happiness to which this Nation is so justly entitled.

As the President aptly said in his letter to the Congress:

"Much has been accomplished for the permanent well-being of the Nation as a whole."

FINAL ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 38.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Saturday, the 24th day of August 1935, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

FELICITATIONS FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 24, 1935.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: If the opportunity presents itself, will you be good enough to extend my greetings to the Members of the Senate and to express to them my deep and sincere congratulations upon the work which they have accomplished? When a calm and fair review of the work of this Congress is made it will be called a historic session. It has dealt, in a spirit of statesmanship, with matters of vital interest to the lives of our people. Much has been accomplished for the permanent well-being of the Nation as a whole.

I am grateful for, and happy in, the cooperation between us, and I extend to each and every one of you my good wishes for a well-earned rest.

Faithfully yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, responding to the letter of the President of the United States to this honorable body, in which the President sends his felicitations and best wishes to the Senate, together with his expression of appreciation for its consideration of himself, permit me to say, in behalf of both sides of the Senate, that I know it returns his compliments, felicitates him, and wishes him upon his vacation rest, recreation, and reward.

I thank the Senate.

BORAH AMENDMENT TO TAX BILL

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the tax bill was before the Senate I offered an amendment which was rejected in conference. I have had prepared by a very able, competent authority a number of facts and statistics bearing upon the question of tax-exempt securities. I had intended to comment on the subject, but I shall be content simply to have the data printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE BORAH AMENDMENT

There is only one source of national-wealth statistics in this country.

That is the National Industrial Conference Board, maintained by industry in New York City.

From year to year they make an estimate for an analysis of the national wealth.

In 1914 the estimate was $192,000,000,000. In that year the public debt of the United States Government was approximately a billion dollars.

In 1920 the national-wealth figure was $488,000,000,000, and in that year the public debt of the United States was approximately $26,000,000,000.

In 1930 the estimate of national wealth was $329,000,000,000, and the public debt had been decreased to the approximate figure of $16,000,000,000.

Commencing with 1930, we had a tremendous drop in our national wealth, as everyone knows. We dropped $32,000,000,000 from the 1929 figure. In 1931 we dropped $49,000,000,000 below the 1930 figure. In 1932 we dropped $33,000,000,000 below the 1931 figure. We lost from 1929 to 1932 $114,000,000,000 in the estimates of our national wealth. We averaged in each depression year for the 3 years of 1930, 1931, and 1932 a total of $38,000,000,000 depreciation in our national wealth. The lowest year of all was 1933.

So the depression cost us in devaluation alone at least $152,000,000,000. We started that depression with a public debt, I repeat, of $16,000,000,000. By June 30 of 1931 it rose to nineteen billion four hundred million; by June 30 of 1932 to twenty-two billion five hundred million; by June 30 of 1933 to $27,000,000,000. It is approximately $30,000,000,000 today, and Congress has by recent enactment permitted it to go to $45,000,000,000.

But the national debt is only part of the picture. Let us go back to 1914. The debt of the 48 States, with three-thousand-odd counties, the sixteen-thousand-odd cities, towns, and villages, the 128,000 school districts, the 19,000 townships, and the 14,000 other subdivisions—all with power to incur public debt, and in all amounting to 182,000 political units—was less than $5,000,000,000 in 1914.

Today the public debt of the 48 States is at least two billion five hundred million; and the public debt of local governments, which in 1932, before special studies were made, was announced at $17,500,000,000, has been found to be approximately $21,000,000,000.

Before we close the fiscal year we must expect thirty-two billion in national debt, two billion five hundred million in State debt, and twenty-one billion in local government debt. This is a total of fifty-five billion five hundred million which must be pledged against the total national wealth of approximately $200,000,000,000.

Public obligations of the United States and the several States and the political subdivisions thereof amount today to a full 25 percent of all our estimated national wealth, and yet the debt itself exists in the form of wealth in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

We have a first mortgage on America—a $200,000,000,000 America—of $55,000,000,000. And supporting that mortgage is the power to tax, the power which John Marshall once said was inexhaustible.

Back in 1914 the wealth of the United States was but $192,000,000,000, and against this wealth was a total debt—National, State, and local government—of less than five billion five hundred million. That debt was less than 3 percent of the national wealth. Now, I repeat, we have a debt 10 times as great, of $55,000,000,000, and the value of the property has increased but $8,000,000,000, as we compare 1914 and 1935.

There is another element that is added to this debt burden and that is the expenditures for operating government—National, State, and local, inclusive. For National Government we realize that we are on approximately an $8,000,000,000 Budget. For State and local government—and I use the year 1932 because it is the last I have—the expenses of operating was $9,662,000,000.

So we are spending at the rate of $17,600,000,000 and despite that expenditure we are building up from 1914 to 1935 a debt from 5 billion to 55 billion 5, or an increase of $50,000,000,000. This is an increase of 2 billion 500 million per year in the funded debt of American Government.

Interest, of course, is an element in governmental expenditure. The average interest on the national debt last year was 3.18 and on the new refinancing this year as low as 2.7. The interest on the State and local government debt of course is larger.

But, assuming an average interest of 3 percent on the national debt and an average of 5 percent on the debt of the States and the local governments, interest would amount to $2,175,000,000, leaving the operating costs of government still $15,500,000,000 in the United States. If it is objected that debt service includes payment on the principal, I point to the fact that the last 20 years has seen the principal increase annually $2,500,000,000 as an average, or a total of $50,000,000,000 from the 5 billion 5 in 1914 to the 55 billion 500 million of 1935.

Although debt service may have seen technical payments on the principal, at the end of each year we find ourselves further and further in debt.

Nor is the World War to be charged with the burden. Nothing attributable to the World War built the State and local government debt of this Nation from 4 billion in 1914 to 21 billion in 1935. Nor did the World War build the national debt from the 16 billion of 1926 to the thirty-odd billion of today.

The war is accountable for at least 15 billion. But it is not accountable for the wild extravagance of State and municipality and school district and drainage district, nor of the National Government which built the debt from 5 billion 5 in 1914 to 55 billion 5 in 1935, or a total of $50,000,000,000 increase.

The war is accountable for fifteen billions of this, the difference between the national debt of 1914 of a billion dollars and the national debt of 1926 of $16,000,000,000.

The amendment offered to the tax bill would strike at the root foundation of the problem of debt. The debt of America is what it is because of the existence of the tax-exempt bond. The debt of America is what it is because the tax-exempt Government bond is a refuge and hide-out and asylum for great wealth. If we knew who owned these bonds, we would know how to legislate with respect to our debt structure.

Let me repeat. In 1914 there was $192,000,000,000 estimated as the national wealth. America enjoyed a great prosperity. In 1920 we reached our all-time height of $488,700,000,000.

Then came the depression of 1921, where devaluation set in to the extent of $171,000,000,000 in a single year.

We recovered a little in 1922. We recovered more in 1923, and again 1924 was a year of devaluation. We recovered in 1925. We dropped again in 1927; 1928 and 1929 built the national wealth to a high of three hundred and sixty-one billion; and then devaluation set in that reduced it once more to the present value of approximately $200,000,000,000.

The real wealth of the Nation is first in its farms, evaluated in 1920 at $78,000,000,000, which evaluation was reduced in 1930 to $57,000,000,000, and again reduced by 1934 to thirty-seven billion. That is $40,000,000,000 struck from the evaluation of the farms of America, the first and most important item in the national wealth.

Yet Government expects to raise its increased costs directly upon land values insofar as local government is concerned.

The urban real estate of America was evaluated at approximately $100,000,000,000 in 1930. And this real estate has depreciated conservatively one-third during the depression. Yet the cities and villages and towns and school districts and special assessment districts of America expect to receive the bulk of the revenue directly from depreciated real estate as represented by the homes of the teeming masses of industrial labor congregated in our great cities.

Besides the real property tax, upon which perhaps 75 percent of all the tax revenue of all America rests, there are, of course, other taxes. We have the iniquitous sales tax which admits no recognition of the ability to pay and which exacts from the food, clothing, and necessities of the poor practically dollar for dollar the amount exacted from the wealthy.

We have the various excise taxes and we recognize that the poor can smoke just as much and drink just as much and perhaps use playing cards more than do those able to pay.

We have the graduated income tax. We have the profits taxes, and inheritance taxes, of course. But on the income tax there is no equality, no uniformity. It all depends from what source the income is derived. And to escape income tax great wealth directs itself to the tax-exempt security and withdraws itself from the risk of productive industry.

My attention has been called to two prominent citizens of this country, one whose real-estate investments approximate $35,000,000 at today's appraisals, the other whose investment in Government debt approximates the same amount of $35,000,000. In one instance the property itself earns less than its carrying charges, and it is taxed on the values of other days and on an appraisal of better than $50,000,000.

For taxes alone the carrying charge is approximately a million five hundred thousand dollars. There is no income from which to pay the debt as accumulated annually, to meet this charge.

In the other instance, the tax-exempt bond is available, and this individual is reputed to hold United States securities to the extent of a full $35,000,000. These securities yielded 3.18 last year and this year 2.7.

In the two forms of wealth, the one had added to its estate approximately a million a year out of the taxpayers of the country, and the other contributed to the tax bill of the country at least a million and a half. The one invested in real wealth, with the view of producing more wealth, and the other invested in the dead hand of debt which, under our present laws, is the most productive investment possible.

The Government bond is no longer held by the poor of the country. The great patriotic bond subscriber of the World War has long since lost his property, as it was intended he should do so in the recurring depressions of 1921 and 1924 and 1929.

The salaried employee, the industrial worker, and the farmer, who pledged their properties and who borrowed money to in turn loan it to the United States for the successful prosecution of the war, were dealing in the bonds of the United States destined and preordained to fall into the hands of the wealthy with their tax-exempt character. All that it was necessary to do was to depreciate the value of this Government bond temporarily, depreciate it as low as 85 in 1920, and then to pick up these bonds at a discount and then to hide behind the tax-exempt features built into the contract, until today, I venture to say, that if we could know who owned the debt of the United States or the debt of the various States or political subdivisions thereof, we would have nothing but the list of those in whose hands the wealth is concentrated. The amendment to the tax bill removing the tax-exempt feature of the Government bond was made to include that form of wealth which represents fully 25 percent of the wealth of this Nation in the taxable property of the Nation.

The reason is not simply that we may lay our hands upon 55 billion 500 million of nontaxable wealth, or wealth not subject to normal income taxes, but rather than that we put our hands upon the source that causes Government debt.

I am convinced that except for the bond, the tax-exempt bond, the World War would not have been one-half as attractive to the rich. For there is nothing more attractive to the greedy and avaricious of this world than the munition and war profits on the one hand and the asylum of the tax-exempt bond on the other.

I am satisfied that the $11,000,000,000 due us from foreign nations would not have been so readily loaned had not it produced in turn exactly $11,000,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds—the refuge of great wealth in this Nation.

I am convinced after careful study that the vast expenditures of local government which raised that debt from approximately $4,500,000,000 in 1914 to twenty-odd billion today, would not have been incurred except behind the public works of many an American city, behind the good roads in many an American county, behind the public improvements in city, county, town and hamlet, school district and special assessment district, there was the greedy hand of the banker urging upon the locality the expenditure of money, financed by the tax-exempt bond.

I will go further and say that organized throughout America and immediately after cessation of hostilities groups of specialized bond salesmen went into the highways and byways of America selling the local politician easy financing and painless payments for public improvements—only because some bank or trust company was seeking for its preferred customers tax-exempt bonds behind which they could hide their wealth secure from governmental taxation.

The amendment was not proposed to interfere with any present form of contract. It was most conservative. It applied to future issues, and it attempted to prevent the escape of $55,000,000,000 in one form of wealth from the revenues so necessary. It has been predicated upon the fundamental fact understood by every man, that this type of wealth today is now in the hands of the wealthy.

It was attempted to equalize the burden of taxation in proportion somewhat to the ability of the citizen to pay.

It applied only to future contracts between the Government and its bondholders.

Without discussion, without an understanding on the part of the Senate, it was quickly accepted by those in whose hands the tax bill was intrusted.

There wasn't an objection on the floor to the amendment. It was accepted as germane. It was accepted as revenue producing. It was accepted as an honest attempt to express in legislative enactment the whole philosophy of taxation outlined in the President's message on the tax bill. It was taken to conference. The instruction of the Chamber was given the conferees to insist upon the amendment, and we understand that it was used simply as a trade, simply as a point to iron out difficulties that might possibly have arisen between the tax bill as passed by the House of Representatives and the tax bill as presented by the Senate.

All that this amendment contributed, or all that the McCarran amendment contributed, were trading points. Neither was discussed on its merits in the Chamber. Neither is being judged upon its merits as it undergoes defeat.

If the tax-exempt bond is removed and if fifty-five billion five hundred million of this type of property is ultimately subjected to normal tax on income, I tell you that this fifty-five billion is yielding in interest or in income today approximately $3,000,000,000.

If the bonds were held by the poor or those of the very lowest-income brackets, this vast debt would yield back to the Treasury $85,000,000 a year.

Instead of debating this on the floor, the amendment was accepted and the newspapers carried the suggestion that the Treasury is against it because it might interfere with future financing. Now, grant that because we remove the tax-exempt feature of the bond the record interest rate of 2.70 on the Federal debt rises to a full 5 percent. On $32,000,000,000 of this the income which the bondholder receives would be $1,600,000,000, in place of the present income of $864,000,000.

Granted this tremendous rise in the rate of interest, there still opens to the provisions of the income tax $55,500,000,000 tax-exempt securities held by the wealthy. Were the securities held by the poor, it would yield a minimum of $111,000,000 under the present 4-percent normal income tax of the lowest bracket, and it would more than yield in tax return the increase of interest paid than could possibly be exacted.

But this is not the important thing. The important thing is that our debt is increasing at the rate of $2,500,000,000 a year, and this rate has been sustained for over 20 years. The important thing is that our national wealth is now approximately $200,000,000,000 and we owe an official government debt of $55,500,000,000.

At the present rate we have but 58 years to go when the public debt will equal the present total national wealth. This makes not for insolvency at some theoretical date in the future. This is the proof of present insanity.

MORRIS L. ERNST

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, several days ago I received a letter from one of my constituents, a man of very high character and standing at the bar, whose legal talents are devoted to the underprivileged and the unfortunate without compensation as often as those of any attorney in New York. The letter reads as follows:

AUGUST 7, 1935.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The annexed letter speaks for itself. Since the committee investigating conditions in the Virgin Islands has so far refused, as indicated in said letter, to allow me an opportunity to appear and testify, I ask that you ask leave to print this letter sent to Senator TYDINGS in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The testimony before Senator TYDINGS' committee on the Virgin Islands carried implications against my client, MacIntosh, whose case is now on appeal. There was also some testimony that I tried to intimidate a Federal judge.

It is important that the public records indicate my position. Will you, therefore, use your efforts to arrange for the letter I handed you to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Thanks.

MORRIS L. ERNST.

After I received this letter, I conferred with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and he has given me assurance that he will submit to his committee Mr. Ernst's request to be heard. In view of that assurance—and I think I am stating it correctly—I shall not offer the explanatory letter which Mr. Ernst asked to have printed in the RECORD. But if an opportunity is not afforded Mr. Ernst to appear before the committee, I shall at least make an effort to have his letter of explanation printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD when we reconvene in January.

I make this statement because I think those of us who are members of the bar readily admit that testimony given before a Senate committee is a matter of public record, and the testimony given would, if it were true, reflect upon the honor and the professional conduct of Mr. Ernst. Because of his standing in my State, and as a matter of simple justice I think that Mr. Ernst ought to be given opportunity to refute the charges leveled against him. I know nothing about the merits of the controversy; all I ask is fair play.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from New York that there has been no disposition on the part of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs investigating affairs in the Virgin Islands to deny Mr. Ernst the hearing, except for the following reasons: First, the committee was engrossed with an investigation of the affairs of the islands, and the reflection or implication upon Mr. Ernst was so collateral that at the time the committee did not wish to go into that field of investigation. Secondly, when it was alleged that Mr. Ernst had engaged in conduct in which a reputable attorney should not engage, I sent Mr. Ernst a telegram and asked him to reply categorically to the charges. Mr. Ernst wrote me that he could not reply categorically to the charges, and, inasmuch as he could not reply categorically to the charges, it did not look to me as though Mr. Ernst was as frank with the committee as he might have been, because in the matter of the six or seven questions I asked him, "Did you say so-and-so as is alleged?" "Did you say so-and-so as is alleged?"—it struck me that Mr. Ernst could have said either "yes" or "no." Mr. Ernst asked the committee for a hearing, but the committee was engrossed in other matters, and never got around to Mr. Ernst's case. However, the committee has not been discharged, the matter is still open, and when we convene in January, if the Senator will again call it to my attention, I shall be glad to bring the matter before the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. May I say that the humblest criminal is entitled to a hearing in the forum where charges against him have been made. Mr. Ernst is a prominent lawyer of New York. If these charges were to be established as true, they might subject him to extreme embarrassment. All that Mr. Ernst asks is that the same committee which listened to the testimony of unprofessional conduct permit him to appear, to face those who make the charges against him, and to submit himself to direct and cross-examination. I think that is only a simple act of justice, and I am sure that when the Senator reflects he will grant Mr. Ernst the opportunity.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have reflected. Mr. Ernst was not in Washington. In order to protect Mr. Ernst I immediately addressed a telegram to him that he could put into the RECORD forthwith his denial of these charges. Mr. Ernst did not answer the telegram for 4 or 5 days. Then when he answered he said he had been absent from the city and had not had a chance to look into the matter. Then he wrote me a letter which was most rambling insofar as any comment on the charges was concerned.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish.

Mr. WAGNER. I have the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator asked me a question. I will wait until the Senator finishes.

Mr. WAGNER. Go ahead.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will take care of Mr. Ernst in my own time.

Mr. WAGNER. I wanted to know whether Mr. Ernst asked to appear before the committee and testify.

Mr. TYDINGS. In my own time I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well then. I shall be glad to let the Senator answer now.

ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR EXTRA LABOR AT NAVY YARDS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WALSH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 872), an act for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the numerals stricken out by the said House amendments, and on page 5, line 14, of the engrossed bill, after the word "pay", insert the following: "one-half of"; on page 5, line 17, after the word "aforesaid", insert the following: ", and pay the other one-half of the same to the attorney or attorneys who performed services toward securing provision for the payment herein of the amounts so found"; on page 5, line 17, after the words "death of", insert the following: "any of"; on page 5, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "of such fee" and insert the following: "for such services"; and the House agree to the same.

DAVID I. WALSH,
WM. E. BORAH,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
U. S. GUYER,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

DATA ON NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as Chairman of the Committee on Finance, I have just received a letter from the President, enclosing certain data relating to the National Recovery Administration, which I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter and data will be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

The letter and data are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 24, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reports upon industrial conditions, covering the short period in which commerce and industry have been functioning without the advantage of the codes of fair competition, have been received by me from the National Recovery Administration. Notwithstanding successful and praiseworthy efforts being made by many employers to maintain standards of employment, these indicate a tendency toward serious impairment of established standards by a minority. To place these facts before your committee, I am transmitting herewith certain information substantiating this conclusion. As additional evidence is gathered, I shall continue to furnish it to your committee to lay as broad a factual base as possible for your consideration of the problems involved. The National Recovery Administration is also making a general survey of the results so far obtained under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

It does not seem possible to complete this work in time for its use at the present session of the Congress. In the short time remaining it seems impractical to ask the Congress to give consideration to an industrial statute of broad import. If your committee staff could be delegated to analyze, during the coming months, the material collected, I believe adequate data would be made available for a thorough understanding of the complex situation confronting industry and labor. With this done your committee could meet, in the fall, for hearings and the formulation of proposed legislation for preserving permanently to the Nation such social and economic advantages as were gained through previous emergency enactments. This would enable you to offer at the opening of the coming session a well-considered program for congressional action.

Pending determination by the Congress of whether further industrial legislation will be enacted, it is hoped that industrial groups will, in increasing numbers, avail themselves of the provisions of the joint resolution extending National Industrial Recovery Administration which permit agreements (1) putting into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor; and (2) prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law. Such agreements, when approved by the President, as to matters covered by the joint resolution, are exempted expressly from the penalties of the antitrust laws, including criminal prosecutions, injunctions, and treble damages. By such action industry can undoubtedly do much to preserve the very substantial gains made while the codes were in effect. Applications for approval of such agreements should be filed with the Federal Trade Commission.

Industry may continue to take advantage of the familiar trade-practice conference procedure of the Federal Trade Commission.

It will be my purpose during the adjournment of Congress to call into conference representatives of management, labor, and consumers in the hope that discussion will create among them a general agreement as to the best means of accelerating industrial recovery and the elimination of unemployment. I am hopeful that such an effort will be successful, especially in view of the definite manifestation of interest by all in the solution of these problems.

I am sending a similar letter to the Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives. May I request that consideration be given by your committee toward adopting a plan conformable to these suggestions, and, if possible, correlating the activities of the respective Senate and House committees.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

STATE TOTALS

Month of July 1935; August 13, 1935

It appears from this report that the greatest number of departures from the previous hour and wage provisions during the month of July were in the States of Texas, California, New York, Nebraska, Georgia, and Michigan. The same States lead in the deviations from former code labor provisions in the month of June, with the exception of Michigan.

The greatest number of reports of price cutting were in the States of Tennessee, New York, Nebraska, Michigan, and Texas.

The following comparison may be made of the total number of reports of deviations from former code standards:

Labor provisions, June, 5,779; July, 9,049;

Price cutting, June, 857; July, 2,490.

MARINE CASUALTY INVESTIGATION BOARD

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1514, House bill 8599.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, let it be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the clerk will report by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a Marine Casualty Investigation Board and increase efficiency in the administration of the steamboat-inspection laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the bill has passed the House. This afternoon I described it somewhat in detail when I was endeavoring to get an appropriation for the Bureau. It does not involve any money. It is intended to increase the efficiency of the inspection service. Personally I regard it as a matter which tends to increase safety at sea. It has been recommended by the Department for about 15 years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, was the report of the committee unanimous?

Mr. COPELAND. It was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to cooperate with the Senator from New York in these closing hours of the session, but I insist that we know just exactly what is proposed to be done.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be glad to tell the Senator. The bill would reduce the number of supervising inspectors and thus make a better set-up. It would provide for not to exceed 10 principal traveling inspectors. Among other duties they would investigate marine casualties involving loss of life. The present system is somewhat defective. If there is found evidence of criminal liability on the part of an officer, the holder of a certified license, there is a way to see that there will not again happen that thing which happened in the Morro Castle case, where the second officer who was in command had his license taken away from him and calmly restored again in 3 months, which certainly was not good judgment.

There is a provision for the inspection of plans and specifications of vessels to determine their seaworthiness. I think those points cover the bill. It has no relation to seamen or sailors.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this bill was reported by the committee on the 23d of August. It embraces 16 pages.

Mr. COPELAND. Please do not misunderstand the time of reporting. This is a matter we have had for several months before the committee investigating the Morro Castle disaster. The reason why it was not reported earlier was because we had no thought at all that the bill could pass the House, but when it passed the House then we thought it desirable to have it passed by the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not criticizing the Senator from New York or any other member of the Committee on Commerce, but here is a bill of 16 pages which the Senator asks us to consider. Not a single amendment has been proposed by the Senate committee. While it may have an entirely meritorious purpose, and I assume it has, nevertheless I believe that at this late stage in the proceedings, when we are about to adjourn, it is unfair to ask the Senate to enact legislation of this importance. Therefore, Mr. President, I am constrained to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me make one more appeal to the Senator from Wisconsin. This is really a matter of great concern to us. The reason why no amendments are offered is because we have a technical committee at work which will suggest in our January report such additional changes as may be needed. The Steamboat Inspection Service take the view that this legislation ought to be enacted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has me at a complete disadvantage because I have had no opportunity to consider the bill at all. It may be meritorious in every line and sentence, but in this late stage of the proceedings of the Senate I submit it is unfair to ask us to pass a 16-page bill by unanimous consent.

While I do not desire to reflect upon the committee or any member of it, if the measure is as meritorious as the Senator contends, it should have had an earlier report and we should have more time to consider it. I am entirely in agreement with the Senator. I am not captious in my objection, but I do not think, in the present parliamentary situation, that I am being unreasonable in asking, especially in view of the Senator's statement that further reports are to be made from the technical committee, that it should go over until the next session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

WILLIAM J. RYAN, CHAPLAIN, UNITED STATES ARMY

Mr. ROBINSON. On behalf of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], I ask for the present consideration of House bill 1912, Calendar No. 1511, for the relief of William J. Ryan, chaplain, United States Army. The claim is only for $225.75, and the record shows that the claim has been approved by the War Department. It is for a personal injury incurred by the claimant by reason of an automobile accident, the automobile being operated by an officer or agent of the Government of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTIONS REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate,

I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolutions numbered 192, 185, 189, 175, 180, 114, 173, and 199, and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The clerk will state the resolutions for which the Senator from South Carolina requests consideration.

HATTIE L. BUTLER

The resolution (S. Res. 192), submitted by Mr. McNARY on August 19, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1935, to Hattie L. Butler, widow of Philip H. Butler, late an employee of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EXPENDITURES BY THE GOVERNMENT FOR COTTON COOPERATIVES

The resolution (S. Res. 185), submitted by Mr. McKELLAR on August 14, 1935, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, reported by that committee on August 15, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the expenditures by the Federal Government for cotton cooperatives and their losses heretofore sustained. The committee shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents, to administer oaths, to take testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words, and the expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $1,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

The resolution (S. Res. 189) submitted by Mr. CONNALLY on August 16, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 111, agreed to January 19, 1934, authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

INSPECTION OF NAVY YARDS, ETC.

The resolution (S. Res. 175) submitted by Mr. TRAMMELL on July 30, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof duly appointed by the chairman of the committee, and the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of naval appropriations, are hereby authorized to visit, for the purposes of inspection, United States navy yards, air stations, and other naval activities, the expenses incurred in pursuance thereof, not to exceed $5,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

REIMBURSEMENT TO SENATOR GEORGE

The resolution (S. Res. 180) submitted by Mr. GEORGE on August 8, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for expenses of inquiries and investigations, fiscal year 1935, contingent expenses of the Senate, the sum of $400, to Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE, Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as reimbursement for necessary expenses incurred incident to certain election contests which have been pending before said committee.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL

The resolution (S. Res. 114) submitted by Mr. BULKLEY on April 4, 1935, referred to the Committee on Manufactures, reported from that committee on August 14, and this day reported by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was considered, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the desirability of establishing a national economic council and to make recommendations with respect to the functions and duties which might be assigned to such council. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this resolution. We have had a number of economic councils, and a number of them are existing today under Executive authority. I wonder what additional economic council is desired.

Mr. BYRNES. This resolution was introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], who is familiar with the purposes of it; and I ask him to explain it.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is simply to study the proposition. The resolution was reported from the committee without a dissenting vote. I hope the Senator will not object to it.

Mr. KING. By whom is the study to be made?

Mr. BULKLEY. By the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
